SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1933

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 10, 1933)

The Senate met at 11.30 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 14562) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the approval of the Journal of February 3 and 4, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 14562) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

SENATOR FROM MISSOURI

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] took the oath of office a day or two ago by unanimous consent of the Senate. At the time that action was taken it was announced by the Governor of Missouri that Mr. CLARK had been appointed to fill the unexpired term occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Hawes, and it was stated that the credentials were in the mail.

I now present the credentials, and ask that they be filed and made of record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let them be read.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
STATE OF MISSOURI,
Jefferson City, February 3, 1933.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that, pursuant to the power vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Missouri, I, Guy B. Park, the governor of said State, do hereby appoint BENNETT C. CLARK a Senator from said State to fill the vacancy in the Senate of the United States caused by the resignation of Harry B. Hawes.

Witness: His excellency our Gov. Guy B. Park and our seal hereto affixed at Jefferson City, Mo., this 3d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1933.

GUY B. PARK, Governor.

[SEAL.]

DWIGHT H. BROWN,
Secretary of State.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on behalf of the minority I ask that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] be assigned to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I now request that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] be assigned to the following committees: Commerce, Interstate Commerce, Territories and Insular Affairs, and Interoceanic Canals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution relating to congressional action on agricultural relief

Whereas farm prices in December, collectively, were back to the low levels of June, after a slight upward swing in the summer and early fall, and in this month were only 52 per cent of the prewar prices and from 15 to 25 per cent lower than farm prices a year ago; and

Whereas at such low prices it is utterly impossible for farmers to meet insurance, interest, and taxes, to say nothing of their entire cost of production; and

Whereas a continuation of these conditions will result not only in depriving the majority of farmers of their farms and their life savings but will make impossible any substantial improvement in general economic conditions and will operate to make the situation progressively worse, endangering the Government, and threatening the destruction of our entire social order: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to adopt the following measures for agricultural relief:

(1) The farm allotment bill which has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending before the United States Senate.

(2) The Frazier bill, or some similar measure to refinance the farmers at a low rate of interest.

(3) To moderately increase the currency, with the end in view of relieving mortgagors and other debtors from having to repay, in terms of purchasing power, a great deal more than they borrowed.

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to President Hoover, President-elect Roosevelt, both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Representative and Senator from Wisconsin.

THOS. J. O'MALLEY,
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
CORNELIUS YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution memoralizing the Congress of the United States to propose an amendment to the Constitution repealing the eighteenth amendment and to promptly legalize the manufacture and sale of beer

Whereas both the Democratic and Republican national platforms of 1932 promised submission of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States repealing the eighteenth amendment, and it is within the power of Congress to modify the Volstead Act so as to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer even before the Constitution; and

Whereas such legislation would give employment directly to many thousands of workmen now unemployed and would benefit all legitimate industries, and thus prove a stimulus to the return of prosperity: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly, the senate concurring, That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to promptly pass an amendment to the Constitution repealing the eighteenth amendment, and also to enact legislation modifying the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

THOS. J. O'MALLEY,
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
CORNELIUS YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

House Resolution 2

Hon. CARL HAYDEN, HENRY F. ASHURST, and LEWIS DOUGLAS,

Whereas the United States Treasury Department has called for bids for the construction of post-office buildings in the cities of Yuma and Phoenix, Ariz., with alternate specifications of tufa stone or terra cotta for the facing of said buildings; and

Whereas tufa stone is produced and manufactured within the State of Arizona, giving employment to local labor; and no plants exist within the State for the manufacture or production of terra cotta: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the house of representatives of the eleventh legislature does express its desire to the Members of Congress from the State of Arizona that they use every assistance to procure the acceptance of bids upon the buildings aforesaid with the specification of tufa stone, that more employment may be provided for Arizona citizens.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH presented a resolution adopted by the Montgomery County (Md.) Chapter of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, protesting against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution or the repeal or modification of the Volstead Act, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented an open letter to Congress signed by Rev. Alvin T. Perkins, of the temperance committee, Methodist Episcopal churches, of the Cumberland district of Maryland and the Piedmont and Keyser districts of West Virginia, protesting against the passage of legislation to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer, and favoring the adoption of ways and means for the relief of the unemployed, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the adoption by Congress of a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution repealing the eighteenth amendment thereto, and also to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate to-day by the Vice President.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the passage of the so-called farm allotment bill, the Frazier farm relief bill, and also "to moderately increase the currency with the end in view of relieving mortgagors and other debtors from having to repay, in terms of purchasing power, a great deal more than they borrowed," which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate to-day by the Vice President.)

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the Williamstown Local of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), the Carroll Local, Chautauqua County, of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), and the Progressive Local of the Dairymen's League, assembled in Onondaga County, all in the State of New York, favoring the passage of measures to inflate the gold currency so as to increase commodity prices, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by grape growers of Ontario County, N. Y., protesting against the imposition of a tax on grape juice, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the States of New York and New Jersey, praying for the passage of legislation to regulate and supervise the motion-picture industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Arthur C. Mayer Post, No. 570, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the making of adequate appropriations for the benefit of war veterans, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Francis J. Tarry, jr., and sundry citizens, all of Oneida, N. Y., praying for the revaluation of the gold ounce, the decentralization of wealth, the elimination and curtailment of "mass-productionism abuses" and group banking, and the reorganization and abridgment of governmental bureaucracy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Middlesex, N. Y., protesting against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution or the repeal or modification of the national prohibition law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of Rev. Claude E. Eldridge, pastor of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church, and members of the congregation, of Syracuse, N. Y., remonstrating against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution or the repeal or modification of the national prohibition law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ODDIE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Senate Joint Resolution No. 8—Memorial to Congress

The Legislature of the State of Nevada hereby respectfully represents that—

Whereas owing to the suspension of 15 banks in the State of Nevada of a total of 26 doing business in this State, such closed banks holding as deposits the school money of the State and 12 out of 17 counties, approximately 700 teachers in Nevada are not being paid their salaries, and within the next few weeks or days several of our high schools and various other schools will have to close for want of funds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of Nevada, That we earnestly beseech Congress to adopt the Oddie amendment to the reconstruction finance act whereby money can be loaned to schools;

Resolved, That the preceeding paragraphs of this memorial be transmitted by air mail to the members of the Nevada delegation at Washington, the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

W. F. DRESSLER,

INDORSEMENT OF GEORGE RUSSELL, JR., AS SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. ODDIE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada indorsing George Russell, jr., of Elko, Nev., for the position of Secretary of the Interior in the incoming administration, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, as follows:

Assembly joint resolution recommending the selection of George Russell, jr., of Nevada, for the position of the Secretary of the Interior.

Whereas the State of Nevada has a greater proportion of public land than any other State, and is therefore vitally interested in the administration of the Department of the Interior; and

Whereas we are naturally desirous of securing the selection of a Secretary of the Interior who will have an intimate knowledge of our conditions and of the West in general, in addition to other qualifications, such as ability, training, and experience, for handling intelligently and wisely the present and prospective problems confronting that member of the Cabinet; and

Whereas George Russell, jr., of Elko, Nev., has had an experience of more than 30 years in the very activities and character of business that has brought him in immediate contact with the more important problems concerning land and livestock conditions that would be an important item in the administration of the office of the Department of the Interior; and

Whereas said George Russell, jr., by reason of his peculiar fitness and his practical experience, has gained a far-reaching reputation of ability and integrity: Now, therefore, we, the Legislature of the State of Nevada, unqualifiedly indorse George Russell, jr., of Elko, Nev., for said appointment; and it is

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of Nevada, That George Russell, jr., of Elko, Nev., be, and he is, recommended to the earnest consideration of President-elect Roosevelt as a competent and suitable person to be appointed as Secretary of the Interior of the United States; and it is further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, under the seal of the State of Nevada, be transmitted to President-elect Roosevelt, to each of our Senators in the United States Senate, and to our Congressman elect.

MORLEY GRISWOLD,

INTERNATIONAL BOARD OF MONEY VALUE CONTROL

Mr. FLETCHER presented a communication relative to an international board of money value control, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN INTERNATIONAL BOARD OF MONEY VALUE CONTROL

Communication and transportation facilities have become so simplified that all the countries of the world are now next-door neighbors. The prosperity of each depends upon the prosperity of all. No country can live successfully within itself in this advanced age. Our international business relations are now so entwined that it compels us to meet on common ground and work in unity for the benefit of all.

While many international problems have been successfully negotiated to the betterment of the world, yet we are now in serious distress, through the lack of a uniform and stable monetary system. Unstable money is disastrous to credit and business in general. Soaring prices create a speculative market and lead to hazardous gambling. Falling prices destroy credit and turn a legitimate profit in business into an overwhelming loss, and finally lead to world-wide depression.

The whole world is asking for a stable medium of exchange. It is not so much a question of which commodity we shall use as a standard of money value, as it is which commodity can be best controlled. Any commodity can be successfully used as a standard of money value if its market value can be controlled and held stable in comparison with the average price of commodities. The majority sentiment of the leading countries of the world seems to favor gold, owing to its value in comparison to its bulk.

Gold is a product of many countries, and is used in every country for some purpose. Therefore, to make it a successful and stable standard of money value, an international board of money value control should be created, with full authority over the marketing and distributing of the entire world supply and production. The duty of this board should be to divert to the commercial market a sufficient supply of gold to hold its market value normal in comparison with the average price of commodities, and use the surplus above this amount for monetary purposes. This monetary gold should be allotted to the several countries for their respective reserves, each country receiving in proportion to its volume of business. This would make it necessary for each country to supplement its reserve with silver on a gold basis value.

During the last 18 years the average yearly world production of gold has been a trifle under $400,000,000, and seven dollars out of every eight of this production has been used for monetary purposes. Using so much gold for monetary purposes has drawn too heavily upon the commercial market, thus leaving a shortage in the supply of gold for the manufactures and arts. Hence its value has been inflated in comparison with the average price of commodities. This shortage of gold on the commercial market has created a situation whereby it requires twice as much of the average commodity to purchase 23.22 grains of pure gold, or $1, as it did in 1926.

This redistribution of gold would require the United States and France to exchange a portion of their gold, now held in reserve, for silver, on a gold-basis value. A sufficient amount of this monetary gold thus returned would be placed on the commercial market to deflate its market value to a point where it would raise the average price of commodities to the 1926 level. When this is accomplished it would be merely a question of keeping in balance the supply and demand of gold on the commercial market.

The purchasing power of every dollar that we create or issue, whether it be silver coin or paper currency, is based on the market value of 23.22 grains of pure gold. The market value of that 23.22 grains of pure gold is governed entirely by its supply and demand on the commercial market. Any gold stored in vaults, as monetary gold, reduces its supply on the commercial market, thus enhancing its value in comparison with the other commodities. Therefore, when gold is scarce on the commercial market, it takes a greater amount of average commodity to purchase a dollar, whether it be gold, silver coin, or paper currency. Issuing a greater number of paper dollars would not reduce their purchasing power, for each dollar is guaranteed by the Government to have the purchasing power of 23.22 grains of pure gold. Hence, to deflate the dollar, and thus raise commodity prices, we must reduce the value of gold on the commercial market.

The proposal submitted is as follows: When withdrawing gold from the commercial market for monetary purposes, a sufficient amount should be left on the commercial market to keep its supply and demand in balance with the average price of commodities, using silver bullion for any further necessary reserves.

Silver bullion, goods, or credits can be used to take care of trade balances. We are now looking forward to the time when reciprocal commercial relations will reduce trade balances to a minimum.

The suggestion that our dollar is dishonest is disputed by some of our legislators. An able Member of our Senate writes me as follows: "Many of us do not believe that there is anything dishonest about the dollar. It is just an economic condition that seems to be out of hand. The dollar now contains the same number of grains of gold as it did when everybody was complaining about the high cost of living. I do not know that there is anything I can do about it, except to continue to study the matter, in cooperation with my colleagues."

In reply we might say that there is the same number of pounds in a bushel of wheat as there has been for years, and the food value is the same, yet a farmer receives to-day less than half as many grains of gold, or money, its representative, as he received for a bushel of wheat in 1926. This honorable Member of the Senate states, as above, that he does not know that there is anything he can do about it. Let us look back and see what our Government, of which he is a part, has done in the past. Statistics tell us that since 1913 $7 of gold out of every $8 of the world production has been taken off the commercial market for monetary purposes and stored in the vaults, and that the United States Government has stored in its vaults $4 of gold for every single dollar of gold that has been produced in this country since 1913. That is, our Government has drawn from the commercial market and stored in vaults four times as much gold as this country has produced during this time. This is evident proof that gold, or the gold dollar, has been artificially inflated in value by governmental action.

If any of our legislators are still in doubt as to what to do, let me suggest that they simply reverse the process which has brought about this condition and return to the commercial market enough of this gold from the vaults to deflate its commercial market value to the normal or 1926 level, and thereby make the dollar honest. An artificially inflated dollar, without question, is dishonest, for it robs the holder of commodities and unfairly enriches the holder of money, or its equivalent. In the last three years it has made millions homeless, without any fault of their own. It has driven thousands of our worthy citizens to distraction and many lives have been sacrificed. Had our Government done with wheat as it has done with gold and stored in vaults seven bushels out of every eight produced, no one would be eating wheat bread to-day but the wealthy, for wheat bread would be in the luxury class.

It is absolutely unnecessary for Congress to delay action. It could immediately sell a portion of the gold in the reserve to the world's dealers in precious metals and purchase silver to replace it. Even if it required half of the gold in the reserve to deflate its market value to the desired level, it would certainly be much wiser to do this than to let our country slide over the brink into panic. No man knows to-day just how near we are to that brink.

C. W. McCORDIS.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. REED, from the Committee on Appropriations (being an ex officio member thereof), to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1155) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14416) to make the Federal gasoline tax effective until June 30, 1934, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1156) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 5584) to amend section 4 of the United States grain standards act of 1916 as relating to the use of the official grain standards of the United States on grain moved in interstate commerce from shipping points to destination points without official grade determination; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 5585) to amend an act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of New York to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge across the Hudson River at or near Catskill, Greene County, N. Y.," approved June 5, 1930, as supplemented by the act of April 15, 1932; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CLARK:

A bill (S. 5586) to amend the act of January 22, 1932 (Public Law No. 2, 72d Cong.) creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 5588) authorizing the acceptance of title to sites for public-building projects subject to the reservation of ore and mineral rights; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. THOMAS of Idaho:

A bill (S. 5589) amending an act of February 4, 1931 (46 Stat. L. 1061–1063) entitled "An act authorizing the construction of the Michaud division of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, Idaho, an appropriation therefor, and the completion of the project, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5590) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Jasper (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HULL:

A bill (S. 5591) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of farm mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 5592) providing for payment of $100 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNES submitted an amendment authorizing the Court of Claims, "under such rules as it may prescribe, to impose a fee in an amount not in excess of $10 to be fixed by the court for the filing of any petition in any case instituted after the enactment of this act, and for the hearing of any case before the court, a judge, or a commissioner thereof, pending at the time of the enactment of this act," and also authorizing that court to charge and collect certain other fees, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13520, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DILL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 14562, the legislative appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 5, line 15 (in the item for clerks to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce), after the figures "$2,220," to insert "additional clerk, $1,800," and on page 6, line 5 (in the item for clerks to the Senate Committee on Patents), after the figures "$3,900," to strike out "assistant clerk, $2,400" and insert "two assistant clerks at $2,400 each."

DAISYE L. TRAMMELL

Mr. FLETCHER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 347), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1932, contingent fund of the Senate, to Daisye L. Trammell, widow of Lee R. Trammell, late clerk in the office of Senator PARK TRAMMELL, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

GENEVIEVE M. COLWELL

Mr. KENDRICK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 348), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, fiscal year, 1932, contingent fund of the Senate, to Genevieve M. Colwell, widow of Eugene Colwell, late the assistant financial clerk of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on Saturday I announced that at the conclusion of the joint services to-day the Senate would return to its Chamber and continue the consideration of the unfinished business.

Inasmuch as we are not to leave here until 12 o'clock, I think it would be proper to go forward with the pending amendment.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment was passed over temporarily; so, if satisfactory to the Senate, the clerk will state the next amendment. The present occupant of the chair understands there was some agreement with regard to the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President. The agreement was to lay aside the pending amendment relating to the additional decrease in pay of 1⅓ per cent, and to proceed to the next one of the economy provisions recommended by the committee, which is the suspension of annual leave.

Section 103 is continued without change by the House bill. The committee's recommendation continues such suspension.

Mr. JOHNSON. On what page is the amendment, please?

Mr. McKELLAR. Where does the Senator read from?

Mr. BINGHAM. It will be found on page 73, section 6.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

SEC. 6. (a) Section 103 of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, shall be held applicable to the officers and employees of the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama, and to officers and employees of the United States (including enlisted personnel) holding official station outside the continental United States, only to the extent of depriving each of them of one month's leave of absence with pay during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to perfect that paragraph by adding, on line 20, after the words "section 103," the words "and 215".

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests that the word "section" should be made "sections." Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Chair.

The paragraph as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next amendment relates to absences from duty to be charged to furlough.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a query?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I follow what is being done now, the portion of the economy bill beginning at line 20, page 69, up to the amendment which has just been presented by the Senator beginning at line 20, page 73, has been passed over?

Mr. BINGHAM. It has been passed over; yes. The matter is taken up in the order in which it is printed in the report for purposes of clarity. At page 3 of the report the Senator will see this paragraph:

The committee recommendation in section 6 (b) inserts a new provision, applicable during the remainder of the fiscal year 1933 and during the fiscal year 1934, which makes certain that whenever an officer or employee who has not yet taken the full amount of his furlough is absent from duty such absence shall be considered a part of his furlough rather than an absence without pay in addition to absences attributable to furlough.

Mr. President, the original suggestion of the committee is on page 74 of the bill, lines 4 to 14; but on further consideration the committee believes that what we desire to do will be done better by the language which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say before it is read that the object of it is to make sure that there be no deduction of wages of substitutes in the Postal Service and other places where only a few days' work is provided during the course of the month.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 74, the committee proposes to strike out the committee amendment in lines 4 to 14, both inclusive, and to insert the following:

During the fiscal year 1934 deductions on account of legislative furlough shall be made each month from the compensation of each officer or employee subject to the furlough provisions of title 1 of part 2 of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, as continued by section 4 (a) of this act, at the rate of 8⅓ per cent per month regardless of the number of days of such furlough actually taken by such officer or employee in any month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the next section is "Application of reductions in compensation and retired pay to enlisted personnel."

Sections 104 and 106 of the economy act and the House bill continuing them excluded enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard from the reductions in compensation and retired pay. The amendments contained in section 4 (a) (2) of the committee recommendations apply such reductions to such enlisted personnel, subject to the general $1,000 exemption. The savings effected during the fiscal year 1934 by these reductions are estimated to be $7,633,161, of which approximately $5,500,000 is attributable to the reduction in active pay.

The amendment may be found on page 70, paragraph 2, lines 4 to 11.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, it was exactly because I wanted to ascertain if that particular matter had been eliminated or passed over temporarily that I made my inquiry a few moments ago of the Senator. Has the Senator returned from dealing with section 6, pages 73 and 74, back to 70?

Mr. BINGHAM. Section 6 has now been passed, and we now deal with the next subject in the report, of which the language is found on page 70, section 2, lines 4 to 11.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, it has been suggested to me that my confusion arises from the fact that I have been following the bill, while the Senator is following the report, which is not before me.

Mr. BINGHAM. On Saturday afternoon, in order to make it easier for Senators to follow the subject matter, since many of the provisions in the bill are rather complicated, we secured a unanimous-consent agreement that we would take them up in the way in which they are printed in the report.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask the Senator, because of the limited time, to pass this proposed amendment over until we come back from the duty that is ours to-day?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I ask the Chair how much time we have left?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are about nine minutes left.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, under the House bill, special-delivery messengers in the Postal Service are exempted from the definition of officers and employees in the economy act. The committee recommendation—section 4 (a) (3)—continues this exemption, but includes them within the pay-cut provisions and inserts a provision to the effect that the sum of $400—in lieu of a vehicle allowance—shall not be included in their compensation for the purpose of ascertaining whether their compensation is at a rate in excess of $1,000 and for the purpose of determining the rate of compensation upon which the reduction is to be based.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, the committee proposes to insert, beginning in line 12, the following:

(3) Section 104 (a) is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a semicolon and the following: "and (12) special-delivery messengers in the Postal Service"; and section 105 (d) (2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Special-delivery messengers in the Postal Service, but in the case of such messengers, the sum of $400 shall not be included in the calculation of the rate of their compensation for the purposes of this title."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next subject deals with compensation reductions, and in view of the fact that we have passed over the 1⅔ per cent increase, I will ask that this amendment be passed over also, and that we proceed next to the question of inapplicability of reductions in the case of certain employees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. BINGHAM. It will be found on page 73 of the bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, are we proceeding only with committee amendments now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the order.

Mr. BINGHAM. The proposed amendment will be found on page 73. The House bill provided that sections 101 to 105 of the economy act should not apply to any employee unless his aggregate compensation exceeded $83.33 per month, or to reduce his compensation below $83.33 per month. The committee recommendation—section 5—makes certain that this provision applies during any month of the fiscal year 1933 remaining after the enactment of the act, as well as during the fiscal year 1934, and provides that there shall be no carry-over from month to month for the purposes of the provision.

Senators will remember that there was a good deal of protest about reductions in pay of the men shoveling the snow here in the city of Washington, under the interpretation of the act by the comptroller.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is not following the bill in taking up the amendments?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President. We are now considering the provision on page 73. We are following the report paragraph by paragraph. Unanimous consent was obtained to do that because in the bill so many sections refer to several paragraphs, so that we must take the matter up by subjects in order that Senators may follow intelligently what we are doing. We are now on page 4 of the report, the fourth paragraph, pertaining to inapplicability of reductions in the case of certain employees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 73, line 6, where the committee proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. Effective the first day of the month next following the passage of this act, in the application of Title I of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, and section 4 of this act, in any case where the annual rate of compensation of any position is in excess of $1,000, the provisions reducing compensation shall not operate to reduce the total amount paid for any month to any incumbent of any such position unless the total amount earned by such incumbent in such month exceeds $83.33: Provided, That any such reduction made in any case where the total amount earned by any such incumbent in any month exceeds $83.33 shall not operate to reduce the total amount to be paid to such incumbent for such month to less than $83.33.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

MEMORIAL SERVICES IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The Senate, preceded by the secretary for the majority and the secretary for the minority, assistants of the Sergeant at Arms, the Secretary of the Senate, the Vice President, and the Chaplain of the Senate, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. the Senate returned to its Chamber, and the Vice President resumed the chair.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. BINGHAM obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I ask the Senator to yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Couzens | Keyes | Schuyler |
| Austin | Cutting | King | Sheppard |
| Bailey | Dale | La Follette | Shipstead |
| Bankhead | Davis | Lewis | Shortridge |
| Barbour | Dickinson | Logan | Smoot |
| Barkley | Dill | McGill | Steiwer |
| Bingham | Fess | McKellar | Swanson |
| Black | Fletcher | McNary | Thomas, Idaho |
| Blaine | Frazier | Metcalf | Townsend |
| Borah | George | Moses | Trammell |
| Bratton | Goldsborough | Neely | Tydings |
| Brookhart | Gore | Norbeck | Vandenberg |
| Bulkley | Grammer | Norris | Wagner |
| Bulow | Hale | Nye | Walcott |
| Byrnes | Harrison | Oddie | Walsh, Mass. |
| Capper | Hastings | Pittman | Walsh, Mont. |
| Caraway | Hatfield | Reed | Watson |
| Clark | Hayden | Reynolds | Wheeler |
| Connally | Hull | Robinson, Ark. | White |
| Coolidge | Johnson | Robinson, Ind. | |
| Copeland | Kean | Russell | |
| Costigan | Kendrick | Schall | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement made before we left for the joint memorial services, I will now ask that the clerk state the provision which the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] asked might be passed over, relating to application of reductions in compensation and retired pay to enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

(2) Section 104 (b) and section 106 are amended by striking out "(except enlisted)"; section 104 (b) is amended by striking out "does not include the active or retired pay of the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard; and "; and section 105 (d) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(8) The enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have already explained the proposal, but I will be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I address a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not recall the unanimous-consent agreement to which the Senator from Connecticut has referred. I have no objection to this amendment, but I do not know how all-inclusive that unanimous-consent agreement is.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is simply that the Senator from California asked that the matter might be passed over until after the memorial exercises had been concluded. That was agreed to by unanimous consent, and, instead of taking it up in the regular order, that amendment was passed over.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me make a further inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLAINE. That would change the unanimous-consent agreement to take up the various items in the order in which they are set forth in the report, as I understand?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; that agreement has not been changed. The items are to be considered in the order in which they are set forth in the report, except that when we came to the item on page 70, relating to reductions in compensation and retired pay of enlisted personnel, we passed that over at the request of the Senator from California and considered the next paragraph relating to special-delivery messengers.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the provision now about to be considered by the Senate affects the Army in some fashion. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was called down town on an important matter, and I told him if anything affecting the Army and Navy should come up that I would ask to have it go over during his absence. I make that request now of the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well; I have no objection to passing it over again.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, did the Senator say that the Senator from Pennsylvania was out of the city?

Mr. McNARY. No; he has been called down town for a few moments and will return about 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paragraph is passed over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the next item in order is at the bottom of page 70, but, as it also refers to the Army, I will ask that that be passed over similarly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may consider the paragraph on page 71, lines 7 to 12, inclusive, which takes care of the situation regarding judges. I think members of the bar will realize that we discovered that under the economy act we had done considerable injustice to some of the Justices of the Supreme Court and some of the other judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 71, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

(5) Section 106 is amended by striking out "except judges whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office" and inserting in lieu thereof "except judges, whose compensation, prior to retirement or resignation, could not, under the Constitution, have been diminished."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the effect of the change proposed?

Mr. BINGHAM. The effect of this change particularly relates to Justice Holmes of the Supreme Court, whose retired pay was cut in two. As a matter of fact, we can not retire the Justices of the Supreme Court. Therefore, it has been the custom when a Justice resigns, to continue his pay in full force; but as the economy bill was interpreted by the Attorney General, the salary of Justice Holmes was cut in two by Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under what clause?

Mr. BINGHAM. Because the economy law provided that no salary in the case of a judge should be more than $10,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. That the retired pay of any judge should not be more than that?

Mr. BINGHAM. We refer to it as "retired pay," but actually it cut his pay, which had been at the rate he was previously receiving of $20,000 a year to $10,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no objection to the amendment, but I want to make an inquiry of the Senator. When this bill was before the Senate originally, it carried a clause inviting the judges whose pay could not be reduced voluntarily to return to the Treasury certain amounts. I protested against that provision at the time on the ground that it was an effort to do indirectly what we did not have a right to do under the Constitution. I want to inquire now how much money has been returned to the Treasury under that voluntary clause?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator would not mind, we will reach that section in a few minutes. It is on page 5 of the report, in the middle of the page.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall withhold it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, do I understand that this amendment affects only the salary of Mr. Justice Holmes?

Mr. BINGHAM. And one or two of the judges whose pay, under the Constitution, may not be reduced. In a moment we will take up that amendment, on page 69.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to offer an amendment to the economy act including section 106. As I understand, if the amendment is not offered now, I will be excluded from offering it later on.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand, we have been taking up page 71, subsection (5). If the Senator desires to amend the committee proposal, this would be the proper time to do so. In order that the Senator may do so, I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby section 5, on page 71, was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be reconsidered, and the Senator from Wisconsin may offer his amendment now.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I did not care to interfere with the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut; but I desire to offer an amendment to that portion of the economy act that relates to section 106 of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933.

I now offer that amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does it relate to judges?

Mr. BLAINE. No; I would not care to insist that it applied to judges.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then the part of section 106 which the Senator desires to amend has been passed over pending the return of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Mr. BLAINE. That would include the Army and Navy and Marine Corps and Coast Guard and all the other officials mentioned in section 106?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes. The paragraph which we have under consideration merely concerns the second and third lines of section 106:

Except judges whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator proposes to strike that out?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President. If the Senator will look on page 71, he will see that we propose to insert in lieu thereof:

Except judges, whose compensation, prior to retirement or resignation, could not, under the Constitution, have been diminished.

Mr. BLAINE. I can prepare my amendment to fit in with that suggestion when section 106 is under discussion.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the Senator that we will take up section 106, so far as the rest of it is concerned, when the Senator from Pennsylvania returns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on subsection (5) on page 71.

The paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the next one is a similar provision connected with judges. It is on page 69, line 9, the words "(except subsection (a) thereof)," and line 7, "107 (except paragraph (5) of subsection (a) thereof)."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have the act before me; but this is quite an involved amendment. Will the Senator explain what that exception means? It will take some time to dig it out of the act. It refers to a number of subsections and paragraphs.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator repeat the proposed amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. The proposed amendment merely takes out of the economy act the salaries of judges whose compensation may not be reduced. In the economy act, section 107, paragraph (5) was continued by the House, and we have stricken out that provision. It is simply another technical amendment to carry out what I just explained in regard to the salaries of judges on the Federal bench.

Mr. BLAINE. That is subsection (5) of section 107 of the economy act?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, Mr. President.

The next paragraph deals with the Army and Navy, and under the agreement we will pass over that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next paragraph provides for continuing without change sections 108, 109, and 112, providing for remittances from constitutional officers. That is the section to which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] made reference a few moments ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On what page of the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is on page 69 of the bill, line 8, and the figure is "109," which is the paragraph to which the Senator from Texas objected. It refers to giving permission to the Treasury to receive from officers whose salary under the Constitution may not be reduced the return of part of their salary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator how many of the judges accepted the invitation to return money to the Treasury and how many ignored it, if he knows.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have no information in that regard. No request was made for any change. The House continued section 109. It merely permits them to cover into the Treasury any part of their compensation if they so desire.

Mr. CONNALLY. Section 109?

Mr. BINGHAM. Section 109 of the economy act.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that I am entirely in sympathy with all these methods of reducing expenditures and cutting salaries; but I suggested when this matter was before the Senate heretofore that the Constitution provides that the Congress may not reduce the compensation of certain judges. There is a philosophy behind that provision—in other words, that the Congress ought not to have either a method of coercion or a method of punishment over the courts. If that be true, I was protesting against undertaking to do the same thing indirectly and bringing pressure to bear on the judges of the courts by holding over them the threat of the displeasure of Congress and the unpopularity of the courts among the people by saying to them, "While we have not the power to reduce your salary, we are going to invite you to do so; and if you do not do it, you will be held up to public scorn and obloquy."

I think it was an unwise provision; but in view of the adoption of it, I think the committee ought to furnish the Senate with some information as to how it has been received and whether we have gotten any money from that source.

Mr. BINGHAM. So far as I know, I will say to the Senator, no money has been received from that source.

Mr. CONNALLY. So far as the Senator knows? Why continue it, then?

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator desire to have it stricken out?

Mr. FLETCHER. It will not do any harm. Let it stay.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall not object if the committee sees fit to continue it; but I think it was an unwise provision in the first place, because it is seeking indirectly to do what the Constitution expressly forbids the Congress to do.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next change is in regard to the impounding appropriations. The House did not continue section 110 of the economy act, which related to impounding savings, because the savings now in existence in the economy act were taken care of in the Budget estimates; but since the committee has recommended additional savings, it seems necessary to insert an impounding provision, and that will be found on page 73 of the bill, which I will ask the clerk to read. It is at the top of the page, section (d).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

(d) The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of the amendments made in subsection (a) of this section shall not be used for any purpose, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the paragraph.

The paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next section is on page 74, section 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read.

SEC. 7. The rate of pension or compensation of each person receiving pension or compensation at a rate in excess of $1,000 per annum is hereby reduced by 10 per cent with respect to pension or compensation accruing for all or any part of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934. Such reduction shall not operate to reduce any rate of pension or compensation to less than $1,000 per annum. In computing the rate of pension or compensation per annum, any pension received by any person by virtue of the entry of his name on the Army and Navy medal of honor roll shall not be counted. When used in this section, the term "compensation" shall include military and naval compensation for death or disability payable under the war-risk insurance act, as amended, the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, ch. 10; Supp. V, title 38, ch. 10), or any special act of Congress authorizing payment of such compensation, and the annuities authorized by the acts approved May 23, 1908 (35 Stat. 1325), February 28, 1929, as amended (45 Stat. 1409; 47 Stat. 471), and January 31, 1931 (46 Stat. 1974). When used in this section the term "pension" shall include any amount payable to any person by virtue of being placed on the pension rolls of the Veterans' Administration pursuant to any act of Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I merely desire to call attention to the amount of saving and the number of persons affected. The committee is quite aware that it applies to cases that merit our sympathy and our very great interest. At the same time, the committee believes that in accordance with the policy that all persons receiving from the Government more than $1,000 a year should accept a reduction in what they receive; the committee applies it also to beneficiaries affected by the Veterans' Administration, including a total of 73,629 persons, the amount of the saving being $8,570,932, in accordance with the estimate furnished us by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, as shown on page 6 of the report.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] desires to be heard on this proposition. Can it be passed over for the present, or shall I suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I opposed this amendment. I think we should have more Senators here before it is decided on.

Mr. BROOKHART. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Couzens | Keyes | Schuyler |
| Austin | Cutting | King | Sheppard |
| Bailey | Dale | La Follette | Shipstead |
| Bankhead | Davis | Lewis | Shortridge |
| Barbour | Dickinson | Logan | Smoot |
| Barkley | Dill | McGill | Steiwer |
| Bingham | Fess | McKellar | Swanson |
| Black | Fletcher | McNary | Thomas, Idaho |
| Blaine | Frazier | Metcalf | Townsend |
| Borah | George | Moses | Trammell |
| Bratton | Goldsborough | Neely | Tydings |
| Brookhart | Gore | Norbeck | Vandenberg |
| Bulkley | Grammer | Norris | Wagner |
| Bulow | Hale | Nye | Walcott |
| Byrnes | Harrison | Oddie | Walsh, Mass. |
| Capper | Hastings | Pittman | Walsh, Mont. |
| Caraway | Hatfield | Reed | Watson |
| Clark | Hayden | Reynolds | Wheeler |
| Connally | Hebert | Robinson, Ark. | White |
| Coolidge | Johnson | Robinson, Ind. | |
| Copeland | Kean | Russell | |
| Costigan | Kendrick | Schall | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. BROOKHART obtained the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business this evening, it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say at this time, since there have been a number of questions in regard to it, that I hope the Senate will be willing to stay in session on this bill until 6 o'clock this evening and will be willing to finish the bill to-morrow, even though it shall require a night session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that the amendment to this section of the bill being very important, I think that in justice to the disabled veterans this part of the measure ought to go over until we can secure a better attendance in the Senate. I feel certain that it is of sufficient importance to justify a full attendance of the Senate. Therefore, I suggest that we pass this amendment over. I propose to move to amend by striking out the entire section, and I am willing to make the motion now, if it is necessary, but I would like to have the discussion go over for a little while.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope no agreement will be made either to adjourn at 6 o'clock or at any other time until the pending bill shall have been passed. We have been considering the bill for quite a while, and it ought to be passed. This is really the first of the appropriation bills, and there are 10 more of them, I believe, including another deficiency bill. It is true we have passed one deficiency bill, appropriating about $3,000,000, but that is all. The consideration of the pending bill should be concluded, and concluded as soon as possible, and I hope the Senator from Connecticut will keep the Senate here until we pass the bill to-night. I think that ought to be done, and I think it can be done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, that is entirely agreeable to me; I have no objection to any procedure of that kind. I do not want to delay the consideration of the bill at all, but I do know that there are a number of Senators on the other side of the Chamber who are anxious to be heard in the discussion of this particular amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think they all ought to have an opportunity to be heard, but we ought to get through with this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The disabled veterans are interested in this section of the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Tennessee, I will say that the appropriations part of the pending bill has already been considered and passed on, but we are now considering a lot of general legislation, matters brought in which ought not to be attached to this bill at all, and which must be given some consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, of course they ought to have consideration, and I want the Senator and others to talk about them.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think section 7, which we have under consideration now, is an invasion of the province of the joint committee of the House and Senate to consider this kind of legislation, and I think the Senator from Tennessee agreed with me that was true. So it ought not to be brought into this bill.

The joint committee has been holding extensive hearings on this and kindred propositions. We just closed the hearings at 12 o'clock to-day, and are ready to begin work on our report. Then along comes this bill undermining all our work, taking the subject away from us and putting it in an appropriation bill where it does not belong anyway. So I think those having charge of the bill ought to consent to strike out the section now under consideration, and then we could proceed and conclude the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if a majority of the Senate desires to strike it out, of course, it can be stricken out. I think we ought to vote on it; and if we do want to strike it out, it can be done.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, it just occurred to me that the provision of the amendment requiring the 10 per cent reduction really might be said to depend on some of the other provisions in the bill, for instance, as to whether we are to adopt the 1⅔ per cent provision or not, and therefore I ask that this may go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the particular amendment under consideration will be passed over.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I inquire of the Chair what page we are now considering?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Page 74.

Mr. NORRIS. I have an amendment I want to offer on page 84; but, as I understand it, the amendment would not be in order at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not be in order now.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to say at this time that on account of the reference of the Sergeant at Arms affair to the Committee on the Judiciary, I have been unable to be in the Senate this morning, and I will probably be unable to be here the balance of the afternoon on account of some investigation I will necessarily have to make. I would not like to be absent on business of the Senate and have this page reached and passed on, and then be precluded from offering an amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I assure the Senator I will do my best to protect him, and if through fatigue I forget, I will ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to offer his amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in the event of the necessary or unexpected absence of myself when the Bratton amendment shall be reached, will the Senator also protect me?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly. The House bill continued for the fiscal year 1934 section 201, which prohibits automatic increases in compensation by reason of length of service or promotion. The committee recommends that this provision be not continued for the fiscal year 1934, and therefore, on page 69, the figures " 201 " have been omitted. No action is necessary to carry out the committee recommendation unless objection is made to the committee recommendation, when an amendment will be in order to insert the figures " 201."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I would like to have a little further explanation of this section 201 if the Senator from Connecticut is willing to give it.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator will realize that particularly in the Post Office Service there is a certain amount of automatic increase. Under the present economy law, section 201, there was a saving in the Post Office Department of $1,140,755 due to the abandoning of the automatic promotions. The committee believe that that was an unnecessary hardship and, therefore, move that section 201 be not continued for another year. This will cause an additional expense to the Government in nearly all of the departments amounting to about $4,000,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a further inquiry. I would like to know what the difference would be in the Army and Navy Departments?

Mr. BINGHAM. In the Navy Department it is a little more than $1,000,000 and in the War Department $1,100,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. Something over $2,000,000 all together.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to state to the Senator from Connecticut that the clerks are having a little difficulty in locating the place in the bill to which the Senator is referring. What is the particular provision which the Senator is now discussing?

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no amendment on this subject. The committee left out of the House bill the continuance of paragraph 201 of the economy act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That does not appear in the text?

Mr. BINGHAM. No. By leaving it out we take care of the automatic promotions in all of the departments and the District of Columbia, promotions which automatically come in pay to the firemen and policemen of the District of Columbia, the post-office clerks, members of the Army and Navy who under the pay act at the end of every five years have a certain increase in their pay. I may say there was no provision in the bill that has caused more suffering and hardship and injustice, in our opinion, than this section 201.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then no action is necessary?

Mr. BINGHAM. No.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the provision in general any more than where it has to do with the Army and Navy. It seems to me, if there is any chance of real reduction in our Budget, it is in the Army and Navy.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is not in the economy provision. These are the step-ups in pay periods.

Mr. FRAZIER. Cutting out the automatic increase in promotions would mean something over $2,000,000 of saving in the Army and Navy alone. I would like to see that provision left as it is. Regarding the postal employees and some of the other employees mentioned, perhaps there is some reason for it; but I can see no great hardship so far as the Army and Navy are concerned if the provision is continued another year.

Mr. BINGHAM. It has caused a great deal of hardship in the Army and the Navy because the pay acts of both Army and Navy imply that when a young lieutenant comes into the service he can get along on relatively very little. At the end of five years it is assumed he may desire to get married and there is a considerable step-up and increase in his pay. At the end of another five years another change takes place. The result of the economy act is that we have men in the Army and in the Navy who have been denied the very considerable increases which the Congress had determined they should get and which officers serving alongside of them receive. There are cases in the Navy where an officer who entered the academy in June received his pay increase and an officer who entered in July did not get it, making a difference of $900 in the pay of two members of the same class.

Mr. President, the next amendment is in section 202 of the economy act. The House bill continued section 202 of the economy act, which prohibited administrative promotions in the civil branch of the Government, but permitted the filling of a vacancy without the requirement contained in section 202, as now in force, that the President approve such case. The committee recommendation continues this provision of the economy act as now in force without change except that it inserts a provision which provides that the restoration of employees to their former grades or their advancement to intermediate grades following disciplinary reductions in compensation shall not be construed to be administrative promotions.

In the Post Office Department it seems it is sometimes necessary in disciplinary measures to reduce pay. That can be done and is generally done for a few days or at most for a few weeks. The Comptroller General ruled that the pay at the end of the period could not be increased back to what it was before. That seemed to the committee a great injustice. We did not intend to do any such thing. That is on page 71, paragraph 6. I move the adoption of that after it shall have been read by the clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 71, line 13, insert:

(6) The first sentence of section 202 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the restoration of employees to their former grades or their advancement to intermediate grades following reductions of compensation for disciplinary reasons shall not be construed to be administrative promotions for the purposes of this section."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the paragraph.

The paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, with regard to the filling of vacancies, the committee recommends no change and therefore there is no amendment proposed. The House bill did not continue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, section 203 of the economy act, which prohibited the filling of vacancies. The committee recommendation continues the section as in force during the fiscal year 1933. Therefore there is no amendment to be offered in that regard.

We next come to the question of retirement annuities of certain employees retired under section 204. Senators may have heard complaints that there were certain employees who were retired between the 1st of July and the 1st of August, 1932, who under the law could not receive their retirement pay for the few days in between those two dates. They were retired forcibly. We intended that they should be retired as of the 30th of June, but there being some 2,000 of them their names could not be prepared; and although a small amount of money is needed in addition, the committee believes they are entitled to their retirement annuity from the date of their separation from the service rather than from the first of the succeeding month. Therefore, on page 75, I move the adoption of section 8.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 75, section 8, following line 13:

SEC. 8. All officers and employees of the United States Government who had reached the retirement age prescribed for automatic separation from the service on or before July 1, 1932, and who were continued in active service for a period of less than 30 days subsequent to June 30, 1932, pursuant to an Executive order issued under authority of section 204 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, shall be regarded as having been retired and entitled to annuity beginning with the day following the date of separation from active service, instead of from August 1, 1932, and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to make payments accordingly from the civil service retirement and disability fund.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the paragraph.

The paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. DALE. I would like to ask if it is in order to offer individual amendments to this section?

Mr. BINGHAM. Under the agreement, it would not be in order. Does the Senator desire to amend some part of the section which has just been adopted?

Mr. DALE. I want to offer an amendment following line 13, on page 75.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That went over, and therefore it would not be in order at this time.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senate just adopted the provision relating to pay for those members, particularly in the Post Office Department, who did not receive their retirement pay from the date in July, about the 15th of July, until the 1st of August. The Senator's amendment will be in order later. It is not precluded by our having adopted the section.

Mr. DALE. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. BINGHAM. It may be added to it later.

The next item is in regard to travel allowances. Last year the committee recommended in the economy act that members of the Army and Navy be placed upon the same travel allowances as civilian employees. We believed we were saving money by doing that. Our attention was called by the Comptroller General to the fact that it actually caused an increase in expenditures, because officers in the Army and Navy while traveling have to pay their own subsistence and civilian employees do not. Therefore we desire to omit subsection (a) of section 206 of the economy act. That is on page 69, line 8, the figures "206," and, in line 9, the words "except subsection (a) thereof."

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the motion of the Senator?

Mr. BINGHAM. To adopt those words.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the paragraph offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment to the paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, on page 76, with regard to travel allowances for use of motor cars and motor cycles, in section 9 the committee recommends a reduction of the allowance for the use of automobiles by owners from 7 cents to 5 cents per mile and for motor cycles from 3 cents to 2 cents per mile. I ask the clerk to read section 9 on page 76.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 76:

SEC. 9. The allowance provided for in the act entitled "An act to permit payments for the operation of motor cycles and automobiles used for necessary travel on official business, on a mileage basis in lieu of actual operating expenses," approved February 14, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, sec. 73a), for travel ordered after the date of enactment of this act shall not exceed 2 cents per mile in the case of travel by motor cycle or 5 cents per mile in the case of travel by automobile.

Mr. BINGHAM. Senators may not understand clearly why we are apparently skipping about from place to place in the bill. It was explained last evening, in order that Senators might understand fully what was being done, that we would take up the matters in the order in which they are referred to in the report. That necessitates repeatedly going back to section 4 and adopting some small parts of it. I recognize it is a very unusual parliamentary procedure, but believe Senators appreciate that by adopting the amendments in such way they may know from action to action just exactly what provisions of the bill are being dealt with. I ask the adoption of section 9 on page 76.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read. The question is on agreeing to the section.

The section was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the next provision is on page 76, section 10, requiring officers and employees of the United States to travel by the lowest first-class rate rather than by some higher rate that they may think themselves entitled to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 76:

SEC. 10. Whenever by or under authority of law actual expenses for travel may be allowed to officers or employees of the United States, such allowances, in the case of travel ordered after the date of enactment of this act, shall not exceed the lowest first-class rate by the transportation facility used in such travel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the section.

The section was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next subject is on page 71, section 7, wherein section 211a of the act is amended to read that the reduction in the compensation for night work instead of being one-half shall only be one-third. It is true that this provision will increase expenditures by upwards of $300,000, but it seemed to the committee only fair to the night workers.

(7) section 211 (a) (2) is amended to read as follows:
"(2) Wherever by or under authority of law compensation for night work (other than overtime) is at a higher rate than for day work, such differential shall be reduced by one-third; "

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily detained on official business, and that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are necessarily out of the city.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether any consideration was given by the committee to the restoration of the differential in full?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes. The Senator will realize that a considerable amount of money is involved; even by changing it from one-half to one-third, an additional expense of $300,000 is involved. The committee finally decided unanimously that under the circumstances that was the best we could do.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask that the section be passed over temporarily, so that some inquiries may be made with respect to the difference between the one-third and the full restoration of the differential?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is familiar with this provision and can probably answer the Senator's inquiries.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I wish to make some inquiries of Senators who are not now in the Senate Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the paragraph may be temporarily passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the paragraph will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next paragraph has to do with the administrative furlough during the fiscal year 1934. The House bill did not continue section 216 of the economy act providing for administrative furloughs. Your committee recommends the continuance of that section, but adds an amendment which will be found on page 72, lines 1 to 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the top of page 72 it is proposed to insert the following:

(8) Section 216 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no employee under the classified civil service shall be furloughed under the provisions of this section for a total of more than 90 days during the fiscal year 1934, except after full and complete compliance with all the provisions of the civil service laws and regulations relating to dismissals from the civil service."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, it was brought to our attention that some of the officers of the Government in the operation of the economy act administered the furlough provision in a manner practically to deprive the employee of his employment in some cases, and amounting to as many as six months in other cases, and even more than that. The committee felt that that was virtually a dismissal, and, therefore, if the administrative furlough amounted to more than 90 days during the fiscal year, that the employee should have the same protection of the civil service law which is afforded in cases of dismissal; in other words, that there should be a full investigation, and the employee might appeal to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he believes that the committee's attitude concerning this section would be altered in any degree in case the so-called Bratton amendment, providing for a 5 per cent reduction in appropriations, were to be applied to all the departments, without any saving clause so far as its effect on salaries or furloughs is concerned?

Mr. BINGHAM. The attitude of the committee is that of an endeavor to protect the employees of the Government from arbitrary and prolonged furloughs, which is the case at present in some instances, and to require in case of any administrative furlough of more than 90 days that there shall be full and complete compliance with the civil service law relating to dismissals.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, this amendment to this bill will continue in force section 216 of the original economy act with the addition of the proviso contained in the amendment. The question I am seeking to raise is this: If the so-called Bratton amendment should be adopted, giving the departmental heads the right to reduce pay 5 per cent in addition to the reduction already in operation, should not the time for which a furlough may be ordered, without review, be shortened? In other words, if the 5 per cent cut, in addition to the one already in force, is to apply, and the heads of the department are to have discretion in the matter, it seems to me that the period should be shortened from 90 days to some lesser length of time, because otherwise very long furloughs, 90 days, for example, would be used as a means of achieving the cuts in salary. Does the Senator know whether the committee has given any consideration to that phase or aspect of the matter?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the committee considered the question as to what character of furloughs, in point of time, would make it advisable for an appeal to be taken to the Civil Service Commission, and in the committee's opinion, a furlough of 90 days was sufficiently severe to require an appeal; but if the Senator thinks an appeal should be allowed at the end of 60 days, I shall not oppose such an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the shortening of the period would be very wise. The fact came before the committee that some employees had been furloughed for as long as eight months, and were still furloughed. We thought that that was entirely improper; that a limit ought to be fixed, and we fixed the period, acting according to our best judgment, at 90 days. If the Senator from Wisconsin desires that it be fixed at 60 days, I see no objection at all to that.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not know I had the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, with reference to this 90-day period, I simply want to suggest this: That there are some places where it seemed to us a turnover should be forced. I am fearful that if we cut the period down too much the result may be to disorganize the efficiency of the service. It is only in a few cases where even a 60-day furlough will be needed. But we did find that in certain departments they were furloughing some persons and letting other personnel in the same bureau stay on continuously with no furlough.

The theory here is if anyone is furloughed 90 days, that that shall be the maximum. I am afraid if we shorten it too much we will have serious complications in the turnover so far as personnel in some bureaus is concerned. I see no objection to the suggestion other than that phase of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, it was the idea of the committee to diffuse the furloughs as much as possible, if they were necessary, and while the committee has fixed it at three months, I am rather inclined to think it could be worked out on a 60-day basis, and I have no objection to that, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I should like to make one further suggestion. The Bratton amendment requiring a further reduction of 5 per cent, if it is to be made to apply generally to the departments, will impose the necessity of a provision of this kind, and that must be taken into consideration in the matter of whether or not they could comply with the provision with a 60-day furlough.

The purpose of the committee was to force a turnover and not let one group have all the pay and another group have all the furloughs. I think before the committee could consent to a reduction of the time that we ought to ask some of those in authority to find out whether or not it would disorganize the service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, just a moment. If I understood the Senator from Iowa correctly, he thinks this is a limitation on the time for which administrative furloughs might be made. There is no such limitation, of course, and I see the Senator so understands it. It is merely that if a long administrative furlough is used, the clerk must have the same right of appeal as though he were about to be dismissed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Either way, the provision will go to conference and may be worked out there.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 72, line 5, I move to strike out "ninety" and insert "sixty."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the paragraph reported by the committee.

The amendment to the paragraph was agreed to.

The paragraph as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next subject, Mr. President, will be found in the report on page 8 in the paragraph headed "Limitation on transfer of appropriations for construction."

The House committee recommendation continues section 317, which is known as the 12 per cent interchange-of-appropriations provision. Our recommendation, however, adds the provision to be found on page 72, reading:

Provided further, That appropriations available for construction shall not be transferred hereunder for personal services.

As has been done in several departments. I ask that the paragraph may be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 72, line 9, it is proposed to insert:

(9) Section 317 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That appropriations available for construction shall not be transferred hereunder for personal services."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the paragraph.

The paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. The next paragraph to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is on page 76, section 11. It relates to the Saturday half holiday in veterans' homes and hospitals. It has been found, I will say in brief explanation, that in certain cases anæsthetists, nurses, and others whose services were needed in an emergency on Saturday afternoons, discovering that the law protected them so that they did not have to work on that afternoon, took a half holiday when they chose. It was believed wise to give the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs the privilege of saying whether or not such employees may secure a half holiday during the week on some day other than Saturday which will interfere the least with the administration of the homes and hospitals.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it will be remembered that on last Saturday I gave notice that I would move to strike out section 11, to be found on pages 76 and 77.

Mr. BINGHAM. The same result can be achieved, I will say to the Senator, by voting "no" on the amendment of the committee incorporating section 11.

Mr. ASHURST. Therefore, I shall not make the motion to strike out, because, as the Senator from Connecticut says, the result I seek may be reached by disagreeing to the proposed amendment.

Mr. President, in my judgment, the proposed section 11 is discriminatory. Employees in Veterans' Administration hospitals should have the same Saturday half holidays as do other employees of the Federal Government. Physicians, nurses, and attendants in Veterans' Administration hospitals who are treating and waiting on patients in Veterans' Administration hospitals should have the same opportunity to relax and to refresh themselves as do other Government employees. There should be no discrimination.

I read a letter from Mr. Walter P. Taylor, one of the vice presidents of the National Federation of Federal Employees, as follows:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES,
January 14, 1933.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: The "Saturday half holiday in veterans' homes" provision, which may deprive the employees at the veterans' hospitals of their Saturday half holiday, is, to my mind, objectionable. It climaxes a long train of burdens which have been piled upon Government employees generally, and Veterans' Administration employees in particular, as follows:

1. Quarters, subsistence, and laundry constitute a considerable burden on Veterans' Administration employees on a quarters, subsistence, and laundry contract basis.

The case may be cited of a young man entering the service of the dietetic department of one of the big hospitals in the Southwest. He is compelled to pay $25 per month for subsistence. He is married and his family live off the station. He is compelled to support his family on the balance of his pay, usually about $65 per month. The Veterans' Administration provision regarding quarters, subsistence, and laundry, on occasion even operated as a hindrance to getting married. If two quarters, subsistence, and laundry employees wish to get married, and there is no room for them on the station as a married couple, they must, of course, move off the station. The stand is taken that even so this young couple must pay for quarters, subsistence, and laundry as per their contract. The young couple is charged $12.50 each for room, $25 or $30 each for their subsistence, and $2.50 each for their laundry. A correspondent says: "It would seem that something might be done to stop this compulsory practice of forcing employees to pay for something they do not want, or may not use."

Another case: A janitor employed at one of the large hospitals has a wife and child. No family quarters being available at the hospital, this man must live in town. Nevertheless, a deduction for quarters, laundry, and subsistence is made from his salary. Hence he pays for a bed and bed space he never occupies, meals he never eats, and laundry he never has done. Out of his already meager income, he has to pay for the maintenance of two households, and can only occupy one.

Furthermore, all quarters, subsistence, and laundry employees in the Veterans' Administration have to pay cash for quarters, subsistence, and laundry while on furlough. The charge for quarters in the absence on furlough of their occupant is perhaps not unreasonable. The case is less clear for charging employees for meals they do not eat and laundry they do not have done.

It is obvious that these double deductions in the Veterans' Administration bear with unusual severity on the low-paid employees, mechanics, guards, orderlies, laundry workers, and others who constitute the majority of workers at the great veterans' hospitals. In one case the death of a parent made it necessary for one of the employees to be absent to care for the burial. This occurred early in the year, prior to accumulation of furlough time. Quarters, subsistence, and laundry deductions were made in toto, however, for time absent, and unaccrued furlough time was charged to salary. The result was that no salary was paid to this man for two consecutive pay periods of two weeks each.

2. The 8⅓ per cent compulsory furlough has borne with special severity on certain of these quarters, subsistence, and laundry employees in the Veterans' Administration.

Obviously, where quarters, subsistence, and laundry have borne down with unusual severity, as in the cases cited, the economy act has made things seem very much worse, and they actually are.

3. Dismissal of married persons has had a disheartening effect on the total income of certain Veterans' Bureau families.

4. Lack of authority to fill vacancies has been one of the most troublesome provisions of the economy act.

This has piled up work on the staff members, particularly in certain units.

5. Suspension of promotions has resulted in added duties and responsibilities with no increase in pay.

In one hospital an attendant has taken over the duties of a surgical assistant who recently had to resign as a result of the married-persons clause. But the attendant receives only a little more than half the pay formerly given the surgical assistant.

Add to all these inhibitions and added duties the deprivation of Saturday half holiday and a further 1⅔ per cent pay cut, and the feeling of the lower-paid employees can be readily imagined.

* * * * * * *

How can a tired, overworked personnel give adequate care to the sick? The piling up of burden upon burden is not the way to secure efficient care for the veterans.

We know your constituents in the two large veterans' hospitals in Arizona are deeply interested in this matter of the discriminatory deprivation of Saturday half holiday.

Very truly yours,

WALTER P. TAYLOR,
Fifth Vice President.

Mr. President, this letter contains the argument as I see it. Why discriminate against the personnel in the Veterans' Administration hospitals?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Am I correctly advised that, under the present practice, in emergencies the employees of the hospital do respond regularly to orders which call them into service on Saturdays outside of usual hours?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is my information that the physicians' attendants, nurses, and other personnel in the Veterans' Administration hospitals must and do hold themselves in readiness to respond at all times to an emergency call.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In other words, this amendment is merely an attempt to solidify in statutory form a practice which already prevails and is unnecessary, because present employees would undoubtedly ultimately be discharged if they failed to respond to such administrative orders?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true. I have visited a number of our Veterans' Administration hospitals, and I have never heard a complaint that the personnel, when a real emergency appeared, refused to serve at any time of the night or day, even during their holiday period. I think this section is a discrimination; and I should be glad to hear from some member of the committee why it was inserted.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the able Senator from Arizona a further question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is it not unfortunate at this time, when we are discussing the possibilities of the 6-day week, to have legislation of this sort enacted?

Mr. ASHURST. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, this provision was adopted at the suggestion and recommendation of a man for whom we all have the highest regard and respect—namely, General Hines.

It has come to my personal attention that on several occasions—I do not care to mention names, dates, or places—where operations needed to be performed on Saturday afternoon, certain individuals took advantage of the Saturday half holiday to say that they had to go off and have their holiday at that time. There was nothing in the law which required them to stay on. I presume in the majority of cases they do stay on. When they stay on, they decide that they will take the half holiday on some other day.

There are times in our hospitals—at the present time our hospitals are very greatly crowded—when it becomes extremely necessary for the administrator to require the services of certain individuals every afternoon in the week. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, as stated in lines 20 and 21, page 76, this only acts "where, in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, the public interest requires that such employees should be excepted from the provisions" of the half holiday act.

This provision is in the interest of the sick and the suffering, Mr. President, and for no other purpose. I regret very greatly to have anything else brought into this discussion, such as a general theory of hours and labor, because we adopted the provision after consulting with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in order that the sick and the suffering might not be denied necessary attention when, in his opinion, they needed it. That is all there is in this provision.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In the section under discussion, the provision in dispute reads, in part, that—

Seven hours shall constitute a workday on Saturday and labor in excess of four hours on Saturdays shall not entitle such employees to an equal shortening of the workday on some other day or to additional compensation therefor.

Is there not definite injustice done employees if they are not permitted at some time to offset this unusual and imposed labor, not necessarily immediately, but at some appropriate subsequent time?

Mr. BINGHAM. Of course that can be done, Mr. President. It is only where, in the discretion of the administrator, the public interest requires it, that we give this authority. The question is, Are we going to favor the employee who wants a half holiday, or are we going to favor the seriously sick persons who need attention?

That is the only question involved. There is no general change in the law. It is only when the public interest requires it. There are some employees who are always willing to grant this extra time when the public interest requires it, as the Senator from Arizona has said. There are other employees who put their own personal concerns first. There are not many of the latter; but in order that we may meet the emergency we inserted this provision, and I hope the Senator will not object to it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. If I have the floor, I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I submit that the Senator from Connecticut has not answered the inquiry addressed to him. By all means, we agree that the sick should be preferred. The essential question is whether the hardship imposed upon the employee is not in some way to be taken care of on some other working-day; and that question the Senator from Connecticut has not discussed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I can not make myself any plainer than I have done. The employees will get their half holiday whenever it can be arranged, except in cases where the public interest and emergency and a large number of patients make it impossible. The clause "where, in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs" applies to the whole paragraph. It is in case of an emergency, where there is an epidemic and the hospital is full of patients, and it is impossible to grant anybody a half holiday during a week or two weeks or three weeks that the provision would apply. Certainly the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is not going to say that the public interest requires that the employees go without their half holiday permanently, or except in case of great necessity.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Then, Mr. President, I submit that the language of the section as placed before the Senate does not achieve the end suggested by the Senator from Connecticut. It provides definitely that this extra work "shall not entitle such employees to an equal shortening of the workday on some other day or to additional compensation."

Mr. BINGHAM. That is only in the case of employees who are excepted from the provisions "in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs." If the Senator will read line 23, he will see that it applies only to them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. My suggestion is that it should not apply to them. They should have some compensating allowance of time at some other period in the year.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, having spoken once, I do not believe I have a right to speak again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the strict rule, the Senator would not have.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish to violate the rule, but I will ask for a minute to say that the word "not," in line 1 on page 77, should be stricken out.

If I may be indulged another minute, I do not question the good faith of the committee, in an effort to alleviate the suffering and to serve the sick, in seeking the enactment of a law and the enforcement of regulations such as will serve the suffering, the ill and disabled, but I do not think it is necessary to galvanize the rule into law, and I therefore support the view of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to section 11.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Costigan | Kean | Robinson, Ind. |
| Austin | Couzens | Kendrick | Russell |
| Bailey | Cutting | Keyes | Schall |
| Bankhead | Dale | King | Schuyler |
| Barbour | Davis | La Follette | Sheppard |
| Barkley | Dickinson | Lewis | Shipstead |
| Bingham | Dill | Logan | Shortridge |
| Black | Fess | McGill | Smoot |
| Blaine | Fletcher | McKellar | Steiwer |
| Borah | Frazier | McNary | Thomas, Idaho |
| Bratton | George | Metcalf | Townsend |
| Brookhart | Goldsborough | Moses | Trammell |
| Bulkley | Gore | Neely | Tydings |
| Bulow | Grammer | Norbeck | Vandenberg |
| Byrnes | Hale | Norris | Wagner |
| Capper | Harrison | Nye | Walcott |
| Caraway | Hastings | Oddie | Walsh, Mass. |
| Clark | Hatfield | Pittman | Walsh, Mont. |
| Connally | Hayden | Reed | Watson |
| Coolidge | Hull | Reynolds | Wheeler |
| Copeland | Johnson | Robinson, Ark. | White |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, having exhausted my time, I, of course, can not debate further; but I do move to strike out, on page 77, line 1, the word "not," and after the word "day" on the second line, on page 77, to strike out the words "or to additional compensation therefor."

Mr. NORRIS. How would it read if so amended?

Mr. ASHURST. It would read:

As to those employees excepted from the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931, seven hours shall constitute a workday on Saturday and labor in excess of four hours on Saturdays shall entitle such employees to an equal shortening of the workday on some other day.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have explained to the Senate that section 11 was inserted at the request of General Hines. It applies only where in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs it would be required, and it is intended to take care of an emergency situation, particularly epidemics. I hope the amendment may be adopted, as General Hines got the unanimous consent of the committee to recommend it, and I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Arizona will not be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I say a word first?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. As I understand it, the act of March 3, 1931, provided that employees might have Saturday afternoon off. Am I right about that, I ask the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BRATTON. That is my understanding.

Mr. COPELAND. In the hospitals it sometimes happens that there is an operation, or an acute emergency, where the nurses are needed on Saturday afternoon. I remember it was also called to our attention that in time of snowstorms, or of some other trouble on account of the elements, it might be necessary to have certain employees on duty on Saturday afternoon.

The Senator from Arizona suggests that the language be changed so that if there should be an occasion when a nurse or some other employee were needed on Saturday afternoon, then such nurse or employee could have the shortened workday some other day than Saturday. At the same time he proposes to strike out the provision about additional compensation therefor. I can not see any objection to that whatever.

I hope the amendment will prevail, and I think those of us who tried to work out a plan will be in agreement.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks for the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the paragraph.

The amendment to the paragraph was agreed to.

The paragraph as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the next amendment is in regard to assignments of Army, Navy, and Marine Corps officers to duty in the Philippines.

At present foreign service is limited to two years, and there is a very great amount of cost in travel and travel allowances for the officers and their families. The committee believed that, except in cases where the health of the officer or the public service required it, foreign service should be for four years instead of two years. Therefore, on page 77, section 12 has been amended to cover that matter, with the understanding that it will save about three-quarters of a million dollars annually.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I inquire whether this is one of the sections in which the Senator from Pennsylvania is interested?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think not.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, has it not been the impression, gained from medical testimony in years past, that more than two years' service in the Tropics is detrimental to the health not only of the men in the service but their wives?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I lived in the Tropics for 16 consecutive years, and it was not very detrimental to my health.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 77, line 4, section 12, the committee proposes to insert the following paragraph:

SEC. 12. Assignment of officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps to permanent duty in the Philippines, on the Asiatic station, or in China, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Panama Canal Zone shall be for not less than four years. No such officer shall be transferred to duty in the continental United States before the expiration of such period unless the health of such officer or the public interest requires such transfer, and the reason for the transfer shall be stated in the order directing such transfer.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I understand that when this amendment came before the committee, the understanding was that the Army and the Navy both would have a chance to be heard should this amendment be adopted and go to conference.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct. It was agreed that the conferees would hear spokesmen of the Army and the Navy on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the paragraph.

The paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the next amendment is in regard to a legal matter; and if I may have the attention of the Senator from South Carolina, I will ask him to explain it to the Senate. It is the provision on page 77, in section 13. I am sure the Senator's explanation will be much clearer to members of the bar than would my explanation.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from New Mexico desires to offer some amendment with reference to this particular section.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will read the report of the committee on the amendment. It is as follows:

The committee recommendation (sec. 13) amends the act of March 3, 1875, relating to the procedure for set-offs against the creditors of the United States. While that act apparently was intended to grant to judgment creditors rights superior to those enjoyed by other creditors of the United States, it contains language with respect to claims, as distinguished from judgments, that might be construed to deny the Government the right to apply toward liquidation of debts due such debtors the amounts due the United States. Such a construction might necessitate the bringing of a suit by the Government to avoid making full payment to a debtor of an amount otherwise due even if his indebtedness to the United States should be only $1 and clearly due, and the debtor might continue to demand and receive amounts becoming due him from the Government without paying his debt, unless the Government should go to the expense of bringing suit to reduce to judgment the amount of the debt. The amendments eliminate from the statute the language with respect to claims, limiting the application of the statute to judgment creditors.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the paragraph.

The paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. Is the next provision the one dealing with personnel of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the next amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. After conferring with other members of the committee, I desire to offer a substitute for that section, which I now send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from New Mexico offers the following as a substitute for section 14, commencing with line 22, page 78:

With a view to securing unformity of method, avoiding unnecessary duplications of records, and assuring economy of expenditures for such work, the Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate, develop, and install in the departments and independent establishments, including their field branches, uniform methods and forms for service records of employees, to be maintained by such departments and establishments.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Mexico whether, under the substitute, the Civil Service Commission would retain its own records?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. The substitute would not affect that phase of the work. It merely authorizes the Civil Service Commission to provide uniform records to be kept in the several departments. They will be kept by each department, and reported to the Civil Service Commission, just as at present. It is believed that simplicity will follow the adoption of a system of uniform records, and consequently economy. That is all the substitute would do. It would empower the Civil Service Commission to provide uniform records to be kept by the several departments.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, is the information correct which I have just received, indicating that the section as drafted by the committee originally would have created confusion in the Civil Service Commission's records?

Mr. BRATTON. At least, the Civil Service Commission believed so. Members of the commission talked with members of the committee, and, after going over the matter quite thoroughly, and at different times, it was the conclusion of the committee that for the present at least this step should be taken toward unifying the records to be kept by the several departments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator point out the exact difference between the language now in section 14 and the language he proposes?

Mr. BRATTON. I will read the language of the substitute.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will follow the language in the bill while the Senator reads.

Mr. BRATTON. The substitute reads as follows:

With a view to securing uniformity of method, avoiding unnecessary duplications of records, and assuring economy of expenditures for such work, the Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate, develop, and install in the departments and independent establishments, including their field branches, uniform methods and forms for service records of employees, to be maintained by such departments and establishments.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator explain how that would be a saving? It seems to me that it only increases the work. Why would it not be better to have the one record kept by the Civil Service Commission rather than have the different departments and bureaus build up a record of the services of the employees?

Mr. BRATTON. Because the departments are doing that now. Each employee works in some department; each department knows the character of his work and the efficiency of his service. The departments are keeping the records now, but the forms are not unified. Some are more detailed than others. It is the belief of the commission that by authorizing it to prescribe uniform records so that they will all be alike, it will simplify and expedite keeping the records and consequently effect economy.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator whether this will not increase the expenses of the Government and whether the amendment does not make for more expense rather than economy?

Mr. BRATTON. It does not because each department is keeping the records now, but they differ. Each department promulgates its own forms. Under this amendment the Civil Service Commission is authorized to unify the forms, but each department will keep its records hereafter just as it does now. However, they will then all be alike. It would simplify the method of keeping and the method of transmitting information to the Civil Service Commission. I have no doubt that the forms kept in the several departments will harmonize more perfectly with those kept in the commission itself and, therefore, will curtail the efforts and expedite the work and bring about economies.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. If this system is not put into effect and all were based on the Civil Service records, and their records were the only records, the departments could do away with a whole lot of work, could they not?

Mr. BRATTON. The Civil Service Commission could not possibly know what a thousand employees were doing in the Department of Commerce and another thousand in the Department of Agriculture, for instance. Of course, each department must keep the record of its own personnel and transmit information from those records to the Civil Service Commission for action in computing annuities and promotions, and for other purposes. Each department is keeping its own records now. It is impossible for the Civil Service Commission to do it unless we authorize the commission to put a staff here and a staff there and a staff yonder. That would duplicate effort and increase expense. This will economize instead of increasing expenses.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly.

Mr. DALE. I am very sorry to have to differ with my able friend from New Mexico.

Mr. BRATTON. I am more sorry to find myself at variance with the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DALE. I can not help feeling that the Senator from New Jersey has the proper view of the question and that it will increase the expense. I did not want the colloquy to go by without stating that I am sure from my own research that this will greatly increase the expense.

Mr. BRATTON. Does the Senator favor the Civil Service Commission keeping the records in the several departments?

Mr. DALE. I favor the Civil Service Commission keeping the records just as they keep them now. They have been a great many years building up the records which they now have and are now keeping.

Mr. BRATTON. That will be done hereafter just as it is done now except that the forms on which the records are kept may be changed in order that they will be the same in the several departments. That is the only difference the amendment would effect.

Mr. DALE. But the Civil Service Commission, if this provision is adopted as it stands in the bill now, would have to go to hundreds of different points.

Mr. BRATTON. Perhaps the Senator was not present when I offered a substitute for the section. We are now discussing a substitute which simply provides that the Civil Service Commission shall provide the forms on which the several departments shall keep the records of their personnel.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service [Mr. DALE] that he have an opportunity to study the substitute before offering his motion to strike out.

Mr. DALE. I know what the substitute is. It makes it necessary for the Civil Service Commission to communicate with many different departments and bureaus in order to get the information. I do not want to take the time now to discuss the matter further. I wish to offer an amendment, when I can offer it properly, to strike out the whole section.

Mr. BRATTON. Very well; I offer the substitute.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. As I understand, the departments now keep the records, but they are not uniform. The substitute does no more than to authorize and direct the Civil Service Commission to provide uniformity in the keeping of the records among the departments.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator has stated the situation accurately and completely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute, which will again be reported.

The Chief Clerk again reported the substitute of the Senator from New Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the section as amended.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Vermont desires to strike out the entire section as amended. What he desires can be achieved by having a vote on the present motion.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, do I understand now is the proper time to make my motion to strike out?

Mr. BINGHAM. A motion has been made to adopt section 14 as amended, and therefore what the Senator desires to achieve may be achieved by voting "nay."

Mr. DALE. I do not see how it can be achieved in that way at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the motion is agreed to, then section 14 is omitted from the bill.

Mr. DALE. Oh, no; not on the motion that is now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the section as amended by the substitute.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is section 14 as amended, and if that is agreed to we adopt section 14. If it is lost, then section 14 goes out of the bill.

Mr. DALE. If that is the parliamentary status——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If that motion is agreed to, a motion to strike out the whole paragraph would still be in order if the Senator from Vermont wants to offer it. The question is on agreeing to the section as amended.

The section as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when the Senate reconvened to-day after attending the joint services in the House and began consideration of the unfinished business I stated that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was called from the Chamber and would not return until the middle of the afternoon, and requested that no action be taken on any provision in the bill relating to the Army or the Navy. It was agreed to by all on the floor of the Senate at the time. I was called out a few moment ago, and I am advised that while I was absent section 12, containing a committee amendment, was agreed to as it appears on page 77. In view of the statement and in fairness to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who will return at half past 3, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which that amendment was adopted may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DALE. Is it proper now to submit a motion to strike out section 14?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. DALE. Then I submit that motion to strike out section 14 as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, the civil service system has been in operation for more than 50 years. During all that time its records have been kept by the Civil Service Commission. They were not of any great consequence, apparently, when the commission was organized half a century ago, but they have grown to be of immeasurable consequence as the system has become more and more involved. The commission itself states that the records are made necessary for the maintenance of the service, that a record of each employee is an essential part of applying the provisions of the act.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DALE. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator construe the substitute as a move to wipe out these records?

Mr. DALE. Why, yes. The substitute, I think, is better than the original section of the bill as reported by the committee, but I think the substitute has the same effect.

Mr. COUZENS. I am unable to read into the substitute any language which would destroy the already existing records of the Civil Service Commission. I am just as keenly interested as is the Senator from Vermont. I listened to the reading of it particularly. I can see nothing in the substitute which would in any way destroy the effect of the records the Civil Service Commission now has.

Mr. DALE. Of course, answering the Senator from Michigan, under the substitute the commission could keep up its records, but it would vastly increase its work. I have in mind that there are some 45 independent bureaus. It would also make it necessary to consult the records that are kept beyond the continental limits of the country; for instance, the records of some 40,000 employees in the service of the Navy.

Mr. COUZENS. How does the commission get those records now?

Mr. DALE. Those records are now obtained by direct contact of the commission with the individuals. They keep the record of each individual in the civil service; but as I understand the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], it would be necessary for the Civil Service Commission, if his proposal is agreed to, to take the records as they are furnished by the heads of the various bureaus.

Certainly it would not be fair to duplicate the work and have the Civil Service Commission doing the same work that some bureau does in the way of keeping these records. It would be necessary, under the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico, to go to the head of the bureau and ask him to give them his records. Therefore the Civil Service Commission would not have direct contact with the source of information. They would have to take it second-hand.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator mean that the Civil Service Commission agents now contact with each individual employee in all the 45 divisions of the Government?

Mr. DALE. Substantially that is what it amounts to. If the Senator would call up the Civil Service Commission for the record of some individual, he would find that that record would be given over the telephone on the day he called for it.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; but they obviously must have to get it from the department or the bureau, or else they must travel outside of continental United States to collect the information. Am I to understand that they do that?

Mr. DALE. No. This is the difference: If the Civil Service Commission had the record of a man first-hand and the Senator asked about his seniority, his experience, his military service, or a thousand other things about which he might wish to make inquiry, he would find that they have that information first-hand right there and that they could answer him immediately. Under this method they would have to take the information, for instance, from the head of the Veterans' Bureau as to the employee's military record; they would not have it first-hand.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield further to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DALE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand that the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico does not change that. In other words, the accumulated record of the employee would still be in the Civil Service Commission, but there would not be any change in the present arrangement.

Mr. DALE. The amendment must provide a change of some kind in the present arrangement, or the Senator from New Mexico would not be offering it.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. DALE. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. The difference is this. The several departments now keep their own records, and when the Civil Service Commission needs an up-to-date record of a given employee it gets it from the proper department, but such records are not uniform; they differ; each department sets up its own forms. This amendment simply authorizes the Civil Service Commission to provide uniform records of its own personnel to be maintained by each department. It would simplify the system; it would make for economy; it would expedite action. That is all the amendment seeks to do.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, does the Senator from New Mexico insist that the Civil Service Commission take the record of an individual employee as it is made up for him by the head of the bureau in which the individual is employed?

Mr. BRATTON. The Civil Service Commission will get the employee's service record from the department in which he works, because the commission can not get it from any other source. The commission must rely on the department in which an employee works for his record after he begins working in the department. So that information is conveyed to the Civil Service Commission, and it compiles its records and keeps them up-to-date from the information thus furnished. All this amendment does is to make all the records in the several departments alike.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, the Senator says the commission takes from that source a part of the employee's record, but in the case of seniority, for instance, the seniority a given employee has in relation to all other employees in the Civil Service, that record of course is not kept by the individual department.

Mr. BRATTON. And the amendment does not propose to change that. The Civil Service Commission will continue to get its information from the several departments, just as it now does, and from that information will keep the records in the office of the commission itself up to date. That will be done exactly in the same way under this amendment as it is now done. The only thing this amendment does is to unify the records kept by the several departments instead of having them kept in different ways.

Mr. DALE. May I ask the Senator from New Mexico how will his amendment simplify the keeping of these records?

Mr. BRATTON. Because the Civil Service Commission will provide a standard form so that all the records will be alike. I have no doubt that the records will conform more nearly to those of the Civil Service Commission itself, so that they will harmonize and they may be kept with more efficiency and perhaps with less effort.

Mr. DALE. Is it the sole purpose of this amendment to direct the Civil Service Commission to provide a standard form on which to keep these records?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; to provide a standard form on which the several departments shall keep their records.

Mr. DALE. That is the only purpose of the amendment?

Mr. BRATTON. That is the only purpose of the amendment.

Mr. DALE. The only purpose of the amendment, then, is to instruct the Civil Service Commission how they may obtain their information in the future?

Mr. BRATTON. No; the only purpose of the amendment is to authorize the Civil Service Commission to provide the form or forms upon which the several departments shall keep their records of civil-service employees.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DALE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I ask the Senator a question? Are we to understand that the Civil Service Commission has withdrawn its objection to section 14 and is now in favor of the pending substitute?

Mr. BRATTON. The Civil Service Commission drafted this proposed substitute at my request.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Mexico when they did that?

Mr. BRATTON. They did that soon after this bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a statement from Governor Campbell, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, very vigorously objecting to section 14 and giving the reasons for the objections.

Mr. DALE. What is the date of the communication?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It was written several days ago, I will say to the Senator, on January 13. I was trying to learn whether the Civil Service Commission was in favor of the substitute which the Senator now offers.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, this discussion is very interesting to me. When I took this matter up with the committee about all I could find out from the committee was that there was a general misunderstanding between the committee and the Civil Service Commission; that the commission told them they wanted one thing to-day, another thing to-morrow, and probably something else the day after to-morrow, and that was about all the basis there was for putting this section in the bill. Now, the Senator from New Mexico says that the Civil Service Commission has just asked him to present the proposed substitute, and the Senator from Indiana——

Mr. BRATTON. No; I did not say that. The Senator unintentionally misquotes me.

Mr. DALE. I did not intend to misquote the Senator.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator did it unintentionally.

Mr. DALE. I did misquote the Senator. He said that some time ago they had asked him——

Mr. BRATTON. No; the Senator still misquotes me. I said that the substitute was drafted by the Civil Service Commission. If the Senator wants to know the details I shall give them to him. In discussing with representatives of the Civil Service Commission their objection to section 14, as reported by the committee, I suggested the feasibility of this proposal. The representative of the commission said he thought the proposal would be good, and within two hours the amendment was drafted and sent to my office.

Mr. DALE. The material point I was trying to reach was this: That since then the Civil Service Commission has sent a protest to the Senator from Indiana, and it sent the same protest to me, at least I assume it is the same, for it looks the same.

Mr. BRATTON. But that letter was directed against the original committee text and not against the substitute. That, I fear, is the point of confusion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, if the Senator from Vermont will yield a moment longer, I suggest that this statement I hold in my hand, which is a copy of a protest drafted I presume by Governor Campbell, was aimed at section 14 as originally drafted.

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I know nothing of the substitute, and that is the reason I was asking the Senator from New Mexico for information on that subject. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont, if he has not seen it, that he glance at the substitute.

Mr. DALE. I have the protest; they sent a copy of it to me.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am referring to the substitute.

Mr. DALE. Just a moment. The Civil Service Commission claims that it is absolutely essential that they keep these records just as they are now keeping them. With all due respect to the Civil Service Commission, I am wondering if they know—and I say this to the Senator from Connecticut in particular—I am wondering if they know what they do want.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in reply to that suggestion, I should like to read a portion of a letter from Governor Campbell, the head of the Civil Service Commission, to the chairman of the Economy Committee in reply to a request as to how more money might be saved. It is to be found on page 8 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the legislative establishment appropriation bill for 1933:

> The large forces engaged on personnel work are needed chiefly because each department and establishment maintains complete service records of its employees.

Previously in the letter attention had been called to the fact that—

> The total salaries of persons engaged exclusively on personnel work in the several departments and establishments in Washington, D. C., exceed $800,000 a year. In addition, persons drawing a total of more than $600,000 per annum, many of whom are high-salaried officers, are assigned to personnel work a portion of their time. Thus personnel administration in the departmental service in Washington costs approximately $1,500,000 annually.

I read further from the letter:

> The large forces engaged on personnel work are needed chiefly because each department and establishment maintains complete service records of its employees. These records are duplicated in the office of the United States Civil Service Commission. The elimination of duplications in personnel records would make for a substantial saving in personnel administration.

And a little further on the letter reads:

> The commission recommends the enactment of legislation authorizing the transfer to its jurisdiction of the personnel work now performed in the several departments and establishments in Washington. Such legislation should provide that the personnel records be maintained in the several departments and establishments under the direction and authority of the commission; that the commission be empowered to designate for each department or office, as need is shown, a personnel representative and such assistants as may be necessary.

We adopted the suggestion made by the commission in so far as consolidation of the records is concerned, but placed it under the heads of the departments, giving the commission access to the consolidated records. Apparently that was not satisfactory and led to the letter referred to by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Vermont. Now, after conference with the commission or one member of it, the Senator from New Mexico has prepared an amendment, which merely provides for the keeping of uniform records in all the departments under the general direction and supervision of the Civil Service Commission. It would seem to me that that carries out very nearly the original recommendation made to the committee by the commission.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Vermont has expired. He has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to read him a letter received from the commission?

Mr. DALE. I will yield in just a moment. I should like to read at this point, in connection with what the Senator from Connecticut has said, a statement the commission made to me after all this took place:

> The commission deals with an army of employees in the competitive classified service whose advancement, retention, or retirement depends upon their records as kept. Without these records the commission could not function.

Mr. BINGHAM. But there is nothing in the amendment that does away with keeping the records.

Mr. DALE. There is no question about that; but certainly, if the amendment should be adopted it would require the commission to get its information from at least 45 sources within the United States.

Mr. BINGHAM. They do that now.

Mr. DALE. In part they do that now, but the records of the Civil Service Commission are absolutely independent of the other records. If one goes to the commission and says, "Such a bureau has such a record of a man," the reply will be made by the commission, "We do not care what records that bureau or department has of him; this is the record we have of him."

Such records have been kept for half a century; they have been built up from year to year as the system has advanced. More than that—and this is an element that we have not touched upon at all—when the retirement system was adopted a few years ago the records of all employees who are retired are kept by the Civil Service Commission. Who is going to keep those records? Where are they going to get their information if we break up this whole system?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may read a letter from the commission?

Mr. DALE. I have no objection to that; but, to be perfectly frank, I am in a mood that I do not care what the commission says, so far as I am personally concerned. However, I have no objection to the Senator reading what they say.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator apparently raised the question a while ago as to whether the commission had drawn the substitute and furnished it to me.

Mr. DALE. Oh, no; I did not question that at all. I think they probably did do that, but they drew it after they had one view before them, and they got another view since they drew it. I do not understand that at all.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has yielded to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FESS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BRATTON. This letter reads as follows. It is not dated, but it came to me some two or three weeks ago:

> May I not thank you for the friendly and sympathetic way in which you received our Mr. McAuliffe this morning. He explained to you the distress and difficulty which would result if section 14 to H. R. 13520, as proposed, should become law.
> I am deeply interested in the proposal submitted by the commission, but I understand from Mr. McAuliffe that it did not receive the approval of the Economy Committee. During your conversation with Mr. McAuliffe you suggested that a substitute be submitted for section 14 of H. R. 13520. I am inclosing herewith such a proposal. I may add that at the present time the commission has no authority to develop uniform methods and forms for service records of employees. If such authority is granted, the commission would be able to eliminate a good deal of the duplication in personnel records maintained by the several departments and establishments.

* * * * * * *

You might find it desirable to have available a substitute for the present section 14, and with this thought in mind I am inclosing the substitute as suggested by you.

With kind personal regards I am, sincerely yours,

JESSIE DELL, Commissioner.

The Senator will note that under the statement made in this letter the departments do keep their records now.

Mr. DALE. Oh, yes. There is no question about that.

Mr. BRATTON. And all this amendment does is to permit a standard form for keeping those records.

Mr. DALE. There is not anything to prohibit that standard form now.

Mr. BRATTON. The commissioner says that under the present law the commission has no authority to prescribe those uniform records.

Mr. DALE. I think the Senator from New Mexico will agree with me, with just one glance at it, that it would be rather preposterous for a man to say that he had not any authority to make these records uniform. There is nothing to prohibit their being made uniform. I do not know that there will be any advantage in their being made uniform; but to say that legislation is necessary to make them uniform is rather ridiculous. I do not mean on the part of the Senator from New Mexico, of course.

Mr. BRATTON. Suppose the several departments did not accept the forms furnished them. There is nothing to compel the departments to do that.

Mr. DALE. There is nothing under this proposal to compel the departments to accept them.

Mr. BRATTON. Oh, yes. If they are authorized to provide those forms to be kept in the several departments, that does become mandatory.

Mr. DALE. There might be some possible advantage in that. If there is something in this proposal that would make it mandatory on the bureaus to answer in a certain way, there might be some virtue in that.

Mr. BRATTON. I have no doubt that that is what the amendment does.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DALE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I was wondering whether the confusion did not arise out of the language of the original economy act, rather than that of the substitute.

Mr. DALE. I think it does.

Mr. FESS. Because I see that section 14 says:

Laws and regulations now in force providing for the keeping by the Civil Service Commission of personnel records of officers and employees of the several executive departments and independent establishments are hereby repealed.

That evidently would throw everything into repeal so far as the Civil Service Commission is concerned.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, so far I can not see any particular reason for this drastic departure on the part of the Senate in respect to the question that is before us. The Civil Service Commission has gone on for half a century building up these records, and nobody has shown here that the commission has intelligently, to say the least, asked for any change. The only reason for this change that I have been able to obtain since I have been on the floor is that perhaps it will have some compelling force or influence over some bureau to answer in a certain way.

Unless there is some broader reason, some greater occasion for this change, had we not better let it alone until we find out where we are? I know from my experience with the civil service that in any way to change these records is a very dangerous policy. Here are 400,000 people who are dependent upon the way these records are kept, and nobody knows what may come out of it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont further yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DALE. I do.

Mr. FESS. It is my opinion that if we have nothing to act upon except section 14 as written, that would be unwise, because all of this requirement is repealed, and then it is stated—and hereafter such records shall be kept by the several executive departments and independent establishments.

But these records may be available.

Mr. DALE. What have we to act on, may I ask the Senator from Ohio? He says, "If we have not anything else to act on." What are we acting on?

Mr. FESS. The substitute.

Mr. DALE. We are acting on a substitute that, it is perfectly evident to anybody who hears this discussion, the Senate knows nothing about. There are not any two men who agree on what we are doing with the substitute. When we are in a position where we do not know what we are doing, I think we had better let the matter alone as it is now.

Mr. FESS. I think there is some basis for the Senator's remark.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I move that section 14, as amended, be stricken from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DALE. I make the point that there is not a quorum present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Copeland | Kean | Robinson, Ind. |
| Austin | Costigan | Kendrick | Russell |
| Bailey | Couzens | Keyes | Schall |
| Bankhead | Cutting | King | Schuyler |
| Barbour | Dale | La Follette | Sheppard |
| Barkley | Davis | Lewis | Shipstead |
| Bingham | Dill | Logan | Smoot |
| Black | Fess | McGill | Steiwer |
| Blaine | Fletcher | McKellar | Tydings |
| Borah | Frazier | McNary | Vandenberg |
| Bratton | George | Metcalf | Wagner |
| Brookhart | Goldsborough | Moses | Walcott |
| Bulkley | Gore | Neely | Walsh, Mass. |
| Bulow | Grammer | Norbeck | Walsh, Mont. |
| Byrnes | Hale | Nye | Watson |
| Capper | Harrison | Oddie | Wheeler |
| Caraway | Hastings | Pittman | White |
| Clark | Hatfield | Reed | |
| Connally | Hayden | Reynolds | |
| Coolidge | Johnson | Robinson, Ark. | |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE], to strike out section 14, as amended.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have heard that during my temporary absence from the floor there was some discussion of the hour of adjournment.

I feel that the Senate ought to stay in session to-night and continue its work; and, so far as I am concerned, I am going to ask and urge that that be done.

I realize that it is sometimes inconvenient for Senators to stay here; but, as has already been pointed out, Senators leave the floor during the daytime. Controversial matters are passed over until their return. We make very little progress.

It is true we have made considerable progress on this bill to-day, but I think we ought to stay here and do the business of the country. I hope the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] and other Senators who are in charge of this bill will agree to that policy. Let us get this bill out of the way and get forward with the general work of the Senate.

I know there are a large number of Senators on the other side of the Chamber who are in sympathy with this policy, and I wish to say now that so far as I have any influence in this body we are going to speed up the work of this session. I am assured that the Senator from Oregon [Mr.

McNARY] is in sympathy with that proposal; and I hope we may demonstrate a capacity to act here, and diminish, as much as possible, irrelevant discussion.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, while I was out of the Chamber a short while ago a discussion was had on this matter, and I think some tentative agreement was made. I hope, however, that the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas can be carried out, and that the Senate will stay in session to-night. We will make much better progress if that is done, and will stand a good chance of getting through with this bill to-night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. REED. May the amendment be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is to strike out section 14, as amended.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I thought some Senator called for the yeas and nays on this amendment. If not, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I would like to have the Chair state to the Senate what the question is. The question, as stated by the Senator from Vermont, is to strike out. As I understand, the question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to adopt the section, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the motion is to strike out.

Mr. BINGHAM. An amendment to the section was adopted, and then the Senator from Vermont moved to strike out all of section 14, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], who is absent on official business of the Senate. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). In the absence of my general pair, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this matter I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BARKLEY. On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], but I understand that if present the Senator from Iowa would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER. On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], who is absent from Washington on account of a death in his family. I am not informed as to how that Senator would vote if he were present, and therefore I am not at liberty to vote.

Mr. BAILEY (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that my pair, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], is not present, and I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]; and

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—39

So the amendment was agreed to.

CAMPAIGNING AGAINST GOVERNMENT WORKERS

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the American Federationist, entitled "Campaigning Against Government Workers," by Mr. Richard W. Hogue.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAMPAIGNING AGAINST GOVERNMENT WORKERS

By Richard W. Hogue, director Independent Legislation Bureau

Government service offers no opportunity for getting rich. To the large majority it offers only a modest livelihood, while requiring the capable performance of continuous, important, and exacting duties. It would be difficult to parallel in the business world the record of honest, faithful, and competent service that characterizes the carrying on of the business of the Government as a whole. This is true despite the fact that such service carries no such hope of financial reward as exists in the business world.

These facts should be given their just weight in considering the fairness, as well as the effects, of further reductions in the salaries and wages of Federal workers. They serve to emphasize the warning of competent economists and others who share the position taken by the president of the University of Wisconsin. Said President Glenn Frank in an address to 3,000 farm men and women:

"There is much blindness, blundering, and sheer insincerity in the almost hysterical campaign against public expenditures now sweeping the Nation. * * * Real economy will mean national salvation; bogus economy will mean national suicide. Indiscriminate Budget slashing may set us back socially for a generation."

Let us examine the facts about taxes, Government expenses, and Federal wages and salaries.

Eighty per cent of all Federal workers are civil-service employees. This means that they come to their jobs prepared by training, tested by examination, and free from the fears and the rewards of political patronage. Of these, 20 per cent received less than $1,000 a year, while 55 per cent received less than $1,500, even before the pay cut of last year. The average salary of all the Federal workers amounts to about $1,400 a year.

The period of war-time prosperity created 20,000 new millionaires in the business world. How did it affect Federal Government workers? While commodity prices advanced 125 per cent from 1914 to 1920, Federal employees' salaries remained at the 1914 level. The relatively small bonus for 1917 to 1920 did not alter the salary level. During much of this period they did almost double duty. The cumulative loss to them and their families in these years has never been made up and never will be.

Two-thirds of all the government workers (including State and local) in the country are in the service and on the pay rolls of city, county, and State governments. Of the total cost of government, 70 per cent consists of the cost of local and State governments. In addition, about 9 per cent of the Federal Budget should be charged to the States, since it is spent on roads, harbors, buildings, flood control, and in other ways directly beneficial to States, counties, and towns. This leaves only 27 per cent to be charged to the Federal Government, of which less than one-fourth goes to salaries and wages.

Out of the budget of the Agricultural Department about 70 per cent goes to aid States in building public highways. The direct service rendered by this one department to States, counties, cities, and the general public can not be fully calculated. Take just two illustrations: The untold benefit of the cure for the human disease of hookworm and the benefit to farmers from the cure of animal diseases. The discovery and development of a serum by this department reduced the loss from cholera among hogs by $51,000,000. The direct benefits to farmers, the general public, and future generations that come from this single department of the Government can not be overestimated.

Only 10 per cent of Federal employees live in Washington. The salaries and wages of 90 per cent are spent in local and State communities. They are also taxed for the support of these communities. By reducing salaries still further you lower their purchasing power and reduce their tax-paying ability. You create a vicious circle that doesn't help the taxpayer, while it hurts the merchant and the general community.

What of the burden of military costs? What proportion of your taxes is consumed by war items in the Federal Budget?

Here is the crux of the whole subject of taxes so far as the Federal Government is concerned. Of the entire Federal Budget of four billion (which includes the post office deficit), over one billion interest and principal is paid out to owners of Liberty bonds and other Government securities, more than another billion goes to war veterans and beneficiaries, and over six hundred million to maintain military forces. That is, 72 per cent of the total 1932–33 Federal Budget is expended on war debts, war veterans, and war machinery.

Here then is the outstanding cause of the big Federal Budget. Add to this the fact that county, city, and State governments account for 70 per cent of all government costs, and the picture is complete.

The maintenance of the Federal Government does not constitute a tax burden on the general public. Far from it. Here are the facts. A part of the Government's support comes from the receipts of the post office, which is largely self-supporting. A considerable part (about 40 per cent) comes from internal revenue, customs, and miscellaneous revenue (such as tolls and profits of the Panama Canal). The largest percentage comes from income tax and profit taxes. About 97 per cent of the people pay no income tax. Real reduction of the tax burden of this 97 per cent can be obtained in only one way, through reduction of city, county, and State taxes.

These facts show that the claim that a further reduction in salaries and wages of Federal employees will reduce the taxes of the general public is without foundation. Yet the Members of Congress and the people at large are being bombarded with propaganda against the Federal Government and its employees. This propaganda is not only unfair to the Government but dangerous to the public. Its false representations and unsound claims should be met with the facts.

Banking, business, and industry have largely lost the confidence of the people. In the past 12 years 10,000 banks have failed. The great financial and business leaders have been helpless. They have appealed to the Government to save them and the country. It has responded by providing over $2,000,000,000, largely through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in this depression period.

The Government alone stands to-day between the American people and complete ruin. Loss of confidence in its work, its workers, and its protective and service agencies is fraught with grave danger. To be willing to lose this confidence without attempting to know the facts is inexcusable. It is far worse to seek to destroy the confidence of others through misrepresenting the facts, deliberately and for selfish ends.

The organized forces that oppose the progress of organized labor have a high appreciation of the value of internal strife and divided counsels in the ranks of the workers. Though often concealed from sight, their weapons for inflicting the disharmony that serves their purposes have wrought frequent and deep damage.

Every effort must be made to counteract the propaganda that produces suspicion, dissension, and division among those whose job is their capital as distinguished from those whose capital is their only job. This propaganda has always been used to widen the gulf between unorganized and organized workers. Nowhere has it been more effectively used than in fostering a sense of "distinction" among professional and "white-collar" workers and among the so-called intelligentsia. Fortunately the eyes of many of these have been opened by the stock-market collapse and the subsequent deflation of business and industrial leaders. They have seen the temple of big business collapse and its mighty gods become supplicants for colossal doles from the Government.

While seeking relief themselves they are attacking the body of Government employees in every conceivable way. The attack is being led by such arch antilabor reactionaries as Merle Thorpe, of the Nation's Business, and Colonel McCormick, of the Chicago Tribune. The latter has published a book under the alarming title "The Sacking of America," in which Federal employees are denounced as "weasels" and "office-holding tyrants." Not the least of their hopes is to divert the workers in general from a united demand for far-reaching reforms by arousing prejudice and envy against the group of workers in the service of the Government. By doing this they hope to obscure the main cause of the present plight of the country, the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of the few. Above all, they seek to sidetrack the growing demand for the removal of this cause.

Bankrupt farmers, unemployment, evictions, foreclosures, destitution, and despair among many millions—what are these compared with a free field for exploitation and the regaining of wealth and power by the few? They and their class must first be saved by the Government and then saved from the Government. Over $2,000,000,000 from the Government in the midst of the depression for the rehabilitation of banks and big business is not enough. They must be served further by being spared their just share of taxation. Aside from their evasion of existing tax laws in every conceivable way the laws themselves must be changed for their benefit.

One of the proposed changes is the shifting of taxes to the already overburdened general public. Another is the removal of Government control and regulation that they may be free to oppress the workers and gouge the public. They are even demanding the elimination of Government services essential to the protection, the health, and the living standards of the Nation. Another way is to reduce still further the wages of Federal employees and thus furnish an excuse for a general lowering of wages and living standards.

If they succeed in this, they can—and will—say to the workers of the country: "You can not expect industry to go beyond the example set by the United States Government. You can not accuse private business of exploitation when it is paying as much (no matter how little that is) as the Government itself is paying." They are trying to force the Government to set a lower standard in order to justify the lower standard they intend to impose. To this end they are seeking to use pressure on Congress by every group whom they can influence.

So much for the general situation. What are the actual facts about the cost of Government and the pay of its workers? What is the relation of these to the burden of taxation? What is their relation to the general good of the people as a whole?

What does the public good require? Surely not the deepening and prolonging of the depression through reducing still further the purchasing power of Federal workers. This would but serve to restrict trade and reduce employment still more with no correspondingly good effect on the state of the Treasury. It would be but a drop in the ocean, while working great personal hardship and reducing business activity to a lower level.

In normal times 80 per cent of the purchasing power that sustains the flow of trade comes from those with incomes of $5,000 or less. So long as this purchasing power remains in its present depleted state, the depression will continue. It would be aggravated rather than relieved by a further lowering of the salaries and wages of the 732,460 Federal employees.

To reduce the present modest livelihoods of Federal workers would not help the impoverished farmers and industrial workers. To add to the number of those with diminished resources would be to add to the causes that help maintain the depression. The remedy for existing conditions lies elsewhere. As Senator WAGNER puts it, "It is time that as a Nation we stopped going round in circles and set our minds to the fact that we must by heroic action restore every breadwinner to self-respecting employment." Not by further depletion and deflation but by constructive measures for restoring consumption and employment is the way out.

Nor would it be a wise or helpful thing to curtail Government services that are vital to the well-being of the people. To lower the efficiency of the Government at such a time as this would be false economy. With business and industry crippled and the resources of millions of people either completely exhausted or greatly reduced, the ability of the Government to serve the public should be maintained at its highest.

We fully recognize the need of wise economy. Duplication, waste, and inefficiency should be eliminated. We also recognize the dangers of a false economy. Its effects are always injurious. They are particularly so at a time like the present. If a community is suffering because the purchasing power of a majority of its members is very low, it is no help to that community and its merchants to reduce the purchasing power of the remaining minority. Such a process is justified only as applied to abnormally high incomes, whose reduction would bring a more general distribution and circulation of money. This can not apply to the salaries and wages of Federal employees, which are as a whole very low.

ADDRESS OF HON. JAMES E. WATSON

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a very eloquent address made over the radio by the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

FAILURES OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

As a result of the election on the 8th of last November, the Republican Party passed into the position of the minority party of the country. As such it has a duty to perform to the people, and it will faithfully and fearlessly discharge that duty.

It will not set up any smut machines or plant any mud batteries to besmear the incoming President, as did the Democratic Party upon the inauguration of the present President. We shall not sponsor any such campaign.

The leaders of the Republican Party believe that it should constructively criticize and not venomously attack the opposition. It owes an obligation to the people to point out the mistakes and hold up the errors of the party in power and to point the way to a higher and a better and a more effective method of administration. That obligation we shall fearlessly discharge.

Every patriot hopes for the return of prosperity, and let it be understood once for all that if the Democratic Party can bring the country back to that happy condition, everybody in the Nation will rise up to call it blessed, and its future calling and election will be assured.

But that does not alter the relation of the minority party to the majority party or to the country, for just criticism is essential to call the attention of the people to the steps that are being taken and the progress that is being made from time to time in attempting the restoration of prosperity.

THE HOUSE DEMOCRATIC

Be it remembered that the House of Representatives became Democratic by the election in 1930 and that, beginning with December, 1931, that party has had a clear majority in that body, with JOHN N. GARNER as Speaker, and hence criticism of its action need not be leveled at the President elect but at the party which has had actual control in that body in which all revenue legislation must originate.

And, furthermore, it must be understood that the Senate is under the control of the Democratic Party and its allies, which for four years has operated a coalition that in the main has been able to control all legislative action in that body.

THE QUESTION PRESENTED

One month from to-day a Democratic President will be inaugurated and the Democratic Party will come into complete control of the Federal Government. The platform upon which the Democratic Party made its campaign contained many promises as to what the party would do in the event it were intrusted with the administration of our national affairs. That platform was indorsed by the presidential candidate in his speech of acceptance in the following unequivocal language:

"The platform which you have adopted is clear. I accept it 100 per cent."

The Democratic platform promises were supplemented by many made by the Democratic presidential candidate during the campaign.

After reflection upon those promises nearly 16,000,000 American citizens went to the polls and voted their lack of confidence in either the promises or the party making them, or both. Those 16,000,000 citizens constitute the rank and file of the Republican Party as it exists to-day—numerically the strongest minority party of American history.

The wisdom of their distrust of the Democratic Party has already been vindicated. Practically every act of the Democrats in Congress and Democratic leaders outside of Congress has proved the truth of the Republican Party's contention that the Democratic Party is unable to govern itself when confronted with the necessity of making decisions and presenting concrete, workable programs, and therefore unable to govern the country.

According to the Democratic platform the reasons for all the evils which afflict the American people are found in the policies of the Republican Party which that platform promised would be speedily changed if the Democrats were intrusted with power. Action was promised upon 38 different matters, affecting agriculture, labor, finance, business, veterans, economy, taxes, the tariff, and many other problems, and the need of haste was emphasized. The candidate himself still further stressed the necessity for speed in these words, uttered in his Baltimore speech:

"I am waging a war in this campaign, a frontal attack, an onset against the horsemen of delay of the Republican leadership. * * * There is no time for delay. * * * It is no time to wait when the prosperity and happiness of this country are at stake. And we of the Democratic Party will not wait.

People who voted the Democratic ticket therefore expected that there would be not the least delay upon the part of Democratic leaders in redeeming their campaign pledges. But no sooner had the polls closed than it was admitted that all the campaign oratory about a frontal attack against the "horsemen of delay of Republican leadership" was in large part just so much tall talk. There was to be no frontal attack at all, nor even a flank attack. Democratic leaders in Congress began maneuvering to prevent an extra session of Congress immediately after the inauguration. They wanted action delayed another whole year. They knew that they could not agree among themselves upon a legislative program. They knew that with the discordant elements within their own ranks they could not do the things for agriculture, labor, the taxpayer, "the forgotten man," that they had promised to do. They did not want to be brought face to face with their own campaign promises. They did not want the pledges of their platform and their candidate presented for payment.

This change of Democratic battle strategy from a frontal attack on the "horsemen of delay" to a policy of equivocation brought such a storm of protest from those who had voted the Democratic ticket in all sincerity that a conference of Democratic congressional leaders and the President elect was held. Out of this conference came the announcement of a face-saving program intended purely as a gesture to convince the public that there was some constructive ability yet remaining within the Democratic ranks. This program consisted of putting through this session of Congress measures which would balance the Budget, give agriculture some relief in the way of increased commodity prices, and the amendment of the Volstead Act so as to permit the manufacture and sale of wine and beer.

It was simultaneously announced that if this program, meager though it was, could be put through there would be no special session, and even the pretense of an attempt to fulfill the Democratic campaign pledges would be abandoned for another year. As this would have brought the country to the eve of the next congressional campaign, the Democratic strategy undoubtedly was to warm over the 1932 promises for use again in 1934. But the strategy has failed, because the Democrats can not put through this session of Congress even their makeshift program. They have abandoned part of it and repudiated most of the remainder.

THE DEMOCRATIC ALIBI

And this leads me to remark that Democratic leaders are now making an attempt to alibi this fresh exhibition of the incapacity of their party by alleging that the failure of their program is due to the Republican "lame ducks" in this session of Congress. The only weakness in this alibi is the fact that this Congress is not controlled by Republican "lame ducks." It is a Democratic Congress. When it convened in December, 1931, the Democrats organized the present House, and they have increased their majority since then in by-elections. The Democrats dominate the Senate in this Congress.

It is known to all men that the straight-line Democrats in the Senate, plus those who openly supported the Democratic candidate for President and who have been making pilgrimages since the election to hold conferences with the President elect, constitute a comfortable working majority in the Senate to-day. There is not a single piece of legislation which, if agreed upon by the Democrats in the House and by the Democrats and their affiliates in the Senate, could not, and would not, be passed in this session of Congress if every Republican, lame duck or otherwise, voted against it. The Democratic Party and its spokesmen can not shift the blame for their failure to act to the shoulders of the Republican Party and the Republican administration.

THE BUDGET

The Democratic platform pledged the party to balance the Federal Budget. Two things are necessary to accomplish this purpose; a reduction of Federal expenditures and an increase in Federal taxes. The Democratic Party is pledged by its platform to "an immediate and drastic reduction of Government expenditures * * * to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 per cent in the cost of Federal Government." The Democratic candidate for President repeatedly renewed that pledge. Such was the promise. What of the performance? Only last week a Democratic Senator introduced a resolution to refer appropriation bills back to their appropriate committees with instructions to cut them 25 per cent. This proposal to take seriously the economy promises of their platform and candidate threw the Democrats of the Senate into such consternation that their leader hurriedly called a party caucus to decide what to do. That caucus of Democratic Senators repudiated their party platform and refused to support the resolution. No lame-duck Republican attended that caucus or was responsible for that action, and that explicit resolution was withdrawn and another one far less pointed and certain was substituted in its place.

New taxes must be levied in order to balance the Budget. Under the Constitution tax bills must originate in the House. Early in the session Democratic leaders in that body agreed tentatively upon a tax program. The Democratic President elect immediately let it be known he did not approve the plan. Democratic leaders were thrown into confusion. A conference was hastily arranged between Democratic leaders of both Senate and House and the President elect at his New York home, in order that there might be some agreement upon a fiscal program for this session of Congress. Returning to Washington, the Democratic leaders gave out statements regarding the President elect's views on a proposed bill. The President elect immediately repudiated them. That increased Democratic confusion and rendered the situation well-nigh hopeless. Then followed the announcement by Democratic House leaders that they would abandon all efforts at this session of Congress to formulate and pass a tax bill. No Republican lame duck was responsible for that exhibition of the Democratic Party's inability to agree even upon such an important policy as a revenue measure.

The farm-allotment bill has gone much the same way. It began its legislative career advertised as embodying the ideas of the President elect and bearing his approval. After it passed the House it was announced by Democratic spokesmen that, at best, the President elect regarded the measure purely as an experiment and that, if passed at all, it should be limited to only one or two agricultural products. Thus damned with faint praise by the President elect and openly opposed by other Democrats, the relief bill promised the farmer this session in time to apply to his 1933 crops has all but been abandoned, and another Democratic campaign promise is scuttled by those making it. No lame-duck Republican is responsible for this.

PROMISE AND PERFORMANCE

Throughout the campaign the President elect continually expressed great solicitude for that more or less mythical individual whom he styled "the forgotten man." Both he and his party platform declared that the problem of major importance was the instant relief of the unemployed and the farmer. In his Baltimore speech upon the "horsemen of delay," to which I have already referred, the President elect said:

"It is no time for delay when nearly half our people can not purchase the bare necessities for their existence. It is no time for delay when 11,000,000 of honest, industrious, willing men and women are tramping the streets and roads of our country looking for work. * * * And we of the Democratic Party will not wait."

Naturally, one would suppose the first subject to occupy the attention of the Democratic Congress when it convened immediately after the election would have been redeeming this outstanding pledge of the party and its candidate.

The record is different, however. With the convening of the Congress last December there took place a procedure without precedent, in fact, in violation of all the precedents of 144 years of the United States Congress. Immediately upon the convening of the House, before it had notified the Chief Executive that it had convened and was ready to receive any message from him or to transact business, before it had conformed to any other of the regular procedure which has marked the opening of Congress since 1789, the Democratic House machine under the whip and spur of its Speaker, the Vice President elect, rushed to the floor, under a special rule, a resolution for immediate consideration and vote. Did that resolution provide for some farm relief? Did it provide some measure or method of ameliorating the condition of those 11,000,000 idle men, so often referred to by the President elect as claiming his first attention? Did it provide relief and recognition for "the forgotten man"? None of these!

The RECORD shows that the thing uppermost in the minds of the Democratic leaders of that body, the thing which took precedence over farm relief, relief of unemployed, recognition of "the forgotten man," balancing of the Budget, reduction of public expenditures, and all the other problems which confront the Nation, was the outright and naked repeal of the eighteenth amendment, which would permit the return of the open saloon. In the minds of the present Democratic leadership that question overshadowed all other issues, of vastly more importance than all other problems before the American people.

The inexcusable violation of all congressional precedents and courtesies was excused by the Democratic leaders upon the ground that the platform had pledged itself to an immediate repeal of that amendment and they were, therefore, in duty bound to make an honest effort to carry out that platform pledge. But the platform also pledged "immediate and drastic" reduction of governmental expenditures, and no such effort was made by the Democratic Congress to redeem that pledge.

But, taking their alibi as the reason for their unprecedented action, what have they to say regarding their failure to redeem their platform pledge in reference to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment? Although every possible pressure was brought to bear upon the Democratic membership by the Democratic machine, the roll call showed the resolution failed of passage by 6 votes, because 44 Democrats refused to support it.

If only one-seventh of the Democrats who voted against this resolution had voted for it, it would have passed. If the Democrats from the State of Georgia, which the President elect in public address has characterized "my second home, my home in the Southland," who voted against the resolution had voted for it, it would have passed. If the Democrats from the State of Arkansas, the home of the minority leader of the Senate, had voted for the resolution, it would have passed.

So the one pledge of the Democratic platform, which by their own unprecedented action the Democratic leadership in Congress designated as the most important of all their pledges, failed of redemption because of their inability to control the membership of their own party. The blame for this can not be laid at the door of lame-duck Republicans.

OTHER PROMISES

The Democratic platform and candidate demanded (1) a lowering of our tariff walls, (2) an increase in our imports, and (3) a lowering of prices of manufactured commodities. All these things have come to pass, not through any action of this country, but because 80 per cent of the nations of the world, including the largest exporting countries, have abandoned the gold standard and depreciated the value of their currency.

Under our tariff system all imports are valued in terms of the currency of the country of their origin, and our tariff is computed on the basis of that foreign valuation. Depreciated foreign currency means a corresponding decrease in the declared value of imports. If that depreciation is 50 per cent, as it is in some countries, then the declared value of imports is 50 per cent less than formerly—although the quantity imported is no less. This automatically lowers our tariff walls the equivalent of the depreciation in the foreign country.

Because of this our people to-day are experiencing ideal Democratic tariff conditions. Our tariff walls have been lowered and the process is continuing. Our imports are increasing tremendously in quantity. Time forbids my going into detail upon this subject, but within a few days I expect to present, for the consideration of the United States Senate and the public, figures which will be startling.

The United States is literally being flooded with imports from countries with depreciated currencies. The consequences are appalling. Factories are being closed. Whole industries are being abandoned. Some are being forced into bankruptcy. Large numbers are being added to the ranks of the unemployed, and their families, constituting hundreds of thousands more, are being added to the ranks of those who must be supported by public charity.

Needless to add, that third hope of the Democrats, namely, lower prices for manufactured goods, has been realized.

The Democratic Party remains indifferent to these conditions. All tariff legislation must originate in the House of Representatives. Those in control of that Democratic legislative body have made no move to relieve the situation. Instead of initiating legislation to rectify these conditions and give employment to American labor, the policy of the present Democratic Congress is to appropriate billions and issue Government bonds to take care of those who are forced out of employment by reason of imported goods. The Democratic policy is to throw Americans out of work in order to assist Europe and then add to the Federal taxes and the public debt in order to provide funds for Americans made the objects of charity by such a policy.

And permit me to further remark on this subject, which is of surpassing interest to the American people at this time, that, by a practically unanimous vote of the Republicans in the House, legislation has been demanded to correct this desperate situation, but up to the present time the Democratic majority has refused to act, and doubtless will continue so to refuse unless action is forced by the Republican majority, with the aid of a few Democrats who are willing to desert their party in order to save their constituents.

Not content with the disaster already wrought by the flood of imported goods, the President elect opened his campaign with the pledge that he intends to let Europe pay her debts to this Government in goods, rather than in cash. I quote from the first speech he made in his campaign, following his speech of acceptance. It was a carefully prepared analysis and interpretation of the Democratic platform delivered from his residence at Albany, N. Y., the evening of July 30, 1932:

"The (foreign) debts will not be a problem. We shall not have to cancel them if we are realistic about providing ways in which payment is possible through the profits arising from the rehabilitation of trade. * * * Our policy and platform declare for payment, but at the same time for lowered tariffs and resumption of trade, which opens the way for payment."

It has been the theme song of debt-cancellation advocates and low-tariff sponsors that Europe should be permitted to pay what she owes us in goods, which proposition the President elect has underwritten 100 per cent. It is reported that already negotiations have been opened by representatives of the incoming administration along these lines. Our European debtors are manufacturing countries. No one of them is an agricultural exporting country. Therefore, if they are permitted to pay us in goods, it will be in manufactured goods, and every article thus taken in payment will be sold in this market in displacement of a like article which could have been made by American industries.

How can vast quantities of imported goods relieve our unemployment in America? We can not buy what we are now producing at home. How, then, can we be expected to buy what would be imported from abroad under this Democratic policy?

If we buy articles made in Europe, it is manifest that we do not buy the same kind of articles made in America. How can this policy lessen the ranks of the unemployed or furnish work to those in idleness?

And yet it seems that the Democratic policy will continue to permit this vast volume of goods coming into our country from those nations that have gone off the gold standard to come in almost unhampered; not only that but to still further lower our tariff rates in order to permit foreign nations to sell their goods here that they may be enabled thereby to pay us what they owe us.

Such a policy can not fail to destroy utterly the remaining prosperity that we now have and place us still further at the mercy of our competitors where wages are paid from one-fourth to one-half those received in like institutions in America.

It does not seem possible that the Democratic Party can hold to that theory and yet it is their announced intention to do so.

Expressing my own conviction on this question, permit me to say that if the only solution of the problem of European debts is to permit their payment in goods—which would be done at the expense of American industry and American workmen—it were better to let our European debtors go to default and write off the whole amount to profit and loss and bitter experience.

THE NATIONAL CREDIT AND SOUND MONEY

The Democratic platform and candidate pledged the maintenance of the national credit, yet no more deadly assault upon our national credit could be made than the refusal of this Democratic Congress appreciably to reduce existing expenditures, or its refusal to provide increased revenue, plus its apparent determination to make a bad condition worse by increasing the public debt and the burden of Federal taxes by additional bond issues. The road the Democratic Party is traveling leads to national bankruptcy and incalculable disaster to all American interests.

ANOTHER ALIBI

Again the Democratic Party is attempting to alibi itself out of the present financial crisis by charging that the present deficit is the creation of the present Republican administration. My good friend, Senator PAT HARRISON, of Mississippi, gave utterance to this sentiment early last month in the following words:

"This isn't our mess. It was handed to us and we have got to take care of it, distasteful as it may be."

That genial Senator from Mississippi evidently forgets when he took the floor of the Senate in December, 1930, to protest in very great indignation against the statement of President Hoover warning Congress that the passage of appropriation bills then pending would result in financial embarrassment to the Federal Government, and that it would necessitate either an increase in taxes, an increase in bond issues, or an increase in the deficit. It was in this statement that President Hoover gave utterance to the observation that "prosperity can not be restored by raids upon the Public Treasury." It was this sentence which aroused the indignation of the Democrats in Congress and which caused the Senator from Mississippi to exclaim:

"We (the Democrats) propose to vote for such appropriations, large though they may be in the estimate of the President, as are required to meet this situation; and if increased taxes are necessary to do that, then let us have the courage and the statesmanship to meet the issue at that time."

And so the Democrats passed those appropriations. But now, when the time has come, which Senator HARRISON said would be met with courage and statesmanship, to devise increased taxes to wipe out the deficit, we find the Democratic leadership lacking either the courage or the statesmanship even to attempt to formulate a tax measure.

The deficit is upon us, due in no small measure to the vast expenditures of money provided in bills enacted by Congress under Democratic leadership. The Democratic leadership, when urging these appropriations, expected them to create a deficit. The chairman of the Democratic executive committee at that time was Mr. Jouett Shouse, and his organization dominated the policy of the Democratic Party during that period.

The record shows that as early as February, 1931, when President Hoover and the Republican leaders were protesting against the mounting appropriations urged by the Democrats and warning them that such a policy would result in an unprecedented deficit in the Federal Treasury, Mr. Shouse went on record in favor of all such appropriations, and stated that: "We should not be too much concerned over the possibility that there may be a deficit created in the Treasury."

The Democratic platform and candidate pledged "a sound currency system, to be preserved at all hazards," but only a few days ago exactly one-quarter of the Democratic membership of the United States Senate voted to destroy our present currency system by reviving the exploded doctrine of the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1. Fortunately, there were enough votes in both parties opposed to this financial heresy to decisively defeat it in the Senate.

In all probability the next Congress, soon to be convened in special session, will be more Democratic than this one. It will contain more spendthrifts, more "pork-barrel" advocates, more advocates of running the Government by borrowing and going further in debt rather than by saving and getting out of debt, more enemies of sound currency, more foes of legitimate business, more advocates of "soaking the rich," more malcontents and more forces of disorder, more exponents of running the Government by experiment than along sound economic lines.

SOME NECESSARY CONDITIONS

And so if our Democratic friends are to bring about the restoration of prosperity in America they must have a more coherent organization than they have been able to make hitherto; they must quiet or quell factional strife within their own ranks; and, after all, they must have a fixed program of remedial legislation involving many phases of rehabilitation, and religiously stick to those things until they shall have been placed on the statute books.

The good of the country requires that they should be able to accomplish this great purpose, but they can not do it unless they are more coherently organized than they now are or manifest a stronger disposition to get together on certain fundamental principles of legislation that will not only restore but retain prosperity in America.

THE REPUBLICAN POSITION

Surely the political situation of the hour, plus that in immediate prospect, determines the duty of the Republican Party, which has stood for sound political and economic principles for three quarters of a century. They are sound, not because the Republican Party has advocated them, but the Republican Party has advocated them because they are sound—tested by time and the experience of this and other Governments. They must not be abandoned now. Defeat has not nullified them. Sixteen million people who supported the Republican Party last November did so because of their steadfast belief in those principles and their faith in the Republican Party as the advocate and practitioner of those principles. Those millions of Americans were right. They have not changed their opinion. They know the need for aggressive support and advocacy of those principles is greater now than at any previous time in our history since the Civil War. This is not an occasion to ground arms and fraternize with our political opponents. The greater the national emergency, the greater the need for militancy in behalf of those things that we sincerely believe out of experience are essential to our stability as a Nation and our welfare as a people. To abandon this position is to admit our insincerity as a party and our lack of concern for our country.

AMENDMENT OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT (S. DOC. NO 181)

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and made available as a public document, a letter to myself under date of January 19, from Judge William Clark, the senior judge of the United States District Court, District of New Jersey.

Judge Clark sets forth in a most convincing manner his contention and the legal reasons for it, for the submission to conventions in the several States and not the legislatures, of the matter of the ratification of any proposed amendment to the eighteenth amendment.

While I do not pretend that I could have expressed my views on this subject with the same conviction or authority as does Judge Clark, I have always been of the opinion myself that ratification certainly should be by conventions and not through the medium of legislatures of the several States.

Especially because the author of the opinion is a nationally recognized authority on the subject, I am anxious to draw it to the attention of all the Members of the Congress and have it available for reference, especially at this time, when special study should be given to this all-important phase of this subject as it affects the amending of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear the proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The Chair agrees with the Senator from Arkansas. The Chair was unable to hear the Senator from New Jersey. What was the request of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and to be made available as a public document a letter to me from Judge William Clark, the senior Federal judge of the State of New Jersey, with respect to the opinion he has given me in writing favoring the submission of any amendment to the eighteenth amendment to conventions instead of to the legislatures of the several States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it has been ruled in the past that documents may either be printed in the RECORD or printed as public documents but not both. What would the Senator prefer—to have it printed as a public document or in the RECORD?

Mr. BARBOUR. I would like to have it printed as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE MEMORIAL SERVICES IN HONOR OF CALVIN COOLIDGE

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit to the Senate a concurrent resolution, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Printing. The resolution provides for the printing of the oration delivered by Chief Justice Arthur Prentice Rugg to-day at the Calvin Coolidge memorial services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 42) was referred to the Committee on Printing, and it is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be compiled, printed with illustrations, and bound, as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 25,000 copies of the oration delivered by the Hon. Arthur P. Rugg in the House of Representatives during the exercises held in memory of the late President Calvin Coolidge on February 6, 1933, including all the proceedings and the program of exercises, of which 8,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 17,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, while the Senate was in complete disorder I am told that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] secured permission to have incorporated in the RECORD a radio address delivered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] Saturday evening.

Mr. FESS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have made effort throughout the day to obtain a copy of that address. I have asked that the author of the address supply me with a copy, and I have called for the speech since consent was given by the Senate to its incorporation in the RECORD, and have been unable to procure it.

It is not my intention to ask the Senate to reverse its action. Anyone must know that one who attempts to reply to a speech is at a disadvantage when he has had no opportunity to read the speech. There is, however, a summary, a brief Associated Press dispatch, published in the Washington Post of Sunday, February 5. Relying on the accuracy of that report I desire to say that the speech of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], which has just been ordered printed in the RECORD, is as brazen a piece of political effrontery as has yet been produced by the bankrupt and lame-duck leadership of the Republican Party in this body.

The speech purports to be a criticism of the Democratic Party for its alleged inability to conduct the affairs of the Nation. As a matter of fact, it should not be regarded as a repudiation of Democratic activities. It is in fact, when analyzed, an indictment of the titular head and actual leader of the Republican Party, the President, and of the leadership in this body symbolized by the Senator from Indiana himself. It constitutes an effort to condemn the Democratic Party before the President elect has taken the oath of office, and that is poor political sportsmanship.

I am glad to say that the speech does not indicate the views of the entire Republican side of this Chamber, as there are many who sit across the aisle from me who are big enough and broad enough and brave enough to serve their country first during this great emergency and who are doing what they can to aid. Within the last few hours a large number of Republican Senators have indicated to me that they do not approve of, indorse, or acquiesce in the policy and practices of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. His effort to hold responsible the Democratic Party for the failures of the political organization with which he is associated is an illustration of feeble and ineffective leadership which has marked the Hoover administration.

The speech, according to press reports, criticizes severely the House of Representatives. The Senator from Indiana has served in Congress for 30 years. He knows and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] knows that it is a breach of ethics to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an attack on the body at the other end of the Capitol; but in order to serve their partisan end, in order to stimulate and encourage the factors and influences which are organizing and driving together to make the incoming Democratic administration a failure—and this for political advantage—they have deliberately disregarded the rule which controls the making of the RECORD in this body.

Since the issue has been made, let me take just a few minutes to show what has happened at the other end of the Capitol, where the Democratic Party is in power by a very small majority, and then let me point out what has happened in the Senate of the United States, where under the leadership of JAMES E. WATSON, of Indiana, the Republican Party is still in power.

The House of Representatives has passed all of the general appropriation bills save 4, and 1 of the 4 I am informed is about ready for passage.

Under the leadership of the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Ohio the Republican Senate has passed one appropriation bill, the deficiency appropriation bill. It encountered a veto by the President and as finally passed over his veto carried in round numbers $3,000,000.

Let the Senator from Indiana take his share of responsibility. Let him answer here why it is that although the House passed the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill and it was received by the Senate on December 16, within 11 days after this session of Congress convened, we are still debating the first large general appropriation bill in the Senate which is, as I have repeatedly said, controlled by the party of which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is the leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the record of the Republican Senate, does not the Senator from Arkansas think that the deficiency bill is the most appropriate legislation we can enact?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No deficiency bill can cover the deficiencies in legislation and administration with which the Senator from Indiana is so intimately associated.

The Interior Department appropriation bill passed the House and was received by the Senate December 30. The Agricultural Department appropriation bill, having passed the House, was received by the Senate on January 3. The War Department appropriation bill passed the House and was received by the Senate on January 25. The State and Commerce Departments appropriation bill was received by the Senate on January 30.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. REED. To make the record complete at that point, I would like to say that the War Department appropriation bill was reported this morning from the Appropriations Committee and is awaiting its turn on our calendar now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; and under the leadership of the Senator from Indiana it may not receive consideration unless we speed up action here and, in spite of the organization which is in control of this body, secure action on these important appropriation bills.

The urgent deficiency appropriation bill came to the Senate on January 27 and was passed over the President's veto. The independent offices appropriation bill came to the Senate on February 4. Other bills are passing the House and coming here and we have taken action on but one small general appropriation bill.

That is the record with respect to the legislation indispensable to the functioning of the Government. It is a comparison of the record between one House of Congress controlled by the Democrats by a small majority, and this branch of Congress controlled by Republicans under the leadership of the Senator from Indiana, who has the assurance and the nerve to go before the country and seek to lay the blame on the Democratic Party for the failure to function of the Republican administration in power.

We all know that during the last few years every important measure that has passed this body—I see the Senator from Indiana in the Chamber now and I challenge him now to state if this is not the fact—all of the legislation enacted during the last session of Congress, without the exception of a single measure, was enacted by cooperation from this side of the Chamber. If that is not true let some one contradict it now.

The House has also voted on a resolution to repeal the eighteenth amendment, and by a narrow majority the resolution submitting the question of repeal was defeated. The House passed a long time ago a bill providing for a tax on beer. The House has passed a number of other very important measures, concerning which no action whatever has been taken by the Senate of the United States.

I respectfully submit that upon a comparison of the record of the two bodies, that body which is dominated by a small majority of Democrats has done much more business than has been transacted by this body under the leadership of the eminent Senator from Indiana. But that is characteristic of the methods that are being pursued. We all know that the Senator from Indiana has done nothing during this session to facilitate the enactment of legislation. His heavy hand is on the Senate now in an effort to defeat or to prevent the disposition of several appropriation bills. If we pass the appropriation bills and secure consideration of the resolution providing for a repeal of the eighteenth amendment, farm-relief legislation, destitution-relief legislation, and measures providing for the suspension of farm-mortgage foreclosures, if we get consideration of the beer bill, it will be through the cooperation of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and those assoicated with him in this Chamber, with the membership of the Senate on this side of the Chamber.

Think of what it means when so experienced a politician as the Senator from Indiana admittedly must be seeks to hold the Democratic Party responsible for the failure to enact legislation during the period when his own party is in power in both the White House and in the Senate of the United States. Let the Senator from Indiana rave as he pleases. He can not escape a fair measure of responsibility for the delay that has occurred here.

Now, I am saying to my friends on this side of the Chamber, and to those on the other side of the Chamber who still feel an interest in the fair functioning of our Government, that we must close ranks and advance together, and override and overrule the leadership of the Senator from Indiana, which more than any other one thing is responsible for the pitiable spectacle that the Senate has presented to the country in its failure and inability to legislate up to this date. Those who wish to see the honor of the Government maintained, those who are interested in working out the great problems which confront this Nation, must join hands and join efforts and must override and overrule those who, for political advancement and advantage, would seek to discredit the Senate of the United States and destroy the confidence of the people in their legislators.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I am very sorry that my modest friend from Arkansas saw fit to characterize me and my conduct at a time during a portion of which I was out of the Chamber. I had no idea that he was going to respond to a speech I made over the radio which he has never read and has had no opportunity to read. But the latter part of his remarks I heard. He honors me overmuch. He gives me credit for power and influence that I do not possess and never have possessed; and, if I had it now, I would not wield it in the manner in which the honorable Senator has charged me with wielding it.

It will be news to the country to learn that the Republican Party is in power in the Senate of the United States. We have on this side a nominal majority of one; that is all we have had for four years; and nobody knows that better than does the honorable Senator from Arkansas, who was one of the manipulators of a coalition that for four years has exercised and wielded the power of the majority in the Senate of the United States.

The other day the Senator adverted to the fact that I had voted against cloture, as if he were the guardian of my conduct and the controller of my vote in the Senate of the United States. It was the first time during my service in this body that a Senator has risen to criticize and characterize another Senator for having voted in a certain way. But, passing that over, everybody knows—nobody knows better than does the Senator from Arkansas—that for four long years that coalition has controlled the action of this body, and during all that time the Senator, who with certain other Senators on this side organized that coalition and conducted it, had absolute control of a majority of the votes here. During the entire consideration of the tariff bill there was not one single time, except on the merits of the proposition, when the Republicans controlled the action of this body, and my friend from Arkansas knows that full well.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does not the Senator know and will he not admit that since the beginning, or about the beginning of the period of the depression, he has received, and the administration has received, cordial support from this side of the Chamber in the passage of all emergency measures presented by the administration? Is that not true with respect to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act? Is it not true with respect to the bill that the Senator from Indiana himself introduced, known as the home loan bank bill? Is there a single emergency relief measure presented by the Administration that was not passed through the assistance of Members on this side of the Chamber?

Mr. WATSON. There is not any doubt about that; nobody has denied that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then, why does the Senator say that the Democrats in coalition with some one have controlled the Senate when the facts show that the coalition, if any, was with the group that he himself represented respecting these important measures of legislation of which I have spoken?

Mr. WATSON. The relief measures which we considered at the last session of Congress were passed by a union of Republican votes and Democratic votes, and I stood on the floor two or three times and thanked the Democrats for their cooperation with the Republicans, regardless of political or partisan division, in support of those measures.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then the Senator goes before the country and abuses them for inefficiency and incapacity.

Mr. WATSON. But, Mr. President, the fact is that during all that time my Democratic friends on the other side—and I love them all, and I am sorry I am going to separate from them in a little while—had no program of their own. They were drifting along without helm or rudder, without anybody to steer the ship. Our side brought in the affirmative propositions and Senators on the Democratic side supported them because they did not know what else to do. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does not the Senator think that that is an unjust statement, in view of the fact that no one could steer the ship of state except the President, who was at the helm representing the organization with which the Senator is allied? And does not the Senator know that from time to time we did present important amendments to all the bills which were offered and that in many instances they were adopted? The Senator is pursuing here the same course that he pursues before the country; while his party has a majority in the Senate, he is blaming us for not carrying out our own program. We hope we may have the opportunity of doing that when a Democratic administration comes into power; and while we regret very much personally to lose the presence of the Senator from Indiana, we sing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" that his strong hand will not be here then to steer the ship of state—upon the rocks. [Laughter.]

Mr. WATSON. And I am entirely willing, Mr. President and Senators, to leave the control and guidance of the United States Senate to the tender ministrations of my genial and affable friend from Arkansas.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I suggest to the Senator that on final analysis the abstract question of who controls the Senate is determined by votes and not speeches? I suggest when the Senator has concluded his observations that he move an executive session of the Senate to determine whether or not this Republican majority has sufficient votes to confirm Republican nominations sent here by a Republican President. It strikes me that that will settle better than any argument who controls the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. WATSON. That is a pretty good speech. [Laughter.] What does my friend from Arkansas say to that?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think that is one of the worst speeches that I have ever heard delivered in the Senate of the United States [laughter], and I am surprised at the source from which it comes. I am surprised that the Senator from Michigan would seek to make the fate of this Nation and the future happiness and prosperity of the American people depend upon the confirmation of a few discredited Republican politicians whose names are sent in at the last moment of extremity by the President of the United States in order to hold on just for a short time to a little more Federal patronage. The fate of this Nation does not depend upon Federal patronage.

But, in reply to the Senator from Michigan, we on this side of the Chamber and some fair-minded Senators on the other side of the Chamber do not intend to see Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration hamstrung through the influence of the Senator from Indiana by efforts to cause the confirmation of officers not in sympathy with the incoming administration. They have had their day; let them be content to give us a chance.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, if the fate of the Nation does not depend upon the confirmation of the few nominees, why does not the Senator let us confirm them? Their confirmation could not possibly make any difference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Because we want in office those who are in sympathy with the policies and measures of the incoming administration; we feel that we are entitled to that; and we are following the example of the party which the Senator from Indiana has so long represented. He knows that when President Harding was elected all nominations were held up; and he knows that that is the history of the party with which he is associated.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, adverting now to the proposition of the control of the Senate, that is a matter to be determined by a vote upon any single proposition. As I said before, I stood here on the floor on several occasions and thanked my Democratic friends for the support they gave to policies which were advocated by the Republican administration.

The Senator from Arkansas well remembers that he was present at the meeting at the White House where those policies were outlined, where certain measures to be acted upon were agreed upon; and growing out of that conference, on the night of the 31st of August, as I remember, there came a series of bills into the Senate. They were sponsored originally by the President of the United States; they were introduced here by Republican Members of this body, except where it was agreed at the White House conference that they should be otherwise introduced; and, after being introduced and sponsored by Republicans, Democrats on the other side rose to their support because the country was in distress, because ours was the only voice that was seeking to lead them out of the wilderness, and our Democratic friends were kind enough to follow because they had not anywhere else to go and did not know what else to do. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator has just stated what was the policy and practice of the Democrats in this body throughout the period of the Hoover administration. He must realize that he is extending a poor reward when now, before the Democrats have come into power, he tries to convince the people of the country that we are responsible for his party's failure in the administration of the Government. We recognized that there must be some leadership; we accepted, so far as we could, the measures advanced by the administration; and now he rewards us for doing that by saying, in effect, that we did not have sense enough to do anything else. [Laughter.] Mr. President, I still think the Senator from Indiana has not shown a proper appreciation for the support which we gave to the administration measures.

Let me add this one further thought and then I will take my seat.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The measures to which he has referred have not accomplished to the fullest extent the purposes for which they were passed and the results of those measures are nothing of which anyone should boast. Experience has shown that they could have been greatly improved, and we on this side must take our share of the responsibility for failing further to improve them. The Senator, however, can not escape his responsibility by laying upon us the blame for the failure of his own President and his own associates in this body.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has three minutes remaining.

Mr. WATSON. Is that all I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is all the time the Senator has remaining.

Mr. WATSON. That will not do me much good. May I not have 15 minutes on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised the Senator has not spoken on the bill and he has, therefore, 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, whether or not the Senator from Arkansas refers to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill as set up by the Hoover administration for the relief of the distress of the country I do not know, but the truth about it is that the President of the United States was magnanimous enough and generous enough and broad enough to put that corporation in the control of Democrats—former Senator Pomerene, of Ohio; Mr. Harvey C. Couch, of the Senator's own State; Mr. Jesse H. Jones, of Texas, all eminent men.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator why that was done, why Democrats were relied upon to administer the act?

Mr. WATSON. Well, Mr. President, I am not talking about that——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator wishes to take credit for those measures, why does he seek to divest his party of the responsibility for their administration by having Democrats administer them?

Mr. WATSON. I am not doing so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Was it because he thought the Republicans did not have sense enough to administer them?

Mr. WATSON. No. Of course, ordinarily I do not want the President to appoint Democrats to any office, but the President of the United States talked to me about it, and I told him I thought it would be a fine policy for the country, for the Republican Party, and for the Democratic Party as well, to appoint Democrats to places of responsibility on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I knew that the actions of the board controlling that corporation would be criticized; I knew that the criticisms would come from the Democratic side, and I thought that if Democrats were in control it would be a mighty mean dog that would bite a member of its own family.

Mr. President, so much for that. Going back now for a moment to the previous session of Congress, the real truth about the matter is that we were very grateful to our Democratic friends for having supported the measures which we proposed. If they have failed, the Democrats are not responsible for their failure, nor are the Republicans. It is simply a question of the failure of the machinery set up to do a thing which might be regarded as well-nigh impossible in a time of stress and storm such as we are passing through at this time. What I had reference to in the address I delivered over the radio the other night, however, was what is happening right now in the Senate of the United States.

Who has taken up the time of the Senate at this session? The Senator can not charge to me that I have taken up the time. I have not made a single speech at this session of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. To-day, when a certain Senator who is present offered an amendment, I suggested to him that he rest the amendment with a very brief statement. He did so. Three Members from the other side of the Chamber, in my presence, came and urged him to make a speech. He declined to do it. His amendment carried.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, of course, I know nothing about that.

The Senator has said, referring to me in a sort of flattering way, I think, that my "heavy hand" was upon this situation. I knew nothing about the thing of which the Senator speaks. I have not done one solitary thing at this session of Congress to obstruct the passage of legislation. I am entirely willing that it shall proceed. I am entirely willing after bills, properly formulated, are brought before the Senate by the regularly constituted committees, that they shall be considered here in regular order and passed upon by this body, and at no time have I interposed any objection to any legislation that was pending.

Of course, I have not agreed at all times with what has been proposed. I have exercised my right as an individual Senator to vote against certain measures that were pending here, but I have in no sense obstructed the progress of legislation, nor do I intend to do so; and, Mr. President, I sincerely hope—and I voice this sentiment publicly—that when the Democrats shall come into control they will be able to organize themselves for the purpose of considering great measures of legislation for the relief of the people to a greater degree than they have been able to do during this session of Congress, or even during the last.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will not the Senator also expand his hope so as to say, to a greater degree than he and his associates in control of this chamber have been able to do during this session and the last?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, at the long session of Congress, three years ago, with a majority of 9 votes and frequently of 11 votes really against us all the time, there were 15 major measures proposed for the consideration of the Senate. Fourteen of them went through. At the short session of Congress two years ago there were seven major measures presented to this body for its consideration, and every one of them was passed. We passed a greater number of appropriation bills, and for a larger sum, than was ever passed by any short session of Congress in the entire history of the Nation, including drought relief and flood relief and other measures of a kindred kind; and we completed that business four days before the 4th day of March in time for the session to adjourn. We did not know what to do for the last four days. That is the fact about the matter. There was a sufficiently coherent organization under proper leadership, I will say to my friend from Arkansas, to conduct the business of the Senate and to pass the required legislation. That is history that nobody can gainsay, and nobody can deny.

The truth is, so far as this session of the Congress is concerned, that our friends on the other side have not been able to agree upon important matters of legislation. I have called attention to that in order that they may be driven to a coherent organization; in order that when they come into full power they may so control themselves and their factional spirit as to be able to put through legislative measures that they believe will be for the best interests of the country and for the dearest concerns of the people.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I was included in this terrible indictment a moment ago. I want to say to my Democratic friends, and especially to the Senator from Arkansas, they having been in the minority so long and standing on the side lines and criticizing what has been done on the majority side, that the tables are turning. If they think that by any sort of browbeating or indictment they can stop the criticism of the minority on this side as they have continued it for the last 12 years on the other side, they will have "another guess coming." We propose to criticize wherever it is legitimate. I want that understood from now on.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WATSON. The Senator can answer in his own time. My time is about gone; and out of my 15 minutes the Senator took 13.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I wanted the Senator to make good use of his time. [Laughter.]

Mr. WATSON. I think I have made a pretty good speech.

Mr. President, so far as mere partisanship is concerned, of course everybody knows what the duty of the majority party is. Everybody knows what the duty and the obligation of the minority party is. It is our business legitimately to criticize, being a minority party. We are a minority party in the Senate now, and everyone knows it. From this time on it will be the business of the Republican Party and its solemn duty to the people to point out the errors and to hold up to view the mistakes of the majority party, not for the purpose of destroying the majority party, but for the purpose of calling the attention of the country to the weaknesses and the blunders and the errors and the mistakes of the majority party; for the purpose of showing that they have not the capacity to govern themselves and organize themselves, to say nothing about governing the affairs of this mighty Republic.

Going out of office now, as I am, I honestly hope as a patriotic American that the Democratic Party will be able to do the things which they promised in the campaign they would do. I most earnestly trust that under Democratic leadership we shall be able to get out of the doldrums in which the country has been drifting for the last year. I hope there will be enough leadership and enough statesmanship and enough organizing capacity in the ranks of the Democratic Party to lead us out of the bogs and up to the high lands of prosperity. But that does not deter me, and shall not, from pointing out the weaknesses nor from criticizing the failures of the Democratic Party, for that is a patriotic duty that every Republican will have to perform if he still believes in the principles and the policies of the Republican Party and if he has enough wisdom and sagacity to see the weakness and the errancy of the Democratic Party. Further than that I do not now go. Further than that I did not go in the remarks I made over the radio a few evenings ago.

I believe that the principles of the Republican Party are correct; I am fundamentally grounded in its ideals; and while we were swept out of power by an avalanche of votes on the 8th of November, I still have faith to believe that when prosperity shall return to the people of the United States it will be upon the old Republican highway upon which, with very rare exceptions, they have traveled for 70 years, from Abraham Lincoln down to the present time.

Senators, I have not time further to discuss these matters. Inasmuch as my good friend from Arkansas—who saw fit to reprove me while I was out of the Chamber—has not only challenged the leadership here but has asserted that we are in the majority in this body, I want now to test that claim. Therefore, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Copeland | Hull | Reynolds |
| Austin | Costigan | Johnson | Robinson, Ark. |
| Bailey | Couzens | Kean | Robinson, Ind. |
| Bankhead | Cutting | Kendrick | Russell |
| Barbour | Dale | Keyes | Schall |
| Barkley | Davis | King | Schuyler |
| Bingham | Dickinson | La Follette | Sheppard |
| Black | Dill | Lewis | Smoot |
| Blaine | Fess | Logan | Steiwer |
| Borah | Fletcher | McGill | Trammell |
| Bratton | Frazier | McKellar | Tydings |
| Brookhart | George | McNary | Vandenberg |
| Bulkley | Goldsborough | Metcalf | Wagner |
| Bulow | Gore | Moses | Walcott |
| Byrnes | Grammer | Neely | Walsh, Mass. |
| Capper | Hale | Norbeck | Walsh, Mont. |
| Caraway | Harrison | Nye | Watson |
| Clark | Hastings | Oddie | Wheeler |
| Connally | Hatfield | Pittman | White |
| Coolidge | Hayden | Reed | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr.

THOMAS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea," and if I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MOSES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. That Senator being absent from the Senate, and I being unable to obtain a transfer, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and I am unable to get a transfer, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to have the RECORD show that were I permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I am not permitted to vote, being paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—31

| Glenn | Moses | Smith | Wagner |
| Hatfield | Norris | Stephens | Wheeler |

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I want to say a word about the appropriation situation. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has implied that the delay in the passage of appropriation bills is due to some action or lack of action on the part of Senators on this side of the Chamber.

The situation is as follows: With the exception of the first deficiency bill, which came over to the Senate and was finally passed, and was then vetoed by the President and later passed with an amendment, the first appropriation bill to come over from the House was the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill. That came to the Senate on December 16, 1932.

Mr. President, in the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill were certain economy provisions which, when the bill came to the Senate, were submitted to the subcommittee on economy of the Committee on Appropriations, and they were considered by that subcommittee. The subcommittee held long hearings, both while we were in session in December and during the Christmas holidays, and when we returned they finally made their report, and the bill was reported to the Senate on January 9, 1933.

At that time the Glass bill was before the Senate and was kept under consideration for more than two weeks, and the Senator from Arkansas knows that the Democratic membership of the Senate were very anxious to get action on that bill, I think quite properly. Be that as it may, we were not able to take up the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill until January 25. Since that time the bill has been continuously before this body.

A week or more ago I made an appeal to the Senate for haste in the passing of that bill and the other appropriation bills. I stated to the Senate that I thought we ought to get all of the appropriation bills out of the way at this session in order that the Democrats at the extra session which was to come might have a clear field to take up matters of importance without being impeded by appropriation bills.

Mr. President, my plea was somewhat in vain. Since I made it, the bulk of the time in the consideration of the pending appropriation bill has been taken up by the other side of the chamber, and the same, I may say, was true when the Glass bill was before the Senate. Nearly all of the time since Congress has been in session has been taken up by the Democratic side and not by the Republicans.

I want to see haste in the consideration of these bills, and I am glad that the Democratic management is going to try to help secure haste, I think we can still get the appropriation bills through before March 4 if we apply ourselves diligently to the task and do not consume too much time in debate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong this particular discussion, because the country is interested in legislative results and not in irrelevant politics. But, inasmuch as it was my suggestion which brought the motion for an executive session, I want to make this brief comment in respect to the significant outcome of that eloquent roll call.

I cordially agree with the able Senator from Arkansas that the welfare of the Nation does not turn in any degree upon an executive session of the Senate in which postmasters shall or shall not be confirmed. But that is not the point in respect to this particular demonstration. If there is one criterion more than another which demonstrates where the control lies in this Senate, it is at the point where the parliamentary procedure reaches the determination upon confirmations of executive nominations. I want the country to know and to realize precisely where control in this session resides. It is not identified by political speeches. It is identified by votes, and this roll call leaves the identification beyond further cavil.

At the beginning of this session the Democratic caucus, evidently knowing itself to be the actual control of the Senate, pronounced the ruthless partisan ultimatum that there should be no confirmation of any Republican presidential nominee whose term shall run beyond the 4th of March. They have implacably sustained and incorrigibly defended that ultimatum from the first week in December to the present moment. They similarly will continue to defend it beyond any peradventure until the 4th of March. We have just called the roll upon another effort to go into executive session, which is the parliamentary step preceding the consideration of nominations. The Republican side has been defeated by a vote of 31 to 41.

I make no point of the executive session itself nor of the importance of confirming nominations. It is relatively inconsequential. I do make point of the fact that the Senator from Arkansas is not entitled to lay an indictment against this Republican side of the aisle in respect to Republican responsibility for what here occurs when in the face of every demonstration the control does not lie upon this side of the aisle, whether it lies upon the other side of the aisle or not. We have just made another demonstration of that fact. If there is control, it is Democratic control, and no amount of oratory can successfully avoid this responsibility.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not yield at the moment. I shall be glad to yield when I shall have concluded.

The Republican control is theory and nothing but theory. It is shadow and not substance. Everybody here knows it and everybody in the country ought to know it. Therefore there is no fairness or equity in any such indictment as the able Senator from Arkansas lays against us. For this reason it was worth while to call the roll and make the demonstration. It ends the argument.

Mr. President, for the future it seems to me that the Congressional situation calls for a minimum of politics and a maximum of coalition in the interest of effective net results for America. Let Democratic spokesmen share in this admonition. So far as I am concerned, I reserve for myself the right to oppose relentlessly any Democratic policy which it seems to me is in contravention of the best welfare of the Nation. But in so far as it lies within my individual power to cooperate for progressive advantage in legislation to meet the situation in which the country finds itself, I am prepared to forward march without respect to partisan politics or partisan strategy, and I am perfectly confident that this represents the majority view upon this Republican side of the aisle. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has well said that it is not only our privilege but it is our function to reserve a courageous right of criticism when the situation requires it. But in the absence of any evidence of a resort to petty partisanism on our part, I suggest that it would be well for Democratic authority upon this floor to withhold any further suggestion that we upon this side of the aisle are in adverse control of the Senate and are responsible for things for which we are not responsible at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope, now that we have rested ourselves by spending an hour and a quarter in having a little friendly festival of a critical nature, that the clerk may report the next amendment on page 79 of the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield for a minute before he insists upon that?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield the floor.

Mr. BORAH, Mr. ODDIE, and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Nevada wish to talk on the matter upon which we have been wasting time?

Mr. ODDIE. I wish to make a very brief statement on a matter which is in a measure a reflection upon me personally.

Mr. BORAH. It has been demonstrated for three weeks or a month that no one has control of the Senate. Why waste time here between parties?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the question I am about to discuss for one minute will not be a waste of time, and any Senator on the floor should have the privilege of refuting an indictment against himself.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. ODDIE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator is replying to my remarks, I made no reference to the Senator from Nevada. I think he has been diligent in trying to secure action on the bill and I commend him for it.

Mr. ODDIE. I know the Senator has not meant anything like a personal reflection on me, but as I have had charge of the appropriation bill and as this question has arisen, I think it is only right for me to say that I have done my very best to get the bill before the Senate and to hold it there and to get prompt action on it.

When the bill was brought to the Senate on the 9th of January, the Glass banking bill was before the Senate. I had a right to bring up this appropriation bill at that time, because it was a privileged matter. I discussed the matter with several Senators on the other side of the Chamber. They felt that we should give the Glass banking bill an opportunity to be passed. I agreed with them. I felt that that bill was so important that we should bend every energy toward having it passed. The appropriation bill was brought up on the floor of the Senate finally on the 25th of January, after the Glass banking bill had been disposed of. Since then I have stayed on the floor of the Senate almost constantly. I have done everything I could to get the bill through without delay. On last Friday I asked for a night session and we remained in session until 10 o'clock. A great deal of splendid progress was made that night. I have agreed that to-night we shall remain in session until 10 o'clock. I have done my very best to hold the bill before the Senate and to expedite its passage, and I hope that the bill will be passed now in very short order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am inclined to agree with the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE]. I am inclined to think the motion made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] was another mistake of the kind which has more or less characterized recent history on that side of the Chamber.

Thirty-six States have but recently ratified the twentieth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the so-called lame-duck amendment designed to prevent Congress from legislating after popular approval has been withdrawn. Pending upon the Executive Calendar are a great many appointments which might be characterized as lame-duck appointments. The States of the Union, however, in the most solemn manner prescribed by the Constitution, have registered public opinion and the popular will of the people of the United States. The motion just made by the Senator from Indiana was in defiance of that expressed popular judgment. It is not strange that Senators on the other side, many of them, should respect this expression of public opinion, should refuse to go into executive session, and should refuse to ratify what we may still call lame-duck appointments.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN SEAMEN

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Post of to-day, entitled "Protect American Seamen." I think the editorial is interesting and timely, and it relates to an important subject.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, February 6, 1933]

PROTECT AMERICAN SEAMEN

Congress has refused to cripple the American merchant marine by eliminating the fund for carrying ocean mail. Senator McKELLAR's motion to cut this fund failed in the Senate. Congress insists that an adequate merchant marine shall be maintained to carry American commerce and to serve as an auxiliary to the Navy in times of national emergency. Yet Congress persists in its neglect of American seamen.

Americans can not afford to work for the wages that are paid to foreigners. Hence, there is a great temptation for American shipowners to employ Oriental crews, so far as the law permits. Chinese are imported to serve on American ships, in spite of the unemployment of American seamen. Obviously it is a farce to allow Chinese seamen to hold jobs on American ships that are built at a heavy expense to taxpayers for the purpose of enhancing the national defense. One of the primary purposes of the merchant marine act is to train American seamen.

Another aspect of this situation deserves attention because of the urgent need for protecting American labor. A large number of alien seamen are smuggled into the United States. They frequently pay large sum to serve as seamen, because when their vessel arrives in an American port they are permitted to land and disappear. Under the immigration laws they could not enter the United States as immigrants. But when they enter as seamen there is no way of dealing with them, except by deportation. Only a small portion of the aliens thus smuggled into the United States are detected and deported.

On several occasions the Senate has passed a bill to prevent this illegal entry of aliens disguised as seamen, but the House seems indifferent to it. This measure now awaits action of the lower chamber; and unless it is passed before March 4, it will have to go through the entire legislative process again. By all means it should pass. Shipping interests that are interested in retaining ocean mail contracts would do well to withdraw their opposition to this bill, to avoid further questioning as to their right to mail contracts.

CALVIN COOLIDGE AND DWIGHT W. MORROW

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Parkersburg (W. Va.) Sentinel, on January 11, 1933, "as told to Charles Brooks Smith by John Marshall," formerly Assistant Attorney General in the Coolidge administration. The article has reference to the late President Calvin Coolidge and our late lamented colleague, former Senator Dwight W. Morrow, of New Jersey.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TWO FRIENDS PASS ON

As told to Charles Brooks Smith by John Marshall

The end of the earthly lives of Calvin Coolidge and Dwight W. Morrow was in suddenness and aloneness so alike as to recall to mind their remarkable friendship.

It suggested the appropriateness of an article telling of this remarkable friendship which began at college and reached its climax on the stage of public life, both principal actors in a great dramatic era of the country's history; both bathed in the light which beats upon the White House and—at that time—upon the thrones of Old World emperors and kings; both men famous world-wide.

Happily, we knew of just the man who could, if he would, furnish authentic material for such a sketch as we wished to print. He was an intimate friend of Mr. Morrow; and a frequent associate, because of his duties as Assistant Attorney General of the United States, of President Calvin Coolidge.

And so we went to Mr. John Marshall, a former resident of Parkersburg, W. Va., now prominent in the legal profession here. He thought that an article along the lines suggested would be most appropriate and he cheerfully agreed to talk of the friendship of these two great men. He related facts and incidents most interesting, and many of them printed for the first time herein.

COLLEGE CHUMS

"Stories have been published respecting the class vote at Amherst," said Mr. Marshall, beginning, "in which each voted for the other as the man most likely to succeed in life. The world likewise knows that President Coolidge appointed Mr. Morrow chairman of the aviation inquiry and later ambassador to Mexico, but many facts in connection with their long-continued friendship have never been published.

"For example, the nomination of Mr. Coolidge for Vice President is generally ascribed to a delegate from Oregon as standing on a chair and presenting his name to the convention. That is only part of the story.

"Some months before the convention, Mr. Morrow organized a small group of friends and admirers of Mr. Coolidge, looking to the presentation of his name before the convention as a candidate for President. Perhaps the most effective thing that was done as a result of this effort was the publication of a book which Mr. Morrow financed, but which he had published as a gift from their class.

"This book, which was entitled 'Have Faith in Massachusetts,' largely a compilation of Coolidge speeches, was placed in the hands of every delegate to the convention by a friend. The efforts to secure votes for his nomination for President met with slight success, but the book made a profound impression.

THAT ONE WEST VIRGINIA VOTE

"I am sure it influenced our Mr. Joseph Holt Gaines to vote for Mr. Coolidge to be the party's nominee for President.

"The outstanding figure in the Massachusetts delegation was the late Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, who was not at all favorable. Mr. Morrow had enlisted the interest of former Senator Murray Crane, but Senator Crane was never persuaded of the probability of Governor Coolidge's nomination. He afterwards told Mr. Morrow that had he realized the temper of the convention he thought that the nomination might have been secured.

"In any event, there was considerable sentiment in the convention for Mr. Coolidge, with the result that when his name was presented for the Vice Presidency he was overwhelmingly nominated. By chance, I was the person who informed Mr. Morrow of the action of the convention, because he and other friends had left after the presidential nomination. Mr. Morrow was not at all certain that Governor Coolidge would accept the nomination, but he immediately telephoned him and found that he regarded it as a call to service.

COOLIDGE SHOWED NO INTEREST

"After the death of President Harding and Mr. Coolidge's succession to the Presidency, for many months no one could ascertain the feeling of the President with respect to his candidacy to succeed himself. Unquestionably there was considerable opposition among prominent politicians to his nomination.

"Finally, as the time became short, Mr. Morrow, Mr. Hilles, Mr. Stearns, and other friends agreed that his name should be offered to the country, and Mr. William M. Butler was selected as chairman of the voluntary committee to promote his candidacy. All this was done without Mr. Coolidge himself having shown the slightest interest or concern in the matter.

"For several years after President Coolidge had occupied the office of President, Mr. Morrow continued with his business and private matters and had little to do with affairs of government. It is true that on occasion President Coolidge consulted him, but so had other Presidents, and it is accurate to say that up until the time Mr. Morrow was appointed ambassador to Mexico, he had had less to do with the affairs of government at Washington than he had had in at least one previous administration and the succeeding administration of President Hoover.

"Many people during this period speculated as to the reason. It is certain that it was not because of any lack of faith or confidence on the part of President Coolidge in Mr. Morrow, and certainly during this period Mr. Morrow continued to entertain the greatest admiration for and to enjoy a rare friendship with the President.

"One theory was that President Coolidge felt that Mr. Morrow's greatest usefulness to the country could be served by continuance of his leadership in the financial world. Another theory was that President Coolidge felt that Mr. Morrow would be met with bitter opposition on confirmation, that the country regarded him largely as a partner in a great international banking concern, did not understand his zeal for public service, and did not envision his complete separation from the interests which he served.

NO ONE KNOWS

"I do not know, and I am satisfied no one else knows, why President Coolidge did not avail himself earlier of Mr. Morrow's services. The following unpublished fact, however, is true.

"When reports became current in Washington that Secretary Kellogg was contemplating resigning from the Cabinet, a number of names were suggested as his probable successor, among others that of Mr. Morrow. About this time a friend of Senator BORAH's told me that Senator BORAH, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and whose committee dealt primarily with confirmations of this post, was more favorable to Mr. Morrow's selection than to any person suggested.

"I, in turn, relayed this information to Senator Edge, from Mr. Morrow's State, and to Senator Goff, of our State, where Mr. Morrow was born. They carried this information to the President and reported that he seemed surprised to learn of this attitude of Senator BORAH. Secretary Kellogg, however, did not resign.

"Some months later President Coolidge announced the appointment of Mr. Morrow as ambassador to Mexico. This was generally supposed to have been the primary selection of President Coolidge. It is not the fact. Within the last month Secretary Kellogg related to me that he had suggested Mr. Morrow's appointment, and that the President had expressed a doubt as to Mr. Morrow's acceptance.

"When his name was sent to the Senate, however, it found Senator BORAH enthusiastic, as predicted, and practically no opposition on the part of any Senator to his confirmation.

CALL TO THE PHONE

"When Mr. Morrow was called on the long-distance telephone by the Governor of New Jersey and offered the appointment of Senator, President Coolidge's term had expired. Later, when Mr. Morrow came to New York on his way to the London conference, President Coolidge asked him to spend the night with him at the Vanderbilt Hotel in New York.

"On this occasion President Coolidge offered him some advice as a candidate. He was not enthusiastic about Mr. Morrow going to the Senate; but finding he had determined to be a candidate, he made several suggestions. One which amused Mr. Morrow very much was his injunction not to make any speeches.

"'Go around and meet people,' said President Coolidge, 'and shake hands with them. People seem to like to shake hands. I never have understood why.'

"While Mr. Morrow was in London attending the conference, it became so prolonged that he seriously debated whether he should not withdraw as a candidate for the Senate. He discussed this matter with Ambassador Dawes and others and Ambassador Dawes urged him not to take this step.

"In the meantime his friends became concerned because opposing candidates were organizing and canvassing for votes and little was being done in behalf of Mr. Morrow. It was decided to compile a short history of his life and achievements, the book to be circulated among the voters and published serially in some leading newspapers in New Jersey.

COOLIDGE WRITES FOREWORD

"Without consulting Mr. Coolidge in advance the sketch was sent him with the request that he write a foreword. Several days elapsed and nothing was heard from Mr. Coolidge, but within a week the sketch was returned with the foreword and without any comment. At the memorial services held in London for Mr. Morrow, General Dawes, in his remarks, quoted the concluding paragraph of Mr. Coolidge's statement, as follows:

"'I first met him as the representative of the great mass of our fellow citizens which we call the people. There he will always remain, just one of them, unencumbered by his property, thinking their thoughts, working, working tremendously for their success. I have seen him develop into a ripe scholar, an able lawyer, a great business man, a wise statesman, and a devoted husband, father, and patriot. When most men would retire he seems always just beginning—beginning some new service for his friends and neighbors, for his country, and for humanity. It is the glory of the United States that it can produce such citizens.'

"The last time I saw Mr. Coolidge," Mr. Marshall continued, "was at Mr. Morrow's funeral. I felt that of all the friends whom I saw there no one, outside the family, seemed more affected.

MARSHALL WRITES COOLIDGE

"Having been with Mr. Morrow in his last days and, as always, having heard him speak so beautifully of Mr. Coolidge, I felt it appropriate to write him. One of the things I said was:

"'The first thing he asked me when he saw me was whether I had read your article [referring to Mr. Coolidge's article in the Saturday Evening Post]. He was very much pleased with it and he also discussed Mr. Walter Lippmann's comment about it. Sunday, at the noonday meal, when there was no one present but the family, he told us of his telephone talk with your secretary and of your having shot a partridge. I don't think I was ever with him for any length of time that some time during the conversation he did not speak of you. He had the mental habit of comparing what he thought you would do with situations—always to your credit. The first time I ever met him the occasion was his discussion of you. That was the year before you were nominated for Vice President. * * * I have seen him stop suddenly on the street and say, "I have just been thinking about Coolidge. What an amazing man! * * *'

"Recently," Mr. Marshall continued, "at the inauguration of the new president of Amherst College, where both Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Morrow have served as trustees, Mr. Walter Lippmann spoke of Mr. Morrow as not only Amherst's greatest son, but the greatest man of his time. President Coolidge sat on the platform, and no one seemed more pleased at this tribute than he.

"It was a remarkable friendship between two great men, both modest, unassuming, neither recognizing the greatness of himself, but appreciating in full the greatness of the other.

"'It is the glory of the United States that it can produce such citizens,' and it is a wonderful thing that it can produce such friendship."

INVESTIGATION OF AIR MAIL AND OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I do not care to discuss, but which I should like to have read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 349) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, three from the majority political party and two from the minority political party, is authorized and directed to investigate and make a full, complete, and detailed inquiry into all existing contracts entered into by the Postmaster General for the carriage of air mail and ocean mail, both foreign and domestic, with a view to determining particularly (1) all the circumstances surrounding the execution and continuation of and the necessity, if any, of maintaining, altering, or canceling such contracts; (2) the organization and financial condition of the associations, partnerships, or corporations with which such contracts have been entered into, including a study of their capital stock, authorized and paid in, their receipts and expenditures, their total outlay in salaries paid to officers, executives, and employees, whether by way of bonus or otherwise, and their relationship, whether by interlocking directorates or otherwise, with any other individual, association, partnership, or corporation, commercial or banking; and (3) the extent of any activities by or on behalf of any association, partnership, or corporation with which such contracts have been entered into in any effort to obtain, through legislation or otherwise, cash subsidies from the United States. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-second and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, the resolution will be referred first to the committee having charge of the subject matter.

Mr. BLACK. I do not object if it is to go to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Before that order is entered, however, let me say that I have before me the cost of air mail subsidies as disclosed by the report of the Post Office Department for 1932. The cost of air mail subsidies was $23,845,311, the cost of ocean mail subsidies $21,666,102, or a total of $45,511,414. I desire to request the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to take cognizance of those figures and to take prompt action in order that the resolution may receive consideration before the extra session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

House Joint Memorial Resolution 2

Whereas during the World War the United States Government greatly expanded the currency in order to finance the war, as is reflected by the fact that the amount of Treasury and bank-note circulation increased from $715,000,000 in 1914 to $3,340,000,000 in 1919, resulting in even more than 100 per cent rise in prices; and

Whereas the national debt increased from $1,188,000,000 to $25,482,000,000 in the same period, and is now more than $20,000,000,000, and the indebtedness of other States, as well as corporate, private, and individual, has increased in even a greater percentage; and

Whereas public, private, corporate, and individual business has accumulated and contracted vast amounts of indebtedness during this period of inflated currency and overexpansion of credit; and

Whereas under the present condition of low prices for labor, commodities, and deflated currency these public and private debts, contracted when dollars were cheap, must not, and can not be, repaid with dollars that are dear, creating an unjust hardship and forcing into bankruptcy great numbers of debtors and giving undue and unjust advantage as well as jeopardizing the rights of creditors; and

Whereas the depression has resulted in deflation of prices and commodities, salaries and wages, but not in interest and dividends, as is reflected by the fact that the average of wages and salaries in the United States has decreased 57 per cent since the year 1926, not counting the totally unemployed, while on the other hand the average of interest and dividend payments have increased 68 per cent, thus making the present deflation extremely unjust and one-sided in its effect; and

Whereas money, gold, and currency are the measure by which exchange of real values is made and the value whereof can easily and arbitrarily be fixed, the power of so doing having been placed in the hands of the Congress by the Constitution of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the forty-ninth general assembly (the senate concurring therein), That we do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to revaluate our money system of gold and currency or to enact such legislation as will restore same to the value of 1919 as a means of bringing wages, salaries, and commodity prices on a par with the payment of debts, both public and private, and thereby avoiding wholesale bankruptcy and protecting creditors and holders of securities against impending loss; and be it further

Resolved, That we send a copy of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in the United States Congress, thereby asking them to sponsor and support such legislation; be it further

Resolved, That we send a copy of this resolution to the presiding officers of the house and senate of each State legislature now in session, thereby requesting that each of those bodies pass a similar resolution.

MARCUS L. MILLER,
Polk County.
JOHN M. WILLIAMS,
Logan County.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Lycoming (N. Y.) Local of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), favoring the inflation of the currency so as to increase prices, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution unanimously adopted at a mass meeting of veterans of all wars held in Buffalo, N. Y., under the auspices of Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States (Erie County), protesting against the policies of the National Economy League, and kindred organizations, in advocating economies in Federal appropriations affecting especially benefits to war veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of Rev. Clarence O. Peterson and sundry citizens of Mannsville, N. Y., remonstrating against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution or the repeal or modification of the national prohibition law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Retail Dry Goods Association, assembled at New York City, N. Y., favoring reduction of governmental expenses so as to avoid the imposition of additional taxes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Navy Post, No. 16, American Legion, of New York City, N. Y., praying that there be stricken out of the Army appropriation bill, H. R. 14199, the so-called Taber and Connery amendments affecting pay and allowances in the Army and also "that no such amendments shall be appended to the Navy Department supply bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by general executive board of the Upholsterers', Carpet and Linoleum Mechanics' International Union of North America, New York City, N. Y., favoring the prompt passage of the so-called Costigan-La Follette emergency relief bill, being the bill (S. 5125) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to enter notice of a motion to reconsider the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] by which it is proposed to strike out, in line 3, page 57, the numerals "$35,500,000" and insert "$28,500,000." I am merely entering the notice of the motion at this time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope we may now recur to the bill and to the amendment on page 79, section 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 79, line 5, insert the following:

SEC. 15. The Bureau of Efficiency and the office of chief of such bureau are hereby abolished; and the President is authorized to designate another officer to serve in place of the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency on any board, commission, or other agency of which the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency is now a member. All records and property, including office furniture and equipment of the bureau, shall be transferred to the Bureau of the Budget. Appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the Bureau of Efficiency shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury. This section shall take effect on the first day of the month following the month during which this act is enacted.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 79, line 15, strike out all of the section after the word "effect" and insert in lieu thereof "60 days from the date of the approval of this act."

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I assume that the Senator from South Carolina submitted this amendment because of the conversation I had with him regarding it?

Mr. BYRNES. I will state, Mr. President, that the Senator from New York discussed this matter with members of the committee, and the committee were of the opinion that the time should be extended as this amendment provides.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me make a further suggestion.

Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from South Carolina provide that the section shall take effect at the beginning of the fiscal year, July 1, instead of taking effect 60 days after its approval.

I recognize the generosity of the Senator because when we talked about it the provision had even a lesser number of days than the Senator now suggests; but if this bureau is actually to be wiped out, and its employees are to be removed from the Government pay roll, they ought to have at least warning of the intention of Congress. It would seem to me that the natural time to terminate the activities of the bureau would be at the beginning of the new fiscal year. So the plea I make is that instead of having the section take effect in 60 days after enactment it should take effect at the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from New York recalls that this bill as reported to the Senate contained a provision for the elimination of the bureau immediately upon the passage of the bill. So far as notice is concerned, it is a fact that the employees of this bureau knew as far back as January 6, that, in so far as the committee was concerned, the report was to be made recommending the elimination. Of course, that does not mean that Congress is going to adopt the report of the committee; and the Senator from New York knows that this bill, in the very nature of things, will not be approved for some days, probably 10 days or 2 weeks longer; and then this provision will not take effect for 60 days after the approval of the act. The committee is of the opinion that that will give ample notice to employees as to the action of Congress.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume that what the Senator says is correct; but, of course, if the section were amended as I have suggested, it would simply add another 60 days to the 60 days the Senator has proposed; and it would seem to me the natural time to begin a new plan in the administration of the Government would be at the beginning of the fiscal year; so that the appeal I make is that the effective date may be set over to the 1st of July instead of 60 days after enactment.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the employees will have had more than 90 days' notice from the time the bill was reported, and I trust that the amendment I have offered will be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. DICKINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know what I may say will have no effect, perhaps, upon the action of the Senate; but I desire to say if there has been one agency of the Government, created as an independent office, which had for its object the saving of money to the Treasury of the United States, and which actually saved money, it is the Bureau of Efficiency. I know that the stage is all set; I know that anything I might say by going into the details as to hundreds of millions of dollars have been saved by this bureau will cut no figure whatever; but I want to place this statement on record in behalf of the splendid men who have managed the affairs of the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from South Carolina for a moment. During the discussions in the Economy Committee it was suggested that where a bureau is to be abolished it is always better, if possible, to terminate its existence at the end of a calendar month. I am wondering whether the Senator from South Carolina would not modify the amendment so as to provide that the section should take effect at the beginning of the second calendar month after the approval of the act? In that way there would be a cut-off at the end of a month, while if it is made 60 days, a month and a third may elapse; it would be necessary to deal with a third of a month, and all the employees would have to have their salaries figured out upon that fraction of a month. I am just making that suggestion to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. The purpose of the committee was to give 60 days' notice after the approval of the act. I have no objection to the modification of the amendment in the manner indicated by the Senator from Iowa, however, if he will indicate it so that we may understand the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he submit the language in the form of a formal amendment so that it may be read from the desk?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask if the Senator from Iowa suggested that the effective date be made the 1st of July?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Iowa suggested that the effective date be the beginning of the second calendar month after the approval of the act, so that the change would take place on the 1st of the month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina is a member of the Economy Committee?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. FESS. He has been for a long while a Member of the other House and, therefore, is quite familiar with the operations of the Bureau of Efficiency. I desire to ask him a question about the proposed abolition of this bureau. I know, as he knows, the purpose for which it was originally created. All along we have been wondering how we could save lost motion and eliminate extravagances in governmental agencies which the Congress has set up from time to time and which grow from day to day, being perhaps small to-day but growing larger to-morrow and still larger the next day. The Bureau of Efficiency was thought to be a distinctive organization made up of experts capable of looking into the operations of the various activities of the Government and making recommendations as to where money could be saved. I am wondering, in view of the functions it has performed, as it has developed from year to year, if it is not an unwise thing to abolish the particular bureau, since the very purpose of its creation was to secure greater efficiency and bring about economy.

I know the Senator is familiar, if anyone is, with the work of the bureau, and I will ask him if it has not proved its value in its operations to the extent that, in the interest of economy, it ought to be continued?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the opinion of the committee was that the Bureau of the Budget, which is charged with the duty of making estimates for the various bureaus, could make examination as to the administration of the funds appropriated by the Congress. Under the order of the President, as I recall, the Bureau of Efficiency was transferred to the Bureau of the Budget. In any event, by this transfer the Bureau of the Budget would seek to perform the functions heretofore performed by the Bureau of Efficiency.

Of course, what is said of the Bureau of Efficiency may be said of almost every other bureau; it might be desirable to continue the Bureau of Efficiency as well as the Bureau of the Budget; but undoubtedly there is some duplication and overlapping, if the Bureau of the Budget actually does what the Congress intended it to do when it was created by the Congress. If there is any bureau that can be eliminated at this time, in the opinion of our committee, this bureau could be dispensed with.

The question is one not so much of maintaining desirable things but of maintaining only essential activities, and that makes it necessary at this time that the Bureau of the Budget should do this work.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, then I understand that it is not proposed to eliminate the functions of the Bureau of Efficiency, but to transfer its functions to another agency already in existence.

Mr. BYRNES. It is the purpose and hope of the committee that the Bureau of the Budget will do the work which has been performed and is now being performed by the Bureau of Efficiency. It is simply to prevent overlapping and duplication of work.

Mr. FESS. Realizing that the very purpose of the creation of this bureau was to insure efficiency and economy, it would seem to me to be the last bureau which in the interest of these two objects should be abolished; but I note the transfer is to another bureau that was created years after the Bureau of Efficiency, so that functions now performed by the Bureau of Efficiency will still be performed.

Mr. BYRNES. That is the intention of the committee.

Mr. DICKINSON. I offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina it is proposed to strike out the words "60 days after the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the beginning of the second calendar month after the passage of this act."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from South Carolina to modify his amendment in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BYRNES. I have said that I accepted the modification of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], as modified, to the paragraph reported by the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask if the amendment as modified might not mean that the Bureau of Efficiency would be abolished in 30 days instead of 60 days? I presume the Senator from Iowa did not so intend it, but it appears to me that it might not be so favorable as the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, my purpose is, if we are going to abolish the bureau, to have it go out of existence at the end of a month. If the Senator would prefer to have it the third calendar month, I would just as leave do that. I am not discussing the question of time.

Mr. COPELAND. I should say certainly that it should be the third calendar month rather than the second, as proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. With the consent of the Senator from South Carolina, I will be very glad to modify my amendment to his amendment so as to read the "third calendar month" instead of the "second calendar month."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New York is correct, in that the amendment in its present form might lessen the time; and I have no objection to changing it to read "at the beginning of the third calendar month" in place of "the second calendar month," if that is more satisfactory to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, as I understand, the Senator from South Carolina has modified his amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; so as to read "at the beginning of the third calendar month."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been modified, providing that the provision shall take effect "at the beginning of the third calendar month." The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified.

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment, Mr. President. I think the Senator from South Carolina is doing well. Now, could we get him to insert the words "the 1st of July," instead of "at the beginning of the third calendar month," so as to fix a definite month?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think it is definite enough as it is, and I am opposed to any further modification of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, as amended, to the paragraph reported by the committee.

The amendment, as modified, to the paragraph reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. As a substitute for section 15, as amended, the Senator from North Dakota proposes to insert the following:

The Bureau of Efficiency is hereby abolished as an independent establishment, and its powers, duties, personnel, property, equipment, records, and the unexpended balances of its appropriations for the current fiscal year are hereby transferred to the General Accounting Office, effective the first day of the month following the approval of this act: Provided, That the President may designate an officer of the Government to serve on any board on which the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency now serves by virtue of his position as chief of that bureau.

Mr. BINGHAM. I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order, since the section as amended has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator raises the point of order, the Chair would be forced to rule that it would be necessary to have a reconsideration.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I did not understand that the whole section had been adopted.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will state it.

Mr. FESS. Would not a motion to strike out the section and insert this language be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendment appeared at the end of the section in lieu of words contained in the section and that the question has not yet been put upon adopting the section as modified by the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. So the Chair holds that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is in order.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I desire to speak upon that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I offer this amendment only because it appears that there is a determination on the part of the Senate to dispense with the Bureau of Efficiency as such. I hope that if we are going to dispense with it as a unit we will refrain from destroying the work and the utility of that particular service. I hope it may be held intact in some department where it can continue what I consider to be among the most efficient services that are coming from any department of government to-day.

We are all anxious, of course, to effect such economies as can be effected; but in doing it we ought to be on guard lest we destroy the very things that are working to the end of accomplishing economy.

I have very carefully gone over the ground with those who ought to be accepted as authorities upon the subject, with the view in mind of ascertaining just what savings have been effected by reason of the operations of the Bureau of Efficiency, and have compiled a tabulation—rather roughly, I will admit—estimating the savings from year to year that have been accomplished by the Bureau of Efficiency.

Starting back in 1914, this tabulation reveals that the expenditures for general investigations in that year were $14,007, and that the savings for that fiscal year only—that one year—were $100,000; in other words, almost 7 to 1 in the matter of savings in relation to expenditures to accomplish those savings. Then, of course, there have been savings in the recurring years, Mr. President. In a particular year the Bureau of Efficiency might have adopted a course that effected a saving of only $1,000 in that year; and yet that saving is reflected through the following years, and year after year. So if we consider the total savings that have been won by operation of the Bureau of Efficiency from year to year since 1914, I believe it fair to estimate that with the very small appropriation that has been required to maintain this bureau as much as $50,000,000 have been saved by reason of the operations of the bureau.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate, since it has determined to do away with the bureau as a unit, will maintain the services by holding the forces of the Bureau of Efficiency together in some department; and if we are going to do that, I see no more efficient place for its operation than in the General Accounting Office.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the compilation of which I have just spoken.

Mr. SMOOT. The total amount, as the Senator said, runs into the millions.

Mr. NYE. Yes, Mr. President; I should like to point out that in those years, dating back to 1914, the expenditures made for general investigations totaled $1,883,432. The savings for the fiscal years only—that is, the particular fiscal years in which the appropriations were made—aggregated $522,080; and then the savings recurring in succeeding years by reason of the same activity amounted to $9,876,674, effecting a total saving of $10,398,754; all of which occurs to me as meriting a word of praise at least for those who have carried on. I think no department of our Federal Government has operated and won so large a return as has the Bureau of Efficiency when that return is compared with the expenditure occasioned by reason of its activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

Summary of expenditures and savings, fiscal years 1914 to 1932

| Fiscal year | Expenditures for general investigations | Savings for fiscal years only | Savings recurring in succeeding years | Total savings |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1914 | $14,007 | $100,000 | $57,000 | $157,000 |
| 1915 | 19,451 | | 38,000 | 38,000 |
| 1916 | 28,227 | | 173,775 | 173,775 |
| 1917 | 48,446 | | 112,700 | 112,700 |
| 1918 | 99,620 | 125,000 | 2,591,000 | 2,716,000 |
| 1919 | 97,032 | | 178,720 | 178,720 |
| 1920 | 98,837 | | 428,000 | 428,000 |
| 1921 | 85,829 | | 230,000 | 230,000 |
| 1922 | 84,749 | | 150,000 | 150,000 |
| 1923 | 103,414 | | 250,000 | 250,000 |
| 1924 | 53,935 | | 234,000 | 234,000 |
| 1925 | 66,429 | | 423,200 | 423,200 |
| 1926 | 108,225 | | 61,490 | 61,490 |
| 1927 | 144,519 | 16,738 | 1,815,180 | 1,831,918 |
| 1928 | 185,137 | 72,800 | 357,920 | 430,720 |
| 1929 | 155,168 | 89,135 | 2,186,984 | 2,276,119 |
| 1930 | 159,502 | 6,960 | 127,515 | 134,475 |
| 1931 | 171,320 | 89,947 | 233,190 | 323,137 |
| 1932 | 159,585 | 21,500 | 228,000 | 249,500 |
| Total | 1,883,432 | 522,080 | 9,876,674 | 10,398,754 |

Mr. NYE. I ask, Mr. President, and earnestly hope, that the Senate may concur in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the proposal of the Senator from North Dakota does not save any money at all, except possibly the salary of the very efficient director of the bureau, Mr. Brown. No one has any fault to find with the way Mr. Brown has directed the bureau.

The Senator from North Dakota proposes to transfer the bureau to the General Accounting Office and place it under the Comptroller General, where it certainly does not belong. It is not the business of the General Accounting Office to determine on methods of efficiency or economy, but merely to carry out the will of Congress in interpreting the laws and seeing that people do not spend money that they have no right to spend.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I would much rather have the Bureau of Efficiency exist as an independent establishment than to have it transferred to the General Accounting Office, where it would serve no purpose at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why, certainly; so would I. It has acted rather well in its present form; but the Bureau of Efficiency was organized before the Bureau of the Budget was established. Now that we have the Bureau of the Budget, whose business it is to see that we are not asked to appropriate more money than is needed, and to cut down things as far as possible, and to effect efficiencies and economies, it seemed to the committee that the best place for this work to be done was by the Bureau of the Budget. Therefore we transferred the files, and so forth, to the Bureau of the Budget.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota not only does not save any money but places the bureau where it has no business to be, namely, in the General Accounting Office.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not very clear as to the language of this amendment. As I gather from what has been said in behalf of it here, the design is wholly to abolish and eliminate the Bureau of Efficiency. It no longer shall exist. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. All right. Now, with the personnel will go the obligation to perform the duties. That seems to be perfectly obvious. The amendment, however, reads that the bureau is abolished—and the President is authorized to designate another officer to serve in place of the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency on any board, commission, or other agency of which the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency is now a member.

That language I am not clear about.

Mr. BINGHAM. I can explain that to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BINGHAM. Under various laws there is made a member of a board or of another agency, ex officio, the Director of the Bureau of Efficiency. Naturally, if we abolish the bureau and the directorship, that position on any particular agency or commission or board would be vacant, and no one would have any authority to fill it. The amendment gives the President the right to designate any officer of the Government as the proper person, in his opinion, to fill that ex officio place on some commission or board.

Mr. JOHNSON. But what I do not exactly comprehend is this: If the bureau is at an end, and if the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency is no longer of any use, why is it necessary to designate another officer to fill his particular place upon various boards?

Mr. BINGHAM. The President might very well designate the Director of the Budget to do the work on these boards.

Mr. JOHNSON. Could he appoint another official as a sort of bureau of efficiency, too? He has the right here to designate another officer to serve in place of the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, and the peculiar language rather nonplussed me. That is the reason for the query that I made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Bureau of Efficiency was created as an independent body, so that no department of our Government should have any power whatever over it. It was an independent agency, with authority to go into the departments of the Government and investigate their operation. Wherever its officials learned of waste, or wherever they learned that a consolidation of activities of our Government could be made without interfering with the efficiency of the work, it was to be done, and they had the authority and power to do it.

If the Senate desires now to abolish the bureau, it means the loss of millions upon millions of dollars. They have saved millions of dollars in the past, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I will yield just as soon as I finish this sentence. The bureau has saved millions and millions of dollars. It has been an independent body. It goes into the departments to make the examinations; and I know whereof I speak when I say that the amount of money that has been saved by the recommendations of the Bureau of Efficiency in better organization and the elimination of duplication of activities in the Government have been something that I hardly thought the Bureau of Efficiency would be able to do.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRATTON. Speaking not facetiously but seriously, I did not know that we had ever done away with duplication in any department.

Mr. SMOOT. I can tell the Senator, by going over and getting the list, that many, many, many of them have been done away with.

Mr. BRATTON. I should like to see the list.

Mr. SMOOT. There are a great many of them, Mr. President. Duplication in different departments doing the same class of work has been eliminated, and millions of dollars have been saved, through the activities of the Bureau of Efficiency. If the Senate is going to do anything along this line, however, abolish them entirely as an independent body. Do not put them under the jurisdiction of some other activity of our Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. How long have they been in operation?

Mr. SMOOT. I think 22 years, or 20; I forget which.

Mr. NYE. Since 1914.

Mr. NORRIS. Have they succeeded in eliminating the waste and the duplication that it is claimed exists now?

Mr. SMOOT. Not entirely, but a great deal of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Why have they not done it? Could they not eliminate these bureaus or consolidate them in less than 20 years of study?

Mr. SMOOT. I can tell the Senator that they have abolished certain activities of the Government; and then in some cases in the very next appropriation bill that would pass, money would be appropriated for the very purpose they had just succeeded in having discontinued.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, no good has been accomplished by their work.

Mr. SMOOT. That has not been true in all cases. I say, there are a few of those cases. As I say, I prefer to have the bureau abolished than to try to put it under the control of some other agency of our Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on section 15 as modified and amended.

The section as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to the fact that we have now reached that portion of the bill in which he is particularly interested, namely, sections 16, 17, and 18. I believe he has an amendment to offer at this point, which is in order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, several days ago I had an amendment printed proposing to strike out sections 16, 17, and 18. I do not know whether Senators have given attention to the amendment or not, or whether they have given critical attention to sections 16, 17, and 18. If they have, I am inclined to believe they would agree to my amendment without discussion.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say that I have received from the Secretary of the Treasury a very vigorous protest against putting two of these sections into effect on the ground of the probable expense to the Government. The Economy Committee have considered the matter quite carefully since the original report to the Committee on Appropriations, and I think I am within my rights in saying that the committee are perfectly willing to see these sections stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma offer the amendment?

Mr. GORE. I offer the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 79, beginning with line 18, section 16, the Senator from Oklahoma proposes to strike out through line 8, on page 82, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. —. Section 319 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is repealed as of June 30, 1932; and the rate of interest to be allowed upon judgments against the United States and overpayments in respect of internal-revenue taxes shall be the rate applicable thereto prior to the enactment of section 319 of such act.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has just indicated, I believe, that the Secretary of the Treasury is not adverse to this amendment, and is not opposed to the striking out of these sections 16, 17, and 18. I may say that the amendment which I have offered has the approval of the committee on taxation of the American Bar Association.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will accept as a part of the amendment, and, if not, I should like to offer it as an amendment to the amendment, a provision that was suggested by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] in regard to tax refunds, at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma to insert the following:

Provided further, That no refund in excess of $20,000 shall be paid until the determination by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the overpayment has been transmitted to and approved by the United States Board of Tax Appeals, under such rules as it may prescribe, and the commissioner shall disallow the part thereof not so approved.

I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the amendment is offered in exactly the form in which he suggested it to me.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. REED. While the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee seems to me to be all right, yet I think I should in candor say that it is very sternly opposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and it hardly seems fair to act on it in his absence.

I would suggest that the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, with which I am in warm sympathy, should be adopted first, and that then the Senator from Tennessee should offer his amendment as a separate section.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Tennessee will do what the Senator from Pennsylvania suggests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Oklahoma to modify his amendment?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I would rather not take that course. I shall not resist the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, whether offered as an amendment to my amendment or as an independent section, as suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which latter, I think, would be the preferable course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator allow me to offer it as an amendment to his amendment? May I ask the Chair whether it would be in order as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Oklahoma will yield to me, I will just offer it as an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. REED. Then, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Brookhart | Couzens | Gore |
| Austin | Bulkley | Cutting | Grammer |
| Bailey | Bulow | Dale | Hale |

| Moses | Robinson, Ind. | Tydings | |

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I understood the chairman of the Economy Committee to say that, so far as sections 17 and 18 are concerned, the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma is accepted, thereby eliminating those two sections.

Turning to section 16 of the bill, being the other section involved in the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, the original economy act, approved June 30, 1932, contained this provision:

SEC. 319. Hereafter the rate of interest to be allowed or paid shall be 4 per cent per annum whenever interest is allowed by law upon any judgment of whatsoever character against the United States and/or upon any overpayment in respect of any internal-revenue tax. All laws or parts of laws in so far as inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

It will be noted, Mr. President, that law provided that "hereafter the rate of interest to be allowed or paid * * * upon any judgment * * * and/or upon any overpayment" of taxes shall be 4 per cent.

Let me direct attention to section 16 of the pending bill, reading as follows:

SEC. 16. Section 319 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, shall not apply to any judgment rendered against the United States prior to July 1, 1932, and thereafter becoming final. Appropriations available for payment of such judgments rendered prior to July 1, 1932, as determined by the Comptroller General of the United States, shall be available for payment of interest thereon accordingly at the rate applicable at the time the judgment was rendered.

The difficulty was that in interpreting the original economy act the Comptroller General held that although judgment was rendered prior to June 30, 1932, and the case was affirmed afterwards or the time for payment arrived afterwards, the rate was reduced to 4 per cent, thereby injecting a retroactive phase into the law. Section 16 simply takes out of the law that retroactive phase and allows payment of all judgments rendered prior to June 30, 1932, on the basis of the interest specified in the judgment or law then in force.

Does not the Senator from Oklahoma think that section should stand?

Mr. GORE. I would rather see the proposition submitted by the Senator attached to my amendment as an amendment, because if the section stands as written it would still leave refunds payable on the basis of 4 per cent where allowed prior to June 30 last.

Mr. BRATTON. Then let me suggest to the Senator that after the word "judgment" we insert the words "except for refund of taxes." Then the section would read:

Section 319 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, shall not apply to any judgment, except for refund of taxes, rendered against the United States prior to July 1, 1932, and thereafter becoming final.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair understand. According to the print of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma now before the Chair, the Senator from New Mexico is proposing more of a change than he has indicated by his words.

Mr. BRATTON. The amendment I suggest is to the committee text, and is not to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, if the amendment is applicable to sections 16, 17, and 18, as I understand it to be, I would offer no objection to it.

Mr. BRATTON. Then the chairman desires to accept the amendment as to all three sections?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is what I endeavored to state.

Mr. BRATTON. And allow the retroactive interpretation of the original act to continue?

Mr. BINGHAM. Having talked it over with the Senator from Oklahoma, I felt there was great justice in the position he took, and did not think the committee would object to his position.

Mr. BRATTON. Very well; if the chairman has given the matter study, which I confess I have not done recently, I shall yield to his judgment in the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Therefore the question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I think the Chair is in error. I offered an amendment, and the Senator from Tennessee offered an amendment to my amendment. That is the parliamentary status.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then, in the first place the question is whether the Senator from Oklahoma accepts the proposed amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to his amendment.

Mr. GORE. Certainly, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee in the form in which he has now presented it. I should like to take advantage of this occasion to say that I voted against the motion to suspend the rule some two or three weeks ago when the Senator from Tennessee offered an amendment upon the same subject to provide that claims for refunds should be sent to the joint committee and tried de novo. The appropriation bill was vetoed on the ground of the constitutionality of that provision. I do not think the amendment now offered is subject to the ground that it is unconstitutional; so I have no objection to it on any ground.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Chair to understand that the Senator from Oklahoma, who has control of the language of his amendment, accepts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GORE. I have been sparring for the moment to see whether it was going to lead us into a row or not. If it will not, I shall interpose no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment as amended by the proposal of the Senator from Tennessee, which will be stated for the information of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope it will be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Oklahoma offers the following amendment: Strike out sections 16, 17, and 18 as printed in the bill and insert:

Section 319 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is repealed as of June 30, 1932; and the rate of interest to be allowed upon judgments against the United States and overpayments in respect of internal-revenue taxes shall be the rate applicable thereto prior to the enactment of section 319 of such act.

The Senator from Tennessee offers the following modification:

Provided, That no refund in excess of $20,000 shall be paid until the determination by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the overpayment has been transmitted to and approved by the United States Board of Tax Appeals, under such rules as it may prescribe; and the commissioner shall disallow the part thereof not so approved.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am not going to offer any objection to the McKellar amendment because I think we want to expedite the matter, and I understand the conferees will give consideration to the question of letting the approval go to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation which is now handling the matter.

In this connection may I say that that joint committee of the Senate and House, which has a very efficient staff, had a meeting last week. We propose to have a meeting at least once a month and possibly twice a month. We are going to look into every one of these propositions. I am very glad the amount has been cut down from $75,000 to $20,000.

With that explanation I am going to offer no objection to the amendment as now drawn, that a refund must receive the approval of the Board of Tax Appeals, although I think that would be a very bad proposition if enacted into law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Oklahoma to have accepted the proposal of the Senator from Tennessee, and, therefore, the question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma as modified by the proposal of the Senator from Tennessee. [Putting the question.] The amendment as modified is agreed to. This title is still open to amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask to turn to page 82, section 19, and I desire to move, in line 11, that "June 30, 1933," be changed to "June 30, 1934"; that, in line 18, the word "or" be omitted; and, in line 19, after the words "public debt," there be inserted "or other indefinite appropriations under the public debt service," this at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to carry out the wishes of the committee that appropriations for the sinking fund and public debt service be eliminated from this section.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator state the amendment again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the clerk state it for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, line 19, strike out "June 30, 1933," and insert "June 30, 1934"; in line 18, strike out the word "or"; and in line 19, after the words "public debt," insert "or other indefinite appropriations under the public debt service."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, do I understand that that strikes out the reference to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and does not interfere in any way with the Federal Board of Vocational Education future appropriations after 1934?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit us to adopt the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, then we will take up the question in which the Senator is interested with regard to vocational education. That does not arise in this connection, except that 1933 is changed to 1934.

Mr. DAVIS. That means that each year after 1934 the Federal Board of Vocational Education will have to get an appropriation for each following year?

Mr. BINGHAM. That would be the meaning of the section along with a great many other appropriations of a similar nature; but will not the Senator permit us to adopt the pending amendment and then we will come to his matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before we go to the vocational-education item, I have an amendment to propose in line 19, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers the following amendment:

In section 19 of the committee print, insert after the first comma, in line 19, page 82, the following: "or to stoppages, fines, forfeitures, and other moneys or funds appropriated by section 4813, Revised Statutes, for the support of the Soldiers' Home."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word of explanation. The Soldiers' Home is not supported by regular appropriations; but under the Revised Statutes from all stoppages or fines adjudged against soldiers by sentences of courts-martial, and all estates of soldiers who have died and the estates remain unclaimed for three years, funds are derived for the support of the Soldiers' Home. It is probable that the language of the amendment as the committee has reported it would not affect the Soldiers' Home, but in order to avoid any doubt about it I have been asked by the authorities of the Soldiers' Home to present this amendment. I take it, the committee has no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, line 19, strike out all of the section after the word "debt" and insert "or to appropriations of any funds derived from assessments on banks."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the amendment will have to be inserted after the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania just adopted, instead of at the point referred to by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. It should be to strike out after the word "services," then.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I must make the point of order that the Senate has just adopted an amendment I proposed, which would be stricken out by that proposal.

Mr. BYRNES. My understanding was that it was the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania the last word of which is "services."

Mr. REED. No; the last words of my amendment were "Soldiers' Home."

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator from Pennsylvania offered an amendment following the word "debt." The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina should follow the word "services," because in the first amendment proposed by the committee other words were inserted which made it necessary that his amendment should follow the word "services."

Mr. REED. I had it expressed to follow the first comma, so that whatever the Senator has put in ahead of the comma would precede my amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment previously adopted would cause the Senator's amendment to follow the word "services," and I think my amendment then should follow the word "home" in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. If the Senator proposes that, it would clearly be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] to the fact that the words in the last two lines referring to the appropriation for vocational education have been stricken out.

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. I offer the amendment which I filed on January 13, and send it to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, line 19, beginning with the word "and," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 20 and 21 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and shall not apply to the permanent annual appropriations for vocational education, colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, or cooperative agricultural extension work."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, by the amendment which I offered and which was adopted the language to which he refers has been stricken from the section. Of course, that part of the Senator's amendment which seeks to add the direction that these items should not be included would be pertinent, but I call his attention to the fact that the words which he moves to strike out already have been stricken out.

Mr. AUSTIN. That being so, I perfect my proposed amendment by striking from it the words that are duplicated in the amendment suggested by the Senator from South Carolina and already adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk did not catch the modification of the amendment by the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that in the last amendment adopted there was a clause which struck out the same words which my proposed amendment would strike out; that is, in lines 19, 20, and 21, after the word "debt." Now, therefore, I wish to perfect my amendment by striking out of the amendment that is printed that direction to strike out. Is that clear?

Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, what the Senator from Vermont wants to do is to add some language to the bill; he does not want to strike out anything?

Mr. BYRNES. After the word "banks," which is the last word of the amendment which has been adopted, to add the language that the Senator has offered.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "banks," in the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

and shall not apply to the permanent annual appropriations for vocational education, colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, or cooperative agricultural extension work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the paragraph, as amended.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I want to say that this proposed amendment contemplates the same objective as that sought by the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. I speak of this because I know that many Senators have received communications relating to the so-called Norbeck amendment, which proposed to strike out certain words so as to leave vocational education free from the limitation of this provision.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is broad enough to include the amendment I originally offered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator has added agricultural colleges, while my amendment covers vocational training only.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. I like the Senator's amendment very well; I think it is to the point and will be very helpful. I regard the broader amendment as an absolute necessity.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in the proposal contained in the committee amendment, the objectionable thing about section 19 from our viewpoint is that it undertakes to change the law so that permanent appropriations for the support of agricultural colleges, the agricultural extension service, and vocational education shall become annual appropriations. On its face that seems to be an innocent proposal, and when it is suggested that its purpose is to have the Appropriations Committee consider these items annually it has plausibility, but when it is considered as a measure of economy one must realize that it deals with general legislation of a very precise and scientific character.

The scheme of cooperative education along the lines of agriculture and the mechanic arts was designed to aid boys and girls who are not so situated in life that they may enjoy high-school education, academy education, or higher education; boys and girls who must work at the same time they are supposed to be in regular schools at regular hours. When we realize that the objective of these measures, embracing the Morrill law, the so-called Smith-Lever Act, and the so-called Smith-Hughes Act, was to train the young folks of our country to be better qualified to support themselves and to support their Government, then we understand that the objective is most beneficent and should have an especially strong appeal to us in a time of distress like the present. In other words, there is no economy in taking away from young men and young women of this country the means of obtaining an education which otherwise they could not possibly enjoy.

Recent surveys by competent authority demonstrate that 9,500,000 boys and girls who ordinarily find the means of education in high schools and other regularly established schools are denied the opportunity because States and local communities are no longer able to maintain them. When we realize that such a condition, together with the poverty of individuals, operates to render more people unemployed and less competent to be employed, then we know that any measure that would interfere with the cooperative education in which the Federal Government and the State governments combine is not economy but is extravagance. So the provision in the bill is wrong because of its main objective; it is not a measure of economy at all, but is, we claim, a measure of extravagance.

There is, however, a further reason why these appropriations should not be changed from a permanent to an annual basis. In order to insure the efficient administration of these funds and the execution of the purpose intended by their appropriation, Congress created a very delicate and specific piece of machinery, so that the States and local communities could be coordinated with the Federal Government, and so that we would not be appropriating more than necessary and the States would be appropriating sufficient to perform this service.

It will be remembered that the legislatures in many of the States meet biennially, and I understand that the Legislature of the State of Alabama holds its session only once in four years. If these funds are to be appropriated annually and are not to have that stability and permanence which the original design of the plan contemplated, then every odd year the States will not be able to know what funds they are going to receive from the Federal Government because the Federal Government will not have appropriated those funds. So the States will be unable to match the funds as they must do as a condition precedent to enjoying the appropriation. In other words, the whole plan of cooperation between the States and the Federal Government depends upon a permanent appropriation.

The design is carried beyond the legislatures of the States, and, in order to have the scheme function as was contemplated in the minds of the great statesmen who planned to educate the less fortunate children of our States in this manner, communities must cooperate, and boards of education have to be established to coordinate all the work in the several branches of the plan in the various villages and hamlets throughout the States. We reach rural communities in that way; we reach industrial towns in that manner. We find large industries affording evening schools in their plants for the purpose of providing industrial education. We find teachers who are willing to enter into contracts to carry on this work because they have some assurance of stability in that employment. Take away that stability, take away the possibility of planning for a long time, and this whole scheme is ruined.

Furthermore, it is a very inexpedient thing to do. It is wrong in policy; it is not economical; it is destructive; but we say it is also entirely inexpedient. The law which sets up this appropriation as a permanent fund provides that there shall be reported annually by the various State treasurers the amount of money expended under these laws, the details and the manner of its disbursement, and then here in Washington by several of our departments such reports are passed upon, until finally a report is submitted to Congress. The condition upon which any State shall receive aid and cooperation under these funds is that it has made that annual report.

Let me call attention to the provision in the Smith-Hughes Act, which is the vocational-education plan, and which involves altogether $6,663,160, and it will be seen to what I refer:

> On or before the 1st day of January in each year the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury each State which has accepted the provisions of this act and complied therewith, certifying the amounts which each State is entitled to receive under the provisions of this act.

Mr. President, it can be clearly seen that when Congress is sitting here in an off year for a State—a year in which a State does not hold a session of its legislature—this plan is entirely unworkable.

In other words, the amendment seems ill-advised because it does not synchronize with the legislation creating these funds; and boldly, by a stroke, to change these funds from permanent funds into annual appropriations without an interchange in this machinery which has been worked out so carefully, and in such detail, creates havoc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Vermont has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I continue in the time allotted on the bill itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Vermont has not spoken on the bill. The Senator is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I last mentioned the Smith-Hughes Act. The Smith-Lever Act contained a similar provision. Both of these measures require that the moneys expended under these acts shall be matched by the States.

Mr. President, I wish to be thoroughly understood as being in entire harmony with all plans for economy, both by the Federal Government and by our States. I have sometimes felt that these various schemes requiring States to match Federal funds have a tendency to pull our States into a more expensive course—it may be truly an economic course in the long run, but it puts a greater burden upon the States—than otherwise would be assumed if it were not for these matched funds. So I would not be opposed to having these noble endeavors cut somewhat to fit the condition of depression in this country; and I am perfectly confident that those who are directly in charge of the administration of these funds in agricultural colleges and in these extension services and vocational educational schools would be perfectly willing to have economy practiced upon them as it is practiced in this Congress upon all other activities. I believe the States probably would welcome such a proceeding; so it would not be amiss at all, as a matter of actual economy here, if the appropriations for agricultural colleges and for agricultural extension service were cut accordingly as other activities of this character have been cut heretofore, and that that cut should be in effect so long as the various other appropriations of the Government suffer a horizontal cut.

I mention this because I would not be understood as standing here and resisting a measure of actual economy; but what I urge for the adoption of this amendment is that the measure at which it is aimed accomplishes no economy whatever, and, on the other hand, adds a considerable burden.

Picture the situation with that measure passed, changing these appropriations into annual appropriations, and what will we have here? Those who are so busily engaged in administering these funds out on the mountain sides of our States and in the plains will be obliged to come away from that useful service and come down here to Congress annually to protect their interests, wasting the money which otherwise could be actually applied to the objective of those who conceived these plans.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator understand that when this plan was inaugurated by wise men, as he denominated them, it was contemplated that it should be something in perpetuity?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. KING. My understanding was that it was an experiment, and that finally the States would see the benefit of it, if it had any benefit—and doubtless it has—and they would then assume the responsibility. They did not believe that a policy which led to the matching by the Federal Government of State activities, or vice versa, would, in the long run, make for the benefit of the country.

Mr. AUSTIN. I took some pains to examine the old RECORDS in order to ascertain the attitude of legislators and educators on this subject; and it gives me great pleasure to refer to the comments of a man whose wisdom and experience in both activities I very much depend upon. I have great confidence in his judgment. I refer to the remarks of the then Representative FESS, made in the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, volume 54, page 6, pages 81 and 82:

> There are those who think that vocational training should be left to the States. It is argued that it is not a national question. Mr. Speaker, I have stated the general grounds for this new step in our education, and I feel sure every ground argues it a national import. There are States in this Union in which this education would be important but which could not successfully alone carry it on, due to the already overburden of caring for general education. There are States with such widely varying resources that an education to develop them would be a national asset. Labor is so volatile, so mobile that a worker trained in one State is quite likely to devote his energies in other States. A very large per cent of our citizens live in communities other than those in which they were born. In other words, burdens required to train a worker may not be compensated by that worker remaining in the State which assumed the burdens; he may operate in various States; his service is national and his training should be assisted by the Nation. The problem of vocational training frequently takes on a national phase, not only in its comprehensiveness but in its character. The size of the problem is commensurate with the national importance of its proper solution.

And at another point in the RECORD, Representative FESS made this statement:

> Vocational education invites a field of expert study and investigation. We have the rarest facilities here in various Government agencies to conduct these investigations. They can not be made by the States. They can be and should be made by the Nation. In this way the problem can be studied not only as a national one but in all its relations to the various States, with their varied conditions.
> The problem is peculiarly national, and while the Nation will not supersede the State in its school system, it must assist the State to reach the results needed and only possible through national assistance.

I interpret that to be the language of a statesman dealing with a fundamental problem which reaches into the future and has an objective which justified making the appropriation for that service a permanent one.

There is nothing in this act that prevents the reduction of the amount of these appropriations at any time that Congress sees fit to make the reduction, and it might see fit to do so this year as it did last year with one of these funds—that is, the one devoted to vocational education; and I am not opposed to that. The thing that I am opposed to is taking from the roll of permanent appropriations these particular things which seem to me a sound, stable basis for planning, because we are dealing with thousands of children; we are dealing with thousands of teachers; and I will ask how we could hope to maintain an educational system of this character, which requires coordination of small villages with States and with the Nation, without some sure understanding as to what the prospect for years would be.

There is another thing about this:

These plans—the Morrill Act, the Smith-Lever Act, and the Smith-Hughes Act—all hold out a continuing representation to the public of the United States to which they reacted through great philanthropists. The gift of those original lands—30,000 acres for every Representative and Senator that a State had in Congress in 1860—as a permanent foundation for an agricultural college, and the appropriation of $50,000 annually as a permanent appropriation, have meant to philanthropists and educators the nucleus for a development in which they were willing to cooperate, because they believed that it was permanent. The whole theory of education necessarily depends upon permanence; and it will be disastrous if we change these appropriations into annual appropriations that call for a condition where even people from small communities will be obliged to watch constantly to see whether Congress is going to afford to them the financial sinews of their lives.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HATFIELD. How long has the policy been in operation?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Smith-Hughes Act was passed in the Sixty-fourth Congress; the Smith-Lever Act in the Sixty-third Congress; the Morrill law in 1860. It was amended in 1890, and then again in 1907. They have all been in operation a long enough time to establish the fact that they are of wonderful service to this Nation.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. Surely long enough to establish a permanency in the administration of such a law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield first to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, as I understand, there are millions of dollars invested in schoolhouses, and they have recruited practically a million and three-quarters of students, and there are some 25,000 teachers engaged in this work.

Mr. AUSTIN. Thirty thousand.

Mr. DAVIS. Thirty thousand, I should say.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. AUSTIN. Very gladly.

Mr. KING. The Senator recalls that a few days ago, when there was some criticism of the Appropriations Committee because of its failure to introduce economies and its failure to report bills with sufficient reductions, the reply was made that there were so many permanent continuing appropriations, and the Appropriations Committee had no alternative than to report in the bills these continuing appropriations.

It seemed to me that the attitude of the committee was right and that Congress is to blame for there being so many of these continuing appropriations. It seems to me that these continuing appropriations are a handicap upon Congress, certainly upon the Committee on Appropriations. We bind and chain the Committee on Appropriations. We commit ourselves to appropriations for an indefinite period, though the receipt of income or changes in our economic and cultural situation might call for material changes in some of the instrumentalities and agencies in which the Federal Government and the States cooperate.

Does not the Senator think, without reference to this particular proposition, that it would be much wiser if we would cut out many of these indefinite and continuing appropriations, so that we would not be hampered every year by having the Committee on Appropriations when it meets being compelled to put into the appropriation measures appropriations which practically go back 10 or 15 years for their genesis?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I very much admire the earnestness of the Senator from Utah to guard the Treasury of this country, and I sympathize with him in that effort. I believe I am as earnest in the desire to economize as he is, and having that view of the matter, I have to answer his question, no; these appropriations are not cut by this measure. Section 19 does not reduce the appropriations one cent. It adds the expense of having these people come here to Washington to secure appropriations annually.

More than that, Mr. President, it throws the whole plan out of joint. It does not go at the modification of a general law in an intelligent way and adapt the change to the machine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, with a great deal the Senator from Vermont has expressed I concur. I realize the value and the importance of these appropriations, and there is no desire on the part of the committee to strike out any of them or do away with the authorizations.

The Senator objects that if we do away with the permanent requirement, then, forsooth, the people interested have to come to Washington and ask that we pass their regular appropriations.

Mr. President, eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and history shows that those institutions which are so endowed that they never have to ask for any money invariably become corrupt in a length of time.

The committee woke up one day to the astonishing discovery that every year the Government is spending money under permanent appropriations which the Congress has not considered for years. We did not realize the money was actually going out. It was not included in the totals of any particular appropriation bill. We were told the Department of Agriculture spent so many million dollars; that was in the regular annual appropriation bill. We did not recall that they also spent $3,000,000 for meat inspection through the Bureau of Animal Industry. We had forgotten that. When the act providing for that was passed, many years ago, it was believed that the packers would oppose that inspection and, therefore, that there should be imbedded in the permanent law a provision for $3,000,000 a year for animal inspection, so that those people interested in pure food would not have to come here every year and ask for that money.

In the course of time that inspection increased, and now in the agricultural appropriation bill Senators will see an appropriation of something over $2,000,000 for animal inspection, and they think that is all we spend on that activity. They do not realize that imbedded in the permanent law is provision for an additional $3,000,000.

Mr. President, all the committee wanted to do in its recommending was to bring before the Congress every year all of the appropriations on which the Government is spending its money, so that we may know, for instance, that we are spending $18,000 on Coos Bay wagon-road grant, of which I venture to say scarcely anyone in the sound of my voice heard. We have spent that money year after year without knowing we were spending it at all.

Furthermore, we discovered that we were spending on the operation and care of canals and other works of navigation $7,695,000, without a dollar of it being reported in the portion of the War Department appropriation bill covering rivers and harbors.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. The two interesting illustrations to which the Senator just called attention are not included within the purview of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, who has just presented his proposal on the floor. Am I not right in that?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is news to me.

Mr. STEIWER. I think there is no controversy about matters of the kind to which the Senator from Connecticut has just now alluded.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is mistaken, because the section reads, "All laws providing for permanent annual appropriations (whether specific or indefinite)."

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator will permit me, of course, the matters to which the Senator has alluded are included in the amendment of the committee under section 19; but they are not included in the proposal of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that; I am merely giving the reasons why the committee proposes this action.

We discovered that there were several hundred laws which had been passed during the past 150 years; but very few, scarcely any that I can recall within the past seven or eight years, calling for annual appropriations, without having to come through the Budget or through the Committee on Appropriations. In previous years it was the custom to pass a bill appropriating so much money each year, but now when such a proposal comes on the floor invariably some one asks that the language be changed to read "authorized to be appropriated."

What the Senator from Vermont proposes to do now is to provide that the money appropriated to the Department of Agriculture and to the Department of the Interior for the Federal Board of Vocational Education, more than $15,000,000, which we appropriate each year, and which we probably will continue to appropriate, should not be brought to our attention in the annual appropriation bills, but should remain concealed, so the people who enjoy the benefit of that legislation need not have to come to Washington each year and ask us to make the appropriation.

It seemed to the committee that it was in the interest of good business that every dollar appropriated for these worthy purposes should be called to our attention every year by the Budget, referring to the law authorizing the appropriation, not reducing it, but calling to our attention the fact that that was what we were spending, so that we and the taxpayers we represent might know what we were spending and not be spending it in the dark.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understand that if section 19 is enacted there will be no change made thereby in any appropriation of any permanent character. It merely will permit the Congress each year to pass upon those appropriations which are now permanent appropriations and not subject to annual study and review?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is not proposed to change the authorizations at all.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So it is not a question of economy; it is a question of permitting the Congress, if it desires, to exercise economy, but it need not do so unless it chooses.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator well knows that no business concern in the world would permit its annual statement of receipts and expenditures to conceal, by making no reference to, a lot of expenditures which had been authorized to go on year after year. This is an effort to bring to our minds the money we are spending.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It seems to me this is a good time to take the action.

Mr. BINGHAM. This provision is that the amounts now provided in such laws shall not be exceeded, but the amounts which are provided by the authorizations are to remain as before. If these appropriations are of so little general value, if they are of so little real public interest, that they can not stand annual revision by the Budget and the Congress, they ought to be repealed. But we do not propose to repeal them. We merely ask that those proposing them come before the Congress each year and present their case.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The only result would be to present to the American taxpayers a picture which would show them for what purpose their taxes are being spent.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It occurs to me that there is analogy in banking to the situation which the Senator brings to the attention of the Senate. It used to be a general practice to put notes in the form of demand notes in banks so that they would run on indefinitely without often coming to the attention of the board of directors. The banking authorities of the country found it necessary to issue very stringent instructions to the banks requiring that demand notes be superseded by time notes so as to bring them under periodical review. I think that is precisely the situation.

Mr. BINGHAM. The analogy is perfect. Before I take my seat—and I do not desire to prolong the debate—may I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Budget Director, when invited by the committee to express his opinion in regard to this provision, said:

> It would seem to me that all of the permament specific appropriations could, with benefit, be repealed; and those whose continuance must be provided for, handled on an annual appropriation basis.

That is all the committee proposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senators defending the position of the committee utterly fail to recognize the vital point involved in this proposition, namely, that the educational activities involved are a joint enterprise carried on by the States, the counties, the cities, and the Federal Government. It has taken years to establish the set-up. The moment the continuity of these appropriations is jeopardized, the whole system will be destroyed, and we might just as well face the issue.

This is a flank attack upon these educational enterprises which have been carried on and have been a part of our national policy. At the very time when the educational institutions of this Nation are in grave danger because of ever-diminishing resources of the localities, the States, and the counties, it is proposed to strike a left-handed blow at the splendid work which has been done under these three permanent provisions for appropriations for educational purposes.

Mr. President, there is another very important point in the situation. To-day, with millions of persons unemployed in the United States, this is one of the few great countries of the world which has not recognized the importance of providing educational advantages to those who are thus forced to remain idle. In most of the countries the authorities have recognized that in order to maintain morale it is necessary to expand the educational opportunities offered to the adult instead of to curtail them.

The Senator from Connecticut makes a very plausible argument, in which he mentioned some appropriations for canals and for something that has to do with Coos Bay. I know nothing about those permanent appropriations, but they have no bearing upon this argument. The question Senators should decide to-night is whether or not by indirection they propose to repeal the provisions for the establishment of the agricultural colleges and assistance in their support by the Federal Government, for the establishment of the agricultural extension service and assistance for its support by the Federal Government, and for the establishment of vocational education and its support, in part, by the Federal Government. If section 19 is adopted without the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, Senators will have voted to cut off these activities so essential during this critical period.

Mr. President, Senators are familiar with the machinery of State government. Many of them have been governors of their respective States. They know full well that in practice, unless a State government may know definitely the amount of money which is to be provided by the Federal Government in carrying out such a joint, cooperative enterprise, it is impossible for the State to budget its share of the expenditure, and in those States where legislatures meet less often than once every two years it will be a virtual impossibility, unless a special session of the legislature be called, to treat with this one particular problem.

Furthermore, I want to point out to the Senate that in good faith the States, joining this partnership with the Federal Government to carry on this educational work, have appropriated money for buildings and made contracts with teachers which are predicated upon the continuation of support, in part, by the Federal Government. The amendment would jeopardize the continuity of those appropriations, and the States would be confronted with the possibility that if the appropriation is to be upon a basis where it has to be ratified every two years by Congress the support will be cut off at some future time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DICKINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. It is also true that the States were induced to enter into this enterprise of vocational education and the other activities indicated, and it is also true that the States, having entered into those enterprises, spent a good deal of money in anticipation of the continuance of the appropriations permanently or through the period of years fixed in the several acts. If they must come back to the Congress each year, with the uncertainty involved in congressional action, the whole program may be entirely disrupted. It is an act of bad faith upon the part of the Congress to fix an appropriation over a series of years of so many dollars and ask the States to match the appropriation, ask the States to spend their money, and have the States do it, and then, in an indirect way, under cover, decline to carry on those appropriations.

I believe that most of the Senators who are opposing the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] are Senators who originally were opposed to every feature of those measures, or the principle involved in the measure. It is nothing less than an act of bad faith to induce the States by an appropriation specifying a given amount to be made annually over a definite period of years, and then subsequently to have the Congress in an indirect way like this, when the program is yet in progress, to say, "You must come back every year and see if Congress wants to continue it."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator from Georgia for his very succinct statement of the question at issue. Of course, everyone familiar with the attitude of the chairman of the Economy Committee knows he has fought tooth and toe nail against every cooperative enterprise proposed to be undertaken by the several States and the Federal Government. I remember one occasion when he conducted a very effective filibuster against a proposal for a cooperative enterprise in another field.

Mr. President, I am not afraid to face the issue when it is stripped of its economy mask. If Senators want to repeal these laws, let them bring in a proposal to do it and let us have the chance to face the issue on its merits. But it is not fair to attempt to hamstring and destroy these three great educational projects by making the appropriations contingent on action by Congress every two years. Therefore, Mr. President, I trust that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont will prevail.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I agree very strongly with what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] just stated in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I have listened carefully to the able and forceful statements of the Senator from Vermont. He has presented this case most convincingly, and I fully agree with him. I also commend the able and interesting statements of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], also that of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and I feel that they have been clearly and forcefully stated. The Congress would be breaking faith if it does otherwise than to accept the amendment.

Let me read a letter that has come to me from the president of the University of Nevada, Dr. Walter A. Clark, a very able economist and scholar, as well as a distinguished and able educator and executive. He touches upon this matter in a very clear form. A somewhat similar statement could be made by the president of any of a number of other universities. I think President Clark states the situation in a very clear manner. It applies to other States equally as well. He wrote me as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF NEVADA,
Reno, Nev., January 17, 1933.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I know that Director Creel has already wired you with reference to section 19 as proposed by Senate committee amendment to the appropriation bill for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, H. R. 13520.

The effect of this amended section 19, as originally proposed, would be to remove several standing appropriations of which our University of Nevada has been the recipient. Particularly the Morrill fund standing appropriation of $50,000 a year and the standing appropriation under the Smith-Lever Act for agricultural extension. The amendment does not propose absolutely to do away with these grants, but it does propose, from and after June 30, 1933, to take away the permanent character of these appropriations and thereby make them hazardous and uncertain items of the appropriation bill.

So far as the Morrill fund grant is concerned, it is the standing annual grant made to all the colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts in each State which has such a college. It is the very important continuing Federal grant in keeping with the splendid Federal plan started by the Morrill Act of 1862, and continued with supplemental acts, which has built up in nearly all the States of the Union these colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts. In the large and wealthy States this $50,000 a year would be a real loss to the college of agriculture and mechanic arts, but would not be a heavy proportional loss because of their already large sums available for annual use. In the less wealthy States and in the small colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts this $50,000 is a much higher proportion and such institutions would be seriously crippled. Our institution would probably be more crippled than any other in the country, since the $50,000 annual Federal Morrill grant is between 15 and 20 per cent of the entire available money for the operation of our University of Nevada. The annulment of this grant, particularly at this crisis time for Nevada, would very nearly put the university out of commission. The change of this grant from its present permanent status to an annual status would mean for our university annually very serious hazard.

You will have in mind, too, I hope, that it is in connection with the Morrill Act establishments that the military training courses have been an obligation of the land-grant colleges. I believe that if this Morrill $50,000 grant were to be annulled the whole Reserve Officers' Training Corps, important branch of the national-defense plan, would be seriously jeopardized.

The other standing fund which I understand to be imperiled by this proposed amendment is the fund for the support of the Smith-Lever work. In my judgment, the work done under the Smith-Lever Act in the various States, much of it recently done in effective cooperation with the State farm bureau organizations, is some of the best and most important educational work that is being done in the world.

It would be a great pity if at the call of economy, in this stressful hour for the Nation and the world, the Government should withdraw from its long standing, continuing pledge of support to the splendid service work of the land-grant colleges of the country, and from the very remarkable educational service in the betterment of rural living which has been given through the Smith-Lever development.

As a matter very vital to the effective continuation of the University of Nevada and to the agricultural development of Nevada and, in my judgment, as a matter of high importance to all the States of the Union, I urge that this amendment, section 19 to H. R. 13520, should be defeated. In case that you do not deem it practicable to secure the defeat of this amendment I very sincerely urge that you will help secure the adoption of an amendment to this amended section 19, H. R. 13520, which amendment will prevent the damage I have outlined above. I understand that such amendment will be offered either by Senator STEIWER, of Oregon, or by Senator AUSTIN, of Vermont. This amendment will propose to add between the word "education" at the very end of section 19 and the period the following: "agricultural extension and colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts."

I hope, also, that you would help secure the passage of another amendment to be offered by Senator NORBECK to eliminate from section 19 as proposed the words in the last two lines, "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934."

The effect of these two amendments to the amendment would be to leave the Senate committee's section 19 then reading at the end of this section, "shall not apply to permanent annual appropriations for vocational agriculture, agricultural extension, and colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts."

No proposed congressional legislation of which I have learned in my years in Nevada would be so damaging to Nevada's State university and to the agricultural development of Nevada after this business crisis has passed as this proposed Senate committee's section 19, H. R. 13520, in its original form. You will be doing our university and our State a stalwart service if you do help defeat these proposals to take away the permanent character of the Federal Morrill fund appropriation and Smith-Lever appropriation.

With best wishes, I am, cordially yours,
WALTER E. CLARK, President.

I accept the amendment of the Senator from Vermont and hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am warmly in accord with the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and his statement has been a real contribution to the subject. For many years he has been interested in extension and service work. I am very happy indeed that we have a great friend of agriculture in New England.

There are two factors involved: One is extension service and the other is experimental service. The experimental service is the most vital of all the activities of the Department of Agriculture. The extension service gives to the public the results of the experimental work done by that institution. This proposal of the committee would curtail the work which the States are doing in cooperation with the Federal Government. Simply expressed, as so ably stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, no plan could be devised which would more completely interfere with the progress of this work from year to year.

I have in mind, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, a great many projects, many of which are dependent upon cooperation with the States. Take the corn borer, for instance. If we did not have a long-time plan, we could not have made the fight to control the corn borer, the gypsy moth, the Japanese beetle, and the white-pine blister which for so many years infected the great desiduous trees of New England. All these projects, even including the cattle tick in the South and the boll weevil and the boll worm, have been based upon work done under the several bills which passed years ago, and finally were consummated in what is known as the Purnell bill of 1929. They all have for their purpose a program of work by the various States and the Federal Government in cooperation on a long-time view.

Now, to-night to adopt an amendment such as the committee has designed, which would end every year the appropriation for these purposes, would be to adopt a plan under which no State could carry on the projects that have so well been undertaken and so well cooperated in for the many years. I think it would be one of the most ruthless things ever known, after we have taken care of the diseases that affect our animals, our fruits, our vegetables, to attempt at this time to eliminate the possibility of continuing that program. I am glad the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], my colleague the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] are cooperating in the matter. If we are going to destroy this work, let us do it by simply adopting the committee amendment. If we are going to continue in the line suggested by the Senator from Vermont we should vote down this proposition of the committee and adopt his amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon has spoken specifically about the phase that is more particularly identified with agriculture. I would like to say just a word about the origin of the legislation with reference to other subjects than agriculture.

It seems an interesting coincidence that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is making the initial fight to continue this particular service, because all who are acquainted with the vocational-education movement will recall that one of his famous predecessors, the late Senator Page, of Vermont, was identified with the movement for 15 years in this body. Everyone familiar with his efforts will recall the Page vocational-education project. But he never could get action from both of the bodies at once. If one body of Congress acted, the other would not.

Finally after 15 years of effort, through the cooperation of a famous Senator from Georgia, Senator Hoke Smith, and a Member of Congress from Georgia, Congressman Hughes, there was a move started for the creation of a commission to study the vocational educational problem in the United States. That commission was appointed by President Woodrow Wilson, and I happened to be honored by being selected one of the members of the commission. Senator Hoke Smith and Senator Page represented the Senate. Representative

Hughes and myself represented the other House. Then, in addition to the four Members of Congress, were seven selected outside of Congress, headed by the famous Charles Prosser, who now, I think, is at the head of the Dunwoody Institute in Minneapolis.

We held hearings for a period of something like six months and assembled a very valuable body of facts. After months of effort a bill was drafted by that commission and introduced in the House of Representatives by the Member from Georgia, Mr. Hughes, and in the Senate by the then Senator from Georgia, Mr. Smith. That law is known as the Hoke Smith law. A fundamental feature of that particular act was the provision for an appropriation, small the first year, beginning about 1918, a little larger the next year, and still larger the next year, until in 1926 the appropriation was to be at least $3,000,000. Thus an annual appropriation was provided for the purpose of education on commercial and economic subjects.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I am perfectly willing to acept the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut is not going to take me off the floor on that basis.

Another feature of the bill provided for agricultural education; and an annual appropriation of $3,000,000 from 1926 was provided for that purpose. Further, an appropriation of $1,000,000 was provided for the training of teachers. So the law now provides for annual appropriations of $3,000,000 for commercial and economic education; $3,000,000 for agricultural education, and a million dollars for the training of teachers. Those appropriations were to be permanent for the reasons stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Georgia, that if we desire to repeal this law we should repeal it; and I am perfectly willing to have brought before us for discussion a proposition to repeal the law and to have that question determined; but, as was stated by the Senator from Georgia, those who are sponsoring this new proposal are the ones who have opposed not only this particular legislation but legislation of a similar character.

I want to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Utah—I regret that he is not present—referred to the purpose of this education as temporary, stating that it was to inaugurate a movement which should be subsequently discontinued. That is not true. If there is any element of permanency in any legislation, it is in this legislation. There is no limit of time at all. The first appropriation in 1918 was small; then it was gradually increased up to 1926, when it reached the maximum, and was to be made annually from that time on, not only to provide education along commercial and economic lines but also along agricultural lines and for the purpose of training teachers. That is the permanent law, and we are making these annual appropriations under the law without any new authorization whatever. If, however, we want to eliminate them, if we have come to the conclusion they ought not to be continued, all right, let us bring the proposal here and ascertain what policy should be adopted.

It is true that the assistance furnished by the Federal Government to promote maternity education was regarded as temporary; that was for a term of years, with the thought that after a certain period it would be discontinued; but that is not true as to vocational education. There is no element of a temporary character in it; it is permanent; and I certainly think this body is not going to reverse the action of Congress upon vocational education.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I indorse everything that has been said by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Ohio about this proposed amendment, and I wish to ask to have printed in the RECORD telegrams from F. D. Farrell, president of the Kansas State Agricultural College; from W. A. Brandenburg, president of the Kansas State Teachers College; and from Ralph Snyder, chairman of the committee of Kansas farm organizations, protesting against the Senate committee amendment.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MANHATTAN, KANS., January 13, 1933.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER:

Am informed Senate committee amendment of section 19 of House bill 13520 proposed to eliminate as permanent items the appropriations made under the Morrill-Nelson, Smith-Lever, and Smith-Hughes laws, and to put these items on basis for annual consideration. The discontinuance of the permanent feature of these items would remove the greatest single factor for stability, orderly development, and effectiveness of the educational activities of land-grant colleges and of vocational education. This stabilizing factor is particularly important because of recurring need in the States to reduce State support temporarily. Trust you will support preservation of permanent feature.

F. D. FARRELL.

TOPEKA, KANS., January 9, 1933.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate:

Permanent appropriation feature of Smith-Hughes Vocational Education Act very essential to progress in development of program. The fact of permanency gives confidence to boards of education and school superintendents. Has been great thing for Kansas; most popular throughout State. Any change whatever affecting automatic permanency very undesirable.

President Kansas State Teachers College.

TOPEKA, KANS., January 13, 1933.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.:

We have information that movement on foot in Congress to cripple experiment stations, vocational schools, and extension work by eliminating permanent Federal appropriations. Surely we should not do this. Other Kansas farm organizations join me in protesting such action.

RALPH SNYDER,
Chairman Committee of Kansas Farm Organizations.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask that the committee's amendment may be amended in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, in order that we may make progress on the bill and not have this question debated any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the paragraph reported by the committee is modified accordingly.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. Has section 19, as amended, now been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further amendment to section 19? If not, the question is——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely wish to make one observation before the vote is taken. I think the telegrams just put into the RECORD by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the letter read into the RECORD by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] both condemn this character of legislation. They amount to nothing more nor less than lobbying to obtain money out of the United States Treasury for purely local purposes. When once we start this policy we can never stop it. It just shows that when the lips of a State institution are once attached to the udder of the General Government they can not be riven loose. I think those letters are improper in this place and ought not to be admitted into the RECORD.

I have as strong a sympathy as anybody for the agriculture and mechanical colleges, and for the work they have done; but, if the legislation of Congress in aid of vocational education is not temporary, it ought to have been. The only justification for legislation of that kind is to induce the States to appreciate the importance of the undertaking; and, if it be important, the State then can carry on and discharge its own duty to its own people. There is a clear line of demarcation in respect to legislation of this kind. Any system or policy which can be instituted by a single State and carried on with success, not involving cooperation with any other State, ought to be left to the individual State.

There are some policies which can not be successfully carried on by a single State. The cattle tick, the grasshopper, the malarial mosquito fall in this category. The malarial mosquito is not a State rights creature; he has no respect for State boundaries. In order successfully to exterminate that disease and death breeding pest, cooperation is necessary, and cooperation between the General Government and the local governments is not only justifiable but necessary. Are not the individual States qualified to maintain vocational education if they find it necessary to the welfare or the progress of their people? Why should the General Government perform a purely local function of that character?

The policy of matching dollars on the part of the General Government with the State governments is a dangerous policy. It breeds extravagance; it encourages excessive appropriations and expenditures; and we have witnessed here to-day the danger of embarking upon such policies.

I would not have Senators feel so much concern lest these appropriations be revoked or diminished. That would be contrary to all human precedent and to all human experience. Who ever economized? Who will economize? Economy is a virtue preached by all and practiced by none. Everybody wants to economize with respect to some appropriation in which he feels no concern. Here come the president of a State university and the president of an A. and M. college, urging the Congress of the United States, charged with administering the National Treasury—a treasury now empty—not to permit a reduction? No; not that; for no reduction is proposed. The only suggestion is that these appropriations, which are now permanent, should be provided for each year so that the Congress may know what it is doing. One of our appropriation bills carries $2,000,000 a year for one of the purposes referred to by the Senator from Connecticut, namely, for meat inspection. In addition to this there is a permanent appropriation of $3,000,000. Many a Senator was unconscious of that, perhaps. There would be less demand to increase temporary appropriations if the permanent appropriations were known and were before the eyes of Senators when we are making these appropriations.

Mr. President, when and where shall we begin to economize and to relieve the deficit in the Treasury, which threatens destruction to the American taxpayer? Every concern, every institution, every individual that seeks money out of the Treasury of the United States has champions on this floor, has champions on the other floor. Who stands up to defend the taxpayer when these raids on the Treasury are made?

Mr. REED. I send to the desk an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 82, after line 21, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. Section 322 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is amended by adding at the end of the section the following proviso: "Provided further, That the provisions of this section as applicable to rentals shall apply only where the rental to be paid shall exceed $2,000 per annum."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], who is compelled to be absent to-day. Section 322 of last year's economy bill provides that the Government in renting property shall not pay over 15 per cent of its appraised value. That appears to be a sound principle; but the Department of Justice has found, for example, that in Alaska, where it is necessary to have a lock-up or jail in a remote and distant region, it is impossible to rent a log cabin because there is nobody in the neighborhood except a deputy marshal who is interested, and the Indians, who are scarcely qualified to be appraisers, and the Comptroller General will not permit such a cabin to be rented, although the rent may be only a couple of hundred dollars a year, without first having an appraisal made, and it would cost a thousand dollars or more to get a white man out to that distant place and appraise the property. That is one difficulty.

Another is that it has been found, in renting a single room in an office building—and several cases were given us where that has been done—a single room can not be rented until the value of that room has been appraised and certified to the comptroller; and he will not accept an appraisal of the entire office building as evidence of the value of one room, and there is nobody in the world who knows how to appraise the fee of a single room in an office building.

While the 15 per cent restriction is eminently proper, and I would not think of asking to have it changed, yet it is obviously senseless to require an appraisal to be made—and in a large city these appraisals cost from $250 up—where sometimes the rent does not amount to as much as the appraisal fee. So, for practical purposes, it has been suggested by representatives of the Department of Justice that this limitation be put in.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. As I understand, the 15 per cent limitation does not apply until the rental is $2,000 per annum or over.

Mr. REED. It begins to apply when the rental reaches $2,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Heretofore it applied no matter what the rental might be?

Mr. REED. Yes; and in these small rentals it has been found extremely embarrassing.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have discussed this matter with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], who explained it, and I think there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator offers it as a new section.

Mr. REED. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will come first on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. REED. The Senator from Vermont has not offered any amendment to my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; but the negative vote was not taken. The Senator from Oklahoma was recognized. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] to the paragraph, as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now comes on the new amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the paragraph, as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like now to revert to section 12, on page 77, which was passed, and reconsidered at the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], because the Senator from Pennsylvania was not here. It concerns assignments of officers to our stations in the Philippines, China, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Panama Canal Zone for not less than four years instead of two years, as at present.

May I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that when this matter was considered by the Appropriations Committee it was clearly understood that if the matter went to conference the representatives of the Army and Navy would be heard in conference to see whether there was any reason in their minds as to the inadvisability of the 4-year period, which will save the Government about $750,000.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I can answer the inquiry, and I am going to try to endear myself everlastingly to the Senate by being brief.

The War Department appropriation act passed in March, 1915, put a maximum limit of two years on these tropical details.

Shortly thereafter, or about the same time, the chief surgeon general of the Philippine Department had reported that experience in the Philippine Islands had shown that after about two years of continuous residence a great majority of the people, even if they do not become actually ill, seem to undergo physical and mental deterioration. He added that that was particularly true of the women and children of the families of our troops who were stationed in those possessions. He summarized the reasons—I am not going to read the long report—as follows:

In addition to considerations of health, morale, and welfare of personnel are also major elements in efficiency. The following factors, usually inherent in a prolonged tour of foreign service, are among those which produce discontent, hardship, and lowered efficiency—

And some of these, I am sure, have not occurred to the Senate—

(1) Long separation from the United States, where all interests are centered; (2) inability to provide suitable schools for children without painful and long family separation and material expense; (3) separation from relatives of advanced age; (4) inability to attend to financial or property interests; (5) absence of normal companions, amusements, and recreations which keep the mind normal at home; (6) the continuous irritation of the heat, the rain, the natives, the insects, the artificial life, and innumerable minor environmental and psychological factors.

Then he goes on to tell us the effects on the health, the growing despondency, the breaking down of the vigor and the energy that the officer or enlisted man had when he went.

As I say, it was in response to that study that in the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1916 we fixed the maximum limit at two years without the officer's consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. While this amendment does fix the limit at four years, and while there is a great deal in what the Senator says, as I remember when the matter came up before in 1915, yet this bill provides that—

No such officer shall be transferred to duty in the continental United States before the expiration of such period unless the health of such officer or the public interest requires such transfer, and the reason for the transfer shall be stated in the order directing such transfer.

Mr. REED. That is very true.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that cures the very vice that the Senator points out. In other words, if the health of the officer was such as the Senator stated, or if there were reasons of public interest, the Army, in the conduct of its own affairs, would have justice done.

Mr. REED. I do not believe it could be said to be in the public interest, if one's wife and children were taken ill, that the officer himself should be returned. It does not concern his health and it does not concern the effectiveness of the Army, except most indirectly, to keep his wife and children there beyond the time when they can stay healthy. His father or his mother may be advanced in years, and the fact that they are in their declining years has nothing to do with his health and nothing to do with the public interest. He may have business affairs that demand his presence here. That has nothing to do with health or with the public interest.

The long and short of it is, Mr. President, that it is a downright cruelty to keep these officers there for longer tours of duty than the 2-year period that we have at present. For that reason I earnestly implore the Senate not to adopt this section; and I move to strike it from the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there are a good many white people in the Philippines who live there right along without its doing them any harm. There has been established at Baguio, in the mountains north of Manila, a beautiful resort at an elevation of about 4,500 feet above the sea, where a climate prevails which requires open fires every night, in the heart of the Tropics. To that hill station, as it is called in India, officers can frequently repair—and there is abundant room there also for their families—in order to get a change of climate.

As far as the China station is concerned, it is well known that the climate of Peiping is a healthy climate. Peiping and Tientsin are where most of our officers are in China. Neither of those places is really tropical, and they are not detrimental to health.

I almost blush to see the Senator from Pennsylvania asking that the tour of duty in the paradise of the Pacific, Hawaii, be limited to two years, for fear lest officers lose their health if they stay longer than that period of time.

As far as Puerto Rico is concerned, that is also a healthy country, and individuals living there for years and years suffer no inconvenience at all in health.

It seems to me that the situation has been well taken care of by the provision that unless the health of such officers or the public interest requires it their tour of duty shall be not more than four years. I do not believe there is any cruelty in that. I believe we have provided that where it is necessary it may be done, and I trust that the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania will not prevail.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just one word.

The first captain I ever had in the Army was an officer who had been stationed in Puerto Rico. He was taken to Walter Reed Hospital not long ago, a complete nervous wreck, and the reason assigned was that he had been kept in Puerto Rico too long.

I know about Baguio. I have been in the Philippines; and it is very soft for the officers who are stationed at Fort McKinley who are able to go up there conveniently. But if you are stationed down in Mindanao, or at some distant post in the Philippines, you can not get anywhere near Baguio, nor can your family; and the benefits do not apply to everybody out there.

Down in Panama we who have been there know from our own observation how demoralizing it is to both officers and men, how soft they get, how thin their blood gets, how corrupting are the influences of the Panamanian towns of Panama and Colon. Four years is a long sentence, and we ought not to force it on our troops.

I grant what the Senator says about Hawaii. I should be perfectly willing to leave this provision in the bill if it applied only to Hawaii; but it is utterly unfair to the people who are serving our country bravely, for small pay, to keep them on long station in these foreign and tropical posts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that a negative vote on section 12 would accomplish the result he seeks. The Chair will put the question on adopting section 12.

Mr. REED. Very good. Then if my position is sustained it will be by a vote of "no"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. REED. I shall vote "no."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of section 12. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. REED. I call for a division, Mr. President.

Mr. BINGHAM. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Copeland | Johnson | Reynolds |
| Austin | Costigan | Keyes | Robinson, Ark. |
| Bailey | Cutting | King | Robinson, Ind. |
| Bankhead | Dale | La Follette | Russell |

| Coolidge | Hayden | Reed | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate, the question is on the retention of section 12 of the bill, which Senators will find at the top of 77. That section would require——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a point of order. The Senator has spoken on this amendment once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania can speak on the bill, having already spoken on the amendment.

Mr. REED. Very well, Mr. President; I move to strike out in lines 5, 6, and 7, the words "in the Philippines, on the Asiatic Station, or in China, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Panama Canal Zone," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "Hawaii." I will speak on that amendment, but not for 15 minutes, because I think that would be too long to take the time of the Senate at this time in the evening.

The section would require officers and soldiers to remain on the tropical stations indicated for not less than four years. The present law requires that officers and soldiers shall be moved after two years' service on those stations. In other words, after a full report by the Surgeon General, Congress fixed two years as the maximum tour of duty in those posts.

Now the Economy Committee throw that policy to the winds and fix a minimum of a four years' tour of duty in the same tropical posts, and they have taken no evidence from the Surgeon General. There is a report by the Surgeon General on file which states that two years is the proper maximum. The Economy Committee do not consider that at all. The chairman of the Economy Committee admits that when they adopted the section they did so with the understanding that the conference committee should call in Army and Navy representatives to tell them the opinion of those departments. In other words, the Senate is expected to legislate on the recommendation of a committee which admits it has made no study whatsoever of the merits of the proposal.

Mr. President, I submit that it is not the proper way to legislate to abdicate our entire authority over the subject and transfer it to the committee on conference, which, among all its other pressing duties, will be required to call in experts to inquire whether we have done something that is sensible or unwise.

I called attention, before the quorum call was made, to a report of the Surgeon General made in 1916, in which he stated, in effect, that in practically every individual case there was a distinct deterioration of the nervous system observable after a two years' tour of duty in those places.

Hawaii is the only exception; that is quite healthful. But the other stations, which I am proposing to strike out, are uniformly unhealthful, and we have seen it demonstrated over and over again in our experience. Two years is all the time an officer or soldier should be required to stay in Panama, for example, or in the southern Philippines. The health conditions are bad; it means a cruel separation from one's family; schooling of children is impossible; the officer goes there and lives a hermit life, among alien peoples, and it is only a merciful thing to give him a respite from that duty after two years of it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I trust that the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania will not prevail. I shall not take the Senate's time again to explain what I said before, that lines 9 and 10 provide that if the health of the officer requires it, or if the public interest necessitates it, exceptions may be made. The only requirement is that the reason for the transfer under four years shall be stated in the order directing it.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, just a word. I am not familiar with military service in any of the territory or Territories mentioned in this section except with respect to Panama. I had an opportunity to observe the camp of a detachment of our Army in Panama which had charge of certain properties, and I was convinced from the standpoint of a layman that two years' service under the tropical sun, with the environments surrounding those men and officers, was a maximum period for such service. It would seem to me that if we require a service of four years, the small saving we will accomplish in the matter of transportation will amount to practically nothing, and we will find ourselves building another Gorgas hospital in Panama to take care of those men, and possibly the immediate families of some of the men. I think the proposal is shortsighted policy from the standpoint of economy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

The section as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, on page 72 there are two sections of a formal nature which will not require any discussion. I ask that they be read. I refer to section 9 (b) and 9 (c).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 72, beginning with line 14, the committee proposes to insert the following:

(b) All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of such sections, as amended, are hereby suspended during the period in which such sections, as amended, are in effect.

(c) No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any suit against the United States or (unless brought by the United States) against any officer, agency, or instrumentality of the United States arising out of the application, as provided in this section, of such sections 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, or 112, as amended, unless such suit involves the Constitution of the United States.

The sections were agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment, which I think is in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit us to complete the Army amendments? The Senator from Pennsylvania was absent this afternoon when they were taken up. The first one comes on page 70, section 2, and I invite the attention of the Senator from California to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, line 4, the committee proposes to insert the following:

(2) Section 104 (b) and section 106 are amended by striking out "(except enlisted)"; section 104 (b) is amended by striking out "does not include the active or retired pay of the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard; and"; and section 105 (b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(8) The enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, while I am interested in the entire section, and hope subsequently to have some amendment made respecting it in its entirety, I am interested particularly in the retired enlisted men.

To my attention there has been brought by certain gentlemen in southern California the fact that the particular amount that is charged against them as retired enlisted men is unjust, discriminatory, and, in reality, a breach of faith on the part of the Government. When the representations thus were made to me, I wrote to the Chief of Staff of the Army stating that such representations had been made, that an amendment had been suggested to remedy what was thought to be the injustice, and asking his views upon that particular amendment. Because of his response, and my investigations, which seem to support the representations made, I propose the following amendment, on page 70, line 5, strike out the words "except enlisted," and in lieu thereof insert the words "except retired enlisted;" in line 6 strike out the words "active or," and in line 10 add the word "active" after the article "the" and before the word "enlisted."

Now that I may not unduly take the time of the Senate, permit me to read the letter that has come to me upon my request from the Chief of Staff:

Your letter dated January 10, 1933, with reference to the provision of the economy bill which seeks to include enlisted men, both retired and active, in the class to which the 10 per cent pay cut will be applied, was received by me late yesterday.

You state that an amendment is proposed that will exempt retired enlisted men—

And that is all that I am referring to in the present amendment—from this cut the same as civil-service personnel are now exempted. You request my views respecting the above provision for use in connection with the proposed amendment.

At the outset I may say that I am strongly opposed to a cut in the pay of enlisted men, both retired and active. The reasons are based upon somewhat different considerations; but, as I view the matter, they are equally compelling.

As to retired enlisted men, the most important considerations may be listed as follows:

They are debarred from receiving any pension, compensation, or disability allowances, even though totally disabled from war service.

The retired civil-service personnel receive no cut; however, they are permitted to draw pension, compensation, and disability allowance, even though their military service was no longer than 90 days and their disabilities arose as much as 30 years after the war in which they served.

The pay of retired enlisted men has been earned. It has always been considered and is a part of their pay for services already rendered. To take from them a portion of this pay is a positive breach of faith.

I submit to the Senate that if the statement thus made by the Chief of Staff be correct, even the talismanic word "economy" is not sufficient justification.

Military personnel have received since 1908 an average increase of only about 11 per cent, while the increase of civilian employees has been much greater, in some instances well over 100 per cent.

It is just, proper, and equitable that retired civil-service personnel should be exempted from the pay cut, but this is equally true as to retired enlisted men. In the case of the former a direct contribution in cash was made by them to their retirement fund. In the case of the latter their retired pay was taken into consideration when fixing their active-duty pay, resulting in the lowest scale of pay in the Government service. In both cases. contributions to the respective retirement funds result, the only difference being that one is direct, the other is indirect.

As to active enlisted men, I view this proposed cut with the gravest concern.

This, however, is apart from the present amendment, but it will be subsequently presented unquestionably by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and I am sympathetic with him.

The men to whom the cut will apply generally are men of long service, holding positions of responsibility that in civil life or in civil positions of the Government would command much higher pay than they receive. They are key men in our national defense. The effect upon the morale of these key men would be very detriment to our national defense in these troublous times, when that morale should be kept at the highest possible point.

Accordingly I strongly recommend that section 4 (a) (2) be amended by striking out that portion which reads:

"Section 104 (b) and section 106 are amended by striking out '(except enlisted)'; section 104 (b) is amended by striking out 'does not include the active or retired pay of the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard; and'."

That is what I am endeavoring to do.

This, Mr. President, constitutes all the case I offer in behalf of the amendment presented. But that it may be presented in another form as well, I wish to ask as a part of my remarks that there may be printed a communication from Mr. J. H. Hoeppel, who has just been elected to Congress from the twelfth California district, which explains in detail as well and gives better than I could give here the reasons why this cut should not be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1933.

DEAR SIR: Attached hereto is an amendment which I respectfully request you present to the Senate in connection with the economy bill, H. R. 13520, now before your honorable body.

* * * * * * *

It is considered just and proper that retired civil-service personnel should be excepted from a pay cut; but is it not equally fair and just that retired enlisted men be also excepted from a pay cut?

Retired enlisted men, aged and enfeebled with physical disabilities incurred in action and other hazards of service, served long, hard years at as low as $13 per month. This small pay was accepted and these men denied themselves the comforts of home and the opportunity to gain a competence in the assurance that they were building up for themselves an annuitable credit for their old age, in event they survived combat and the vicissitudes of 30 years of service.

With increasing infirmities (many are bedridden and several blind) they are prohibited by law from entering a soldiers' home, except the one here in Washington, and if they enter it they alone must pay for their maintenance.

Because of their advanced years they have more than the average medical bill in their efforts to find surcease from pain or affliction incurred in service.

Retired civil-service personnel who are exempted from a pay cut while in active employment and in retirement are permitted to draw pension, compensation, and emergency officers' retired pay or disability allowance, even though their military service was only 90 days and their disabilities arose years after the war.

Enlisted men in active service and on the retired list, even though they have service-connected disabilities, are debarred from either of these benefits; yet it is proposed to cut their pay and not reduce the pay of civil-service retired men who receive two pays.

In the interest of men who served 30 years in the milftary or naval service, I appeal to you to save them from a pay cut in their last days.

Thanking you for your consideration, I am,

Sincerely yours,

J. H. HOEPPEL, Congressman Elect.

P. S.—Senator JOHNSON and others assure me they will support this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. The opinion is expressed among some of our very able legislative counsel that the language of the Senator's amendment does not do what he wishes to do. May I suggest that we vote on the amendment striking out from this section everything connected with retired pay of the enlisted men and let the clerks fix up the actual wording of the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is my only purpose, and in any way it may be phrased I am perfectly willing to vote upon the subject matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am in full sympathy with everything said by the able Senator from California. I hope his amendment will be adopted. But more than that we should do. It seems to me the entire subsection from lines 4 to 11, both inclusive, page 70, should be stricken out.

When we come to consider the pay of a soldier we must remember always that he gets very small pay in money. If one of us were to enlist to-morrow, then for the first four years of our service as a private under the presently prevailing pay scale our pay would be $21 per month in money, about 65 cents a day, whereas common labor, exposed to no military risk, is paid many times as much.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator realizes that the economy act does not affect in the slightest degree the pay of the enlisted man during his first four years?

Mr. REED. Oh, quite so. I will show in a moment just how the enlisted man is affected. In addition to the 65 cents a day, or $21 a month, that we pay this man, we give him his housing in a barracks, where privacy is the last thing one finds. We give him his uniform—clothing issued to him by the quartermaster. We provide for him his food. The scale on which he is fed can be pretty well guessed from the fact that in 1929, at the height of the boom, his ration allowance was 52 cents a day. All his food had to be provided for him within an allowance of 52 cents a day. That food allowance, or ration allowance, is a part of his compensation, and we have already cut that. We have already cut that for every enlisted man. The Senator from Connecticut says these economy provisions do not touch the private, but I want him to bear in mind that the private's ration allowance has been cut from 52 cents a day to 33 cents a day. So the private, receiving 65 cents a day in money and 52 cents a day in food, or $1.17 altogether, has had his pay cut actually by 19 cents, or about 18 per cent.

I am sorry the Senator from Connecticut is not hearing what I am saying, because I am sure it would arouse his sympathy. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Connecticut——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I listened to the Senator a little more than he thought I did. May I remind him that one reason why the allowance for food of the enlisted man has been cut is that to-day they no longer desire to eat as much beef and pork as they did. That amount has been cut and there have been added more vegetables, and one egg a day, which is more in accordance with the normal healthy appetite of the citizen to-day. This, together with the lower cost of commodities, has resulted, as the Senator said, in a reduced cost of living for the private.

Mr. REED. The Senator has that right. We have cut our own pay 10 per cent because of the reduced cost of living. We have cut the enlisted man nearly 20 per cent for the same reason. The amendment recommended by the committee would cut the oldest and the best of our enlisted men still further. It would reach the master sergeants, the first sergeants, who, after all, are the backbone of any army, and the staff sergeants, and especially the ordinary sergeants of longest experience—those who have had over 16 years of service in the Army.

Furthermore, if any of them had one high rating and the pitiable little extra pay of $5 a month that is given to a man for becoming an expert in gunnery, that would be taken from him, too. In our effort for economy we are going to take away that pitiful little prize won by superb skill in gunnery in the Artillery or in marksmanship in the Infantry, and we call that economy. We would take these men, whose pay in food we have already cut, and we would superimpose upon that a 10 per cent in the pitiful little money pay that they have by serving their country faithfully for 16 years.

I submit, Mr. President, that the suggestion is cruel, and I hope the lines will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, we have taken from the pay of Government employees, under Title I of the economy act, during the past year about $93,000,000. We left out any reduction in pay of enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard. We felt, however, under the continued pressure for the necessity for economy in relieving the taxpayer, that there would be no real hardship to them any more than to any other Government employee in including them, at least those of them who get more than $1,000 a year in cash, and giving them the same kind of a cut that is accorded the civilian employees.

The provision we are now discussing and which the Senator from Pennsylvania moves to strike out will save, it is estimated conservatively, a little over $7,000,000—$7,633,000 to be exact. I realize that that is not a very great saving, but it seems to me, in view of everything which went on in connection with this matter as well as others in connection with pay cuts, that it will not cause any serious hardship. Most enlisted men will not feel it at all. It is true that those who have been a long time in the Army and have given us the best years of their lives, the higher petty officers and noncommissioned officers, will get a cut in their pay, and so will those of that grade who have retired and who get more than $1,000 a year in retired pay. It is very little that each one of them gives up. In the maximum it saves the taxpayer $7,633,000.

Furthermore, in view of all the other Government employees who are giving up a portion of their pay, it seems to me only fair that they might be asked to do the same.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there is no cut provided unless the soldier gets more thn $1,000 a year. In addition to his pay he gets, as we know, his rations, his clothing, and also his lodging, which makes his compensation considerably more than $1,200 a year.

If we cut down the pay of civilian employees who are getting $1,200 or more, surely the Army and naval employees who get $1,200 or more ought to be treated in exactly the same way. That was the view of the committee; that is the fair view to take of it.

In addition to that, we all know that one can buy as much for $900 this year as he could buy for $1,000 last year. The proposal does not interfere with the contract of the soldier or the sailor or the marine. Of course, if we are going to be fair to all the employees—and that is what we ought to be; we ought to treat them all alike or just as nearly alike as we can—I see no reason on earth why this provision should not remain in the bill, and I hope very sincerely that it will remain in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong this discussion. I am rather under the impression that it is not necessary to do so because I have so much confidence in the fairness and sense of justice of the Senate, but I do want to read to the Senate from a communication which I have on the subject which undertakes to give a few of the details. I understand the figures which I shall read come from the Veterans' Administration.

In the Regular Establishment most of those that would be affected would be men who have had long and honorable service and who are really the backbone of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard.

May I suggest that they are the backbone of any army? If we raise an army, Mr. President, and send it out into the field, we must have it bolstered up with old noncommissioned officers who have been faithful to their trust and to the duty imposed upon them throughout many years and have learned the game of war. They are the backbone of the Army. They are the enlisted men, the underpaid men, if men ever were underpaid. Therefore I am certain the Senate will not penalize these old, faithful, loyal noncommissioned officers in the various armed services of the country. Allow me to proceed further—

And who, in most cases, are married and have families to support.

Loyal citizens all, and married, with families, dependent on a grateful Government that will at least live up to its contract, expressed and implied, and see that they are retired and that they receive retirement pay.

Undoubtedly these proposed pay slashes would have a bad effect on the morale of the combined services. Of the retired enlisted men, all are retired for service, and very few of them are qualified to go into civil life.

Very few of them, we all know, are qualified to go into civil employment after having spent 30 years as enlisted men in the United States Army.

More especially at this time, when several million are unemployed. The physical condition of practically all retired service men is such as will not permit them to pursue a gainful occupation, and practically all have families to support.

Mr. President, I understand that in the Army there are on active duty 9,155 who would be affected; retired, 6,103; in the Navy, active duty, 19,019; retired, 3,089; Marine Corps, active duty, 932; retired, 388; reserves, 75; Coast Guard, active duty, 4,500; retired, 356.

Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the amendment of the Senator from California, and I am in full accord with the stand he takes. As I said at the beginning, I rely on the sense of justice and of fair dealing of the United States Senate in this matter, and I trust the Government will keep faith with these enlisted men.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. I understand that last year under the economy bill we reduced the salaries of all civilian employees approximately 10 per cent, and we exempted from reduction all officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard. Is that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Now, it is proposed by the Economy Committee that the same principle of reduction shall be applied to all enlisted men and officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard whose salaries are in excess of a thousand dollars?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is right.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I should like to know on what principle we can face the army of civilian employees, our stenographers and clerks and secretaries, married men and single men, married women and single women, and say "You have got, in the interest of economy, to take a reduction of 10 per cent, but officers and enlisted men in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps shall suffer no reduction?"

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. REED. This has nothing whatever to do with officers; they have already had a 10 per cent cut.

Mr. McKELLAR. Officers got the cut last year but enlisted men did not.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Pardon me; the Senator misinformed me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I misunderstood the Senator; I am sorry.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So then this proposal before us applies only to enlisted men?

Mr. McKELLAR. To enlisted men getting over $1,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And how many enlisted men are there getting over $1,000?

Mr. BINGHAM. The total saving on the active list would be about $5,500,000, and on the retired list about $2,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The same principle applies. I should like to inquire what right have the enlisted men in the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, or the Coast Guard to be treated any differently than the men in our offices, the other employees of this Government, who receive over $1,000?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there any cut made in all the personnel of the civil service?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly; every employee in the civil service, as I understand, has had his or her salary reduced.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well. Is there any difference in the salaries of civil-service employees and those who have served for a long period of time in the Army?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not consider there is.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator does not. Very well.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think, when we come to consider all the provisions made by the Federal Government in the shape of living quarters, food, clothing, and salary, what the enlisted men receive compares very favorably with the pay which we are providing for our own clerks in the building across the way. Were we not informed last year of the exceedingly large number of civilian employees receiving less than $1,000 per year?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that many of the enlisted men received only $15 a month as their base pay while they were going along in the service and building up the American Army and training officers really as well as enlisted men. They are old "noncoms," noncommissioned officers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And they are now receiving a thousand dollars, are they not?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The point is it takes them 30 years to get up to a position where they can retire and receive this retired pay, and unquestionably a part of the consideration for their enlisting and reenlisting time and again throughout the years and giving up all opportunities in civil life was the very fact that they relied on being retired ultimately on this basis of pay which now an attempt is being made to reduce to the extent of 10 per cent. The point I suggest to the Senator—not to take too much of his time—is that there is a contractual relationship existing between the Government and these very modestly paid enlisted men.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, there are women and there are men whose backs are bent, whose muscles are stiff, and some of whom are emaciated because of long years of toil and work for the Federal Government, and we have not hesitated to reduce their salaries. Let us be on the level; let us be fair with all classes and all groups, and let this salary cut, which is a most unpleasant duty, apply to every man and woman who is receiving over a thousand dollars, wherever they work, whatever their occupation may be, whether it is in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps, or whether it is in any civil position. I can not see the reason for any distinction, for any separation, for any special protection to this class. I do not think they work any harder; I do not think they make any greater contribution to the public welfare than do the stenographers who are working 10 hours and sometimes 12 hours a day in our offices day after day and week after week.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Massachusetts has painted a vivid and lurid picture of Federal employees in the civil service whose backs are bent, whose forms are emaciated notwithstanding their Federal salaries. I should like to put in the RECORD at this place that there are a great many taxpayers in the United States whose backs are bent, whose children are hungry, who are paying taxes to pay Federal salaries in excess of $1,000 a year. Ten or twelve million American citizens are out of employment, unable to obtain work to feed themselves or their families.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I say to the Senator that is the very reason why I have been asking that the principle of equality be observed in dealing with the reduction in the wages of Government employees?

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator is entirely right.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am glad to learn the Senator agrees with me.

Mr. GORE. And unless there is something done to relieve the taxpayers, these salaries may be discontinued entirely.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Let me say one word in conclusion. I have stood for and supported a reasonably strong Army and Navy, but I do not propose to vote for, and will not allow, if I can prevent it, the favoritism that was manifested a year ago to go on any longer. If we are going to talk economy and practice economy, the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard have got to face present conditions, and they have got to accept the verdict of the American people who are demanding economy all along the line.

These reductions are not to our liking. No one desires to reduce salaries or wages. I am urging that this unpleasant task be done equitably if at all. If we are to continue reduction of wages that we commenced last year, then let us apply this particular principle of economy to all, both military and nonmilitary.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I will add only a few words to what has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts. Of course a very appealing argument can be made about the old noncoms and about the other enlisted men who have served for a number of years; but let us understand exactly what is to be the result of the adoption of this amendment. The Senator from Maine, with his knowledge of naval affairs, stated a few moments ago that after 16 years' service a man, although suffering no disability, can go into the reserve and be retired. If a young man enters the service at 18, 16 years later, or at the age of 34, he may be retired, and go out into the world and there earn a living. In every community we can find such men earning a living.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Within three days I drove in a taxicab to this building, and the man who drove the cab told me he was 33 years of age and was a retired enlisted man of the Army, drawing $75 a month.

Mr. BYRNES. If he was drawing $75 a month, not one dollar of his retired pay would be touched by this amendment, but if he draws over $1,000 all we ask is that the same 10 per cent cut that applies to the woman with a family to support, who is working in a department, and is required by this bill to give up 10 per cent, shall be applied to the man driving a taxicab and earning a living, and drawing $1,000 for no service rendered at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. For information I desire to ask the Senator whether the officials in the Army drawing high salaries—we have had illustrations of them here; the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], I remember, gave us quite a list a few days ago—have had their pay reduced only 10 per cent.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator mean those on the retired list or those on the active list?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care which. It does not make any difference to me.

Mr. BYRNES. So far as those in the active service are concerned, according to their statement to this committee as to the operation of this bill, some of them assert that they have been cut as high as 28 and 30 per cent. As to the accuracy of the statement I am not prepared to say, because the cut applies not only to the 10 per cent but to allowances, and in that way they complain.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to get, if I could, accurate information. I think there is much in the argument which the Senator is making and the argument which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] made, but it does not appeal to me that a cut of the same percentage should be made on the fellow who is getting only $1,500 a year as on the man who is getting $20,000 a year.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that, of course, we revert to the argument which we had last year in the consideration of this bill. There are two interesting schools of thought on the subject. The thought underlying this bill and the thought that was beneath the bill last year was that by this action we would not disturb the relative situation of the employees in the Government service; that it did not seek to change the basic law as to the pay of any individual; that it simply applied a 10 per cent cut to every person employed in the service on the theory that the man who to-day receives $90 a month can with that $90 purchase more than he could have purchased with $100 two years ago. The thought is that this 10 per cent cut applies only temporarily; that it does not seek to change the compensation that is to be paid to the employee; that at the end of this emergency he will revert to the compensation provided by the law, but that because of the change in conditions a 10 per cent cut would not be a hardship; that a man could buy just as much as he could with $100 two years ago if this year he received $90.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the mistake in the theory is that we do not take into consideration what a man has left after the cut is made. A 10 per cent cut to a man who is getting $1,200 a year is an entirely different proposition from a 10 per cent cut to a man who is getting $100,000 a year. The one does not feel it. It does not affect his living. If he did not know the cut was made, he probably never would find it out by his expenses or his living; but to the one who is getting a very small salary a very slight cut would mean the difference between making a living and going on charity.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, of course if there is a graduated cut anywhere, it would affect the relative compensation of the various employees of the Government.

As to the $100,000 mentioned by the Senator, under the bill adopted last year there was a limit of $10,000 in the amount to be paid to any employee of the Government, as the Senator remembers; and the 10 per cent cut then applied to the $10,000 no matter what position the official is now in, with the exception, I think, of the Director of Veterans' Affairs and the members of the Cabinet.

The 10 per cent cut here, though, does not apply to any man who receives retired pay of less than $1,000. If he is not working for the Government, if he is rendering no service at this time, and he is drawing $1,200, and by this cut his compensation as retired pay is reduced to $1,080, I do not think it is such a hardship as would justify making an exception, particularly if we are to continue the cuts that are provided for the civilian employees.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I agree with the Senator perfectly that there should be no slashing of the pay of a Government worker receiving $1,000 a year, and I voted against it constantly and worked against any such policy. I think it is too small for the United States Government and means utterly nothing in connection with balancing the Budget, as everybody knows—a $4,000,000,000 Budget. I shall continue to vote against slashing the pay of Government workers, but I submit to the Senator and to my esteemed friend from Massachusetts also that two wrongs do not make a right.

These enlisted men have entered into a contractual relation with the United States Government; and part of the consideration for their service was this retirement pay which was to come later, which they hoped to enjoy. Then, again, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] suggested that he rode in a taxicab the other night with one of these old "noncoms," an enlisted man who was retired and was receiving $75 a month. If he had followed that through, the chances are about a thousand to one that that old enlisted man has a large family, finds it impossible, after having given the best years of his life to the United States Government, to keep his family on the meager sum the Government has allowed him after all that service and finds it necessary to work at anything he can get to do to eke out an existence.

Furthermore, in addition to that, the service man, the enlisted man, is in the most hazardous line of work anyone knows. He enlists to become possible cannon fodder, and in the case of an emergency that is exactly what he is. He never knows how long he may go without facing war and an armed enemy. Therefore, he should be treated with special consideration and certainly should be given a living wage.

Personally, I think it is amazingly small to penalize a man of that kind.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not exactly understand the question that was propounded to me by the Senator from Indiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I was under the impression that the Senator had yielded the floor. I am very sorry.

Mr. BYRNES. I yielded to the Senator from Indiana very readily; and I was only stating at the end of his statement that I did not know whether the Senator had propounded a question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; I wanted to make an observation while the Senator had the floor, and I understood he yielded the floor just now, and then if I had any time left I wanted to use that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has already spoken on the amendment. He can not speak a second time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I desire to perfect the amendment. I perfect the amendment by asking only that the words "active or," in line 6, page 70, be stricken out of the particular section.

And now, speaking on the bill for just one minute, I do not yield to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] or the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] in feeling for the governmental employees of the United States in the matter of pay cuts. I voted against permitting any pay cut of any woman whose muscles were weakened or any man whose body was bent in the employment of the United States Government who receives a salary of $1,500 or less. I would vote against it again. I do not believe in it, and I think that the Government of the United States does an evil thing when it cuts the pay of those who have little.

I am not standing here appealing for officers who receive a great salary from the Government or men of epaulets who have great sums of money coming to them from retirement pay or otherwise. I am speaking for the private enlisted man, who receives a sum that is disproportionate to the service that he has rendered to his Government. When these gentlemen speak to me about the harshness of making somebody else in the Government service spend a part of his money while these men should not spend a part of theirs in paying a cut that the Economy League directs, I say to them, I would not cut any of them that receive $1,500 or less.

I have stood upon this floor and said that thing before when the economy bill was before the Senate on a previous occasion. I say it now, and I say about the enlisted private in the United States Army who entered his service under the contract and the promise of his Government that he should have retired pay, that he ought not to be cut. I say in addition to you, sir, that there is a vast difference between him and the civil-service employee in the privileges that each class receives.

The one receives, as I read to you from the letter of the Chief of Staff, many, many things that the other, serving his country and wearing its uniform, can not have. To say that you will take 10 per cent of his $1,200 salary, and give to him $1,080 thereafter, and that you are doing a generous thing to him, I deny. It is not a generous thing. It is worse than wicked for a Government to promise that he shall have a certain sum if he enlists and wears a uniform, and then thereafter break that promise and take from him a pittance that may be necessary absolutely for the subsistence of himself and his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered to the paragraph by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, strike out lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and insert:

Section 104 (b) is amended by striking out "active or"; and section 105 (d) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(8) The active enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What became of the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]?

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not understand that he offered a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has to be perfected first. The Senate will have to vote on this first. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from California to the paragraph. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I call for a division.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] to the paragraph. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], who is necessarily absent, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], and vote "nay."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WATSON. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] and vote "yea."

Mr. BINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], but I am informed that that Senator would vote as I have voted, and therefore I am free to vote, and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. On account of that Senator being absent, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]; and

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. METCALF (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. METCALF. Then I shall have to withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have a pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], but I learn that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, and I therefore am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BAILEY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote "nay."

Mr. BRATTON. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WHEELER (after having voted in the negative). In view of the fact that the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] has returned to the Senate, I transfer my pair to my colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. On this question I have a special pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], which I transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 31, as follows:

So Mr. JOHNSON's amendment to the paragraph was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I merely want to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania had an amendment or a motion to offer.

Mr. BINGHAM. He wishes the motion not to prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The result accomplished by a motion to strike out can be reached by a negative vote.

Mr. BINGHAM. Those in sympathy with the Senator from Pennsylvania will vote in the negative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on adopting the paragraph.

The paragraph was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire now to return to page 71, paragraph 7, lines 21 to 25, which were passed over at the request of the Senator from Colorado. I have been informed by him since that he has no objection. The provision would reduce the reduction for night work differential, which at the present time is one-half, and would make it one-third. This would increase the expense of the Government by $300,000, but the committee believed it was fair to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to section 4, at the bottom of page 70, which was passed over.

Mr. BINGHAM. But we are now taking up page 71.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the paragraph.

The paragraph was agreed to, as follows:

(7) Section 211 (a) (2) is amended to read as follows:
"(2) Wherever by or under authority of law compensation for night work (other than overtime) is at a higher rate than for day work, such differential shall be reduced by one-third."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, now all that remains of the committee amendments is the pay cut of 1⅓ per cent in its various ramifications and title 4, under section 20, the reorganization. The next thing which the committee would like to take up is the so-called Bratton amendment, which is to be offered as an economy section on all appropriation bills.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit me to offer an amendment at this time which probably will not lead to much discussion, before we get into the controverted question to which he refers? I have sent an amendment to the desk, which is appropriate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 74, after line 14, the Senator from Georgia proposes to insert the following:

Section 212 (b) of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is amended to read as follows:
"(b) This section shall not apply to any person whose retired pay plus civilian pay amounts to less than $3,000; Provided, That this section shall not apply to regular or emergency commissioned officers retired for disability incurred in service and directly connected and not by legal presumption with such service."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the only change in existing law that is suggested is in the latter part of the amendment read. Under the economy act of last year any holder of a civilian office, or holder of a position under the Government, appointive or elective, whose retired pay, if he was a commissioned officer enumerated in the pay adjustment act of 1922, and his salary amount to $3,000 or more, had to elect which he would receive, that is, his salary or his retired pay, or he could not receive, if I may put it the other way, more than $3,000.

We made one exception:

That this section shall not apply to regular or emergency commissioned officers retired for disability incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States.

The amendment which I offer proposes to change that definition, and for the reason which I will briefly state, so that it may read now, "retired for disability incurred in service and directly connected and not by legal presumption with such service."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have no objection to that.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think there could be any objection when the purpose of it is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Ohio proposes, on page 71, after line 6, to insert the following:

(5) Section 105 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:
"(f) When no additional expense is entailed annual leave of absence with pay not to exceed 24 days, not including Sundays and holidays, may be granted to officers or employees of the Government, otherwise entitled to less than 24 days annual leave of absence with pay, whose compensation has been reduced by this section."

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, for the purpose of cutting pay the economy act of last year divided Government employees into two grades. One grade provided for by section 101 of that act suffered no decrease in rate of pay, but was compelled to accept one month's furlough of 24 working days without pay. Leave with pay for those employees was suspended by section 103 of the act. The other group of employees whose compensation was reduced by section 105 had a direct reduction of 8⅓ per cent in their pay, but no change in annual leave of absence. Leave of absence of all employees generally, however, had been reduced to 15 days by section 215 of the act. This results in an unfair discrimination, which I am assured by members of the Economy Committee was inadvertent.

The employees covered by section 101 have a reduction of 8⅓ per cent in their compensation, but have 24 days annual leave. Those covered by section 105 have the same 8⅓ per cent cut in their pay, but only 15 days annual leave. My amendment seeks to equalize this discrimination and to make it possible for the employees whose compensation is reduced under section 105 to receive 24 days leave with pay when that can be done without additional cost to the Government. The amendment has been submitted to members of the Economy Committee and to the Comptroller General. I do not think there is any controversy about it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator is quite correct. The Economy Committee has considered it and has no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the chairman of the economy committee? Two or three Senators now absent expressed a desire earlier in the evening to be present when the amendment which I offered, and which is lying on the table, is considered. I wonder if it would suit the Senator's convenience to let it go until tomorrow morning and let it be the pending amendment at that time?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have agreed with the leader on the other side of the aisle, who requested very earnestly that we continue until 10 o'clock to-night, and I should not like to break that agreement.

Mr. BRATTON. I told each Senator who spoke to me about the matter that I would not offer the amendment unless all other matters ahead of it were disposed of and it became necessary for me to offer it for that reason.

Mr. BINGHAM. So far as I know everything has been taken care of except Title IV, the question of reorganization, and the three sections which bear upon the pay cut, namely, the addition to the furlough, the addition to the direct pay cut, and the cut of pensions and compensation of veterans.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I have sent to the desk. I want to call that to the attention of the Senator from New Mexico. I can take that up at this time, if the Senator wishes.

Mr. BRATTON. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Texas offers the following amendment: On page 71, line 25, insert:

Section 212 is amended by adding at the end of paragraph (a) the following:

"Provided, That no retired officer of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, who in private life receives from any corporation, partnership, association, or individual an income, salary, compensation, or bonus for personal services at a rate of pay equal to or in excess of $10,000 per annum, shall receive during the period of such employment any retired pay from the Government of the United States. Nor shall any officer on the active list receive any compensation from any corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, or from any department of the United States Government or from the municipal government of the District of Columbia, any compensation in excess of the salary and allowances of such officer as an active officer of the respective services."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in section 212 of the economy act of last year, which is not amended by this act, it is provided that a retired officer of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard who receives as much as $3,000 in civil employment under the United States Government combined with his retirement pay shall not be entitled to retain both compensations, but may choose the one that is most remunerative.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] offered an amendment a moment ago which amended subsection (b) of section 212, and my amendment ought to be carried in the bill at the same point as that of the Senator from Georgia.

But I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the injustice in restricting the retired officers who are in the Government employment to a maximum of $3,000 a year and permitting retired officers who are out in private life, many of whom are earning very large and handsome salaries from corporations and other organizations, to receive retirement pay without any restriction.

A very glaring example of that is the case of General Harbord. General Harbord is chairman of the board of the Radio Corporation of America. I am simply using him as an illustration. I have no personal feelings against General Harbord whatever. General Harbord now draws retired pay from the Government of the United States in the sum of $6,000 annually, and I am told that his salary as president of the Radio Corporation of America is a very large one indeed.

It seems to me that if the Congress is to make any distinction it ought to make a distinction in favor of those officers who still remain in the Government in some other capacity and give to the service of the Government the benefit of the training and education and experience which they obtained in the Army. But to permit retired pay under conditions that invite an officer to leave the service at the earliest possible moment and to reap large rewards for his services in private life certainly does not conduce to the best interests of the Government.

My amendment, of course, would only operate so long as those individuals draw that compensation. If their compensation in private life were discontinued, their retired pay would be revived. General Pershing, as a retired general of the Army draws retired pay of $21,500 a year. Of course it was reduced temporarily by the economy bill. He will draw retired pay for life. Under ordinary circumstances as a major general he would receive only $6,000 per annum retired pay, but because by special act of Congress he was made a full general for life because of his war services, he is drawing $15,500 more than an ordinary major general of the Army, simply because he happened to have been the commander of the expeditionary forces.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator does not desire to do General Pershing an injustice. He gets a 20 per cent cut under the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought so too, but the Comptroller General advises me that he gets 12 per cent reduction, although the bill as I read it would give him 20 per cent. That may be because of the allowances. The $21,500 is not all salary. Under the act creating him a general the President had the right to give him such allowances as he might see fit, and it may be because of the operation of that fact that he does not get a 20 per cent cut. But that is just temporary. I have no animus against General Pershing. I am merely indicating him as an illustration of the injustice of some of the provisions in the existing law.

A little while ago the Senate adopted an amendment reducing the pay of enlisted retired men in the Army. But what justification can we offer for reducing the pay of the retired enlisted man by 10 per cent and in the same act permitting a general, such as General Harbord, to go out into private life and draw retired pay of $6,000 a year and at the same time earn a munificent salary, as he is doing as president of the Radio Corporation of America?

General Pershing, General Harbord, and others who are enjoying these great emoluments, are now petitioning Congress to reduce the compensation and allowances of crippled and maimed soldiers of the World War. As members of a so-called Economy League they are urging upon the Congress economy, economy, to cut down the allowances of the enlisted men, maimed and wounded veterans of the World War; and yet with these generals drawing these enormous sums from the Treasury, the Senate and the Congress hesitate to put the axe where the axe ought to be applied.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment. I received the other day a letter from a disabled veteran who had been an enlisted man. He said he was disabled, out of employment, and wanted a job. He was getting $18 per month in the form of a disability allowance or pension because of his physical disability. He is one of those whom General Pershing and General Harbord and others want the Government to cut off from the pension rolls without a cent. The plea of General Pershing and General Harbord to cut the veterans, while they draw large pensions themselves, does not appeal to me. I yield now to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Texas has asked what business we have to cut down the retired pay of enlisted men and then allow retired general officers to go out and get employment outside. I would call the Senator's attention to the fact that the officer's pay is cut down just as the enlisted man's pay is cut down. Also the enlisted man can go out and get any employment he may seek. We have nothing to do with it. It is none of our business. It is the same with the officer. He has a right to his retired pay and he has a right to go out and get any other job he may be able to get.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure; but the Government has a right, if it sees fit, to discontinue his retired pay.

Mr. HALE. But I can not see the difference in principle in the matter. It seems to me the principle is exactly the same with the officer as it is with the enlisted man. The question is whether we shall pay them their earned retired pay. Beyond that, they can do what they want. If the amendment goes through it will be a slap in the face of a very distinguished soldier. Everybody will know why the amendment goes through.

Mr. CONNALLY. It will cover anybody. General Harbord is not the only one. I referred to him simply as an example.

Mr. HALE. Yes, the Senator used General Harbord as an illustration.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did. I so stated. The Senator from Maine, if he were in the Chamber and heard me, could not have any doubt as to what I said. He is not the only officer who would be affected. There are hundreds of other Army officers throughout the country who are similarly situated. Admiral Cone of the Shipping Board draws retired pay of $6,000. The Senator from Maine has already voted for and approved a provision which says that Admiral Cone, because he happens to work for the Government, can not draw that retired pay. He has to give up his retired pay because his retired pay and his civilian pay as an officer of the Shipping Board amount to more than $3,000. If that is fair and just, why is it not fair and just to say to the man who leaves the Government service and takes a large salary in private employment, that for the time being he ought to have his retired pay discontinued if with his civilian pay it exceeds $10,000 a year? I should vote to cut it to $3,000 per year instead of $10,000, but I fear the Senate would not adopt the amendment with that figure. It ought to be $3,000 in both cases.

Mr. HALE. The distinction is that the retired officer who works for the Shipping Board is getting another job with the Government, and that is a thing we can stop.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand that; certainly.

Mr. HALE. But why we should stop outside jobs or why we should change the pay on account of officers getting outside work, I can not see.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has a very clear manner of stating that which is the obvious. Of course, the officer is getting pay from the Government, and, as I pointed out a little while ago, that sort of policy encourages Army officers to leave the Government service and to go out into private employment. I think the man who stays with the Government is entitled to as much consideration as the man who goes out and auctions his service to private corporations and private interests throughout the country. Of course the Senator from Maine will not vote for this amendment. The Senator is chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. HALE. No, Mr. President; I am not chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee; I was chairman of that committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator was chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, and it is well known how men who occupy positions as chairmen frequently acquire an exaggerated view as to the needs of such services. They lose the common touch; they can not see the poor ragged fellow back yonder at home who is paying taxes to support these retired officers in luxury, who leave the Government service just as soon as they can be retired and go on some private pay roll, getting large emoluments there. I submit, Mr. President, that this amendment ought to be adopted.

I leave the minimum at $10,000 a year, not $3,000, as is done in the case of Government employment. I would prefer $3,000, but I fear the defeat of the amendment. If retired officers are now drawing over $10,000 in private life as compensation for personal services, it does not affect their income from savings; but if for personal service they are drawing as much as $10,000 in private life, then, in the period of this emergency, the Government ought to withdraw from them their retired pay and let them subsist on the $10,000 which they are drawing in private life. Retired pay is a pension, and nothing but a pension. If these members of the Economy League are so anxious to reduce the pensions or compensation or disability allowances of crippled, or sick, or maimed and disabled veterans who were enlisted men, they ought not complain at a reduction of their own pensions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am in sympathy with the principle discussed by the Senator from Texas, but I am somewhat disturbed over this feature: Presumably and theoretically all these retired officers are drawing compensation which they have earned. It is not simply a gift, but it was the theory of Congress in awarding it that the character of their service and the length of their service entitled them to retired pay as a matter of right and not simply as a matter of courtesy or gift. Now, if that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will ask for recognition in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that theory is correct, ought there to be any distinction made between a man who happens to retire and receive this reward as retirement compensation and who goes into private employment, and the man who, working for the Government while drawing retirement pay, is also drawing a salary for the work which he does? Is there any distinction, in other words, between a retired officer who goes into private enterprise and who receives whatever compensation he can obtain and the one who remains on the Government pay roll and at the same time is receiving retirement pay?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. BARKLEY. I have asked the Senator a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is all right; the Senator may ask me one.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator is correct in that, if he thinks they ought to be treated similarly, how does he justify his own vote for limiting the retired officer who works for the Government to $3,000, and not limiting the man who works in private employment? If the retirement pay is a vested right which he has earned, how does the Senator justify his vote a few moments ago in cutting down the retired pay of enlisted men 10 per cent?

Mr. BARKLEY. If it is justified at all—and I rather take that slant of it—it is on the ground that a man ought not to be drawing from two sources in the Government beyond a certain amount of money. The fact that he retires entirely and separates himself from the Government and then goes out into private life and receives private compensation for whatever he does, if he earned his retirement pay in the beginning, makes, it seems to me, a distinction. I find it a little difficult to square that with the situation about which the Senator has been talking. I am really seeking information rather than seeking to give any, because I am trying to get the Senator's reaction.

Mr. CONNALLY. If an officer has earned any retirement pay, what difference does it make whether he works for the Government or for private parties; would he not be entitled to the full pay on either job?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the question I asked the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I can not see any difference.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's answer then is yes?

Mr. CONNALLY. I can see no difference. That is why I am offering the amendment—to try to put those in private employment on an equality with those in Government employment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, this amendment has not been considered by the committee; it is a little bit complicated; it does not seem to be in line with our policy, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question? I have not any time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to indicate to the Senator that there is another feature in this amendment, which provides that no officer on the active list shall receive any compensation from any Government corporation or other Government agency in addition to his full active pay. My information is that some officers in the Army are drawing their full military pay and, because they happen to be connected with some Government corporation, are also getting a salary from such corporation. This amendment, if adopted, would prevent that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I wish the Senator had presented his amendment to the committee. It is a little late at night to analyze a new amendment, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. I ask that the amendment I offered and had printed be now laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, after line 21, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 20. The head of each executive department and independent establishment is authorized and directed to make such reductions in the expenditures from the appropriations made by the regular annual appropriations act for the several purposes of his department or establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934 (except, in the case of the Treasury Department, appropriations for acquisition of sites for and construction of public buildings and the appropriation for addition to the cumulative sinking fund pursuant to sec. 308 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932), as will in the aggregate equal at least 5 per cent of the total amount so appropriated for his department or establishment for such year (excluding, in the case of the Treasury Department, the appropriations specified above). Such reductions shall be made in a manner calculated to bring about the greatest economy in expenditures consistent with the efficiency of the service.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Last Saturday a similar amendment was offered by the able Senator from New Mexico. Subsequently an amendment offered by me to that amendment was presented and adopted by a substantial vote. The original amendment of the Senator from New Mexico related merely to the bill under consideration. The amendment now tendered would extend the principle he sought to apply to all the departments and not merely to the two departments covered by the pending bill. My inquiry is as to the effect of this amendment, if adopted, upon the earlier amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not recall definitely what was done with the amendment as amended. Let the Chair ask the Senator from New Mexico whether the amendment that he offered, and which was afterwards amended on motion of the Senator from Colorado, and adopted, has been reconsidered as yet?

Mr. BRATTON. A motion to reconsider was lodged and is pending. Disposition has not as yet been made of the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment the Senator is now offering a substitute for the original amendment?

Mr. BRATTON. No; it comes in a different place in the bill. It deals with the same subject matter, but is an independent proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will have no effect whatever upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is my 15 minutes' allotment of time passing?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not want to take the Senator's time, but if he will yield, and in my own time, if that be possible, let me say that, as I recall, late on Saturday afternoon the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] withdrew his motion to reconsider the Bratton amendment that was adopted to the appropriation bill for the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department. Therefore the amendment stands without a motion to reconsider, and, as I understand the rule, two days have expired and the amendment has not been reconsidered.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. I asked unanimous consent to take up the matter, and that was denied by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], and there the matter rests.

Mr. BLAINE. I should like, in my own time, to refer to the RECORD of Saturday. I am quite sure that the Senator withdrew the motion.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no, no, Mr. President! I will refer the Senator to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, my recollection is in accordance with that of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BLAINE. I notice this on page 3384. I may have reference to the wrong motion:

Mr. BINGHAM. I am perfectly willing to do that. I ask unanimous consent that the motion which has been pending may be withdrawn.

That is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Bratton amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to decide that question.

Mr. BRATTON. It is my memory that the Senator from Colorado objected to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Connecticut and that the motion was not withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In that case the motion to reconsider is still pending.

Br. BLAINE. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, is this being taken out of my time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. BLAINE. I said to the Senator that I am glad to have it taken out of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. As I have pointed out, the Senator from Connecticut, after having discussed the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Bratton amendment was adopted, and after some suggestion was made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], said:

I ask unanimous consent that the motion which has been pending may be withdrawn.

Mr. BINGHAM. That was the motion in regard to the pay cut, Mr. President; not the motion with regard to reconsideration at all.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not so understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the statement of the clerk at the desk, that it refers to the pay cut. Consequently, the motion entered for reconsideration is still alive. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the subject matter involved in this amendment was discussed at length last week. Accordingly it will be unnecessary to discuss it in detail now.

The two amendments which were offered and considered and adopted together confine the 5 per cent reduction to the Treasury and Post Office Departments. This amendment extends that to the head of each department; it directs the head of each executive department and independent establishment to make such reductions in the expenditures from the appropriation made by the regular annual appropriation act for the several purposes of his department or establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, as will in the aggregate equal at least 5 per cent of the total sum appropriated.

Mr. President, according to an estimate furnished me by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, this amendment will save the Government slightly more than $140,000,000 during the next fiscal year. In my opinion, that sum is well worth challenging the attention of the Senate. We talk about economy. We exert ourselves to effect economy. We cut the appropriation bills and still they exceed by far what we should like the sum to be.

I have not the slightest doubt, Mr. President, that the head of an executive department, with his inside knowledge of the affairs of the department, with the assistance of his chiefs and his aides, can devise ways and means of economizing at least 5 per cent below the figures fixed in the appropriation act without sacrifice to his department.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] offered an amendment to the amendment adopted last week, and I am informed that he will offer a similar proviso to this amendment. If adopted, it is my belief that it will not prevent the department from making the 5 per cent reduction. If the head of the department is compelled to go into personnel in order to do that, he must proceed by way of dismissals instead of additional furloughs or cuts in pay.

Perhaps that is the best way to do it. It may be that if the time has come when the Government must save in its salary rolls, it is advisable to make the saving by way of permanent dismissals rather than additional furloughs or cuts in pay. It is believed by some eminent Members of this body that under this provision, without an amendment such as the Senator from Colorado doubtless will offer, the head of a department can not reduce the rates of pay to employees.

As I stated the other day, in response to a question directed to me by the Senator from Michigan, I am not so sure of that position. I am not so certain but that it can be said with reason and justification that a provision of the kind I now offer amends or modifies existing law with respect to wage scales so that the head of a department could scale down wages, because the amendment expressly provides, in the concluding sentence, that such reductions—shall be made in a manner calculated to bring about the greatest economy in expenditures consistent with the efficiency of the service.

If the head of a department should determine that that could be done best by reducing the scale of wages, I am not so certain but that such interpretation could be sustained, because this being the later act, would perhaps modify earlier legislation; but the Senator from Colorado doubtless will offer his proviso eliminating that question. Mr. President, I think the time has come when we must economize more and still more. Now permit me to talk to the Senate briefly about the number of employees in Government service.

According to an article appearing in the Washington Evening News of January 21, at the end of December, 1932, we had 564,915 persons in Government service. We had that number of persons on the Government pay roll. It is far more than is actually needed. There can be substantial dismissals and still every department in the Government can function.

It has been my own belief, however, that during this critical period, during this crisis, it would be better for a Government employee or a given number of Government employees to have additional furloughs than to be dismissed permanently, because it would be infinitely better for an individual, particularly the head of a family, to have some income than to have none at all. But, Mr. President, I said before, and I repeat now, that in my opinion a wise and a humanitarian administration of this proposal can save the 5 per cent without affecting personnel. I repeat that belief with confidence and with assurance. The proposal involved contemplates a reduction of more than $140,000,000 in the expenditures of next year. That is the simple but important issue confronting the Senate.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to debate the matter at length. I am as anxious as is any other Member of the Senate to hasten this bill along. It is my belief that this is the most scientific way of effecting further economy. The overburdened taxpayers of this country have reached the breaking point; they demand with perfect justification a reduction in taxation, a reduction in expenditures, a reduction in expenses.

We have curtailed. The Budget sent us this year cut under the expenditures of last year. After that message reached the Congress, further cuts under that sum total have been effected. I have not the slightest doubt that the heads of the several departments can make still further economies of at least 5 per cent, totaling slightly more than $140,000,000, without sacrifice to the efficiency of any branch of the service.

Mr. President, we talk about economy. There has been more preaching about economy during the last 12 months than perhaps any other subject, and yet we have not economized very much. We must do more of it. The country demands it. Congress must respond.

The legislatures of the several States are leading the way now. It behooves us to follow. If we are unable to lead in the process, let us follow the legislatures of the several States. They are leading the way. They are cutting 15 and 20 and 25 per cent. In this Chamber we have Members who hold their hands high in dread of the suggestion of a 5 per cent cut under the figures in the several bills.

Mr. President, let us try this; and if a department comes here in December and says that every effort has been made to reach the reduction and that it is utterly impossible to do so, and can convince Congress of that fact, we shall have an opportunity to correct through a deficiency appropriation whatever irreparable injury may have been done. But we are never going to economize so long as we shrink and flee from a proposal of 5 per cent—only 5 per cent—under the appropriations made in the several bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was out of the Chamber temporarily, and the Senator may have already referred to this matter; but the Senator will recall that in all the bills last year we had an interchangeable 10 per cent allowed to the department heads to move from one department or one section or one division to another. That will make it easier for the department to make the saving of the 5 per cent.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; of course. The two provisions can operate together. The provision to which the Senator from Tennessee refers was incorporated in the economy bill of last year. It is still in force, and it will be in force during the next fiscal year, so that in making this 5 per cent cut the head of each department may employ the interchangeable provision contained in the economy act.

Mr. President, to my mind it is wholly untenable to say that with such leeway, and with the aid of the chiefs and the heads of the various services within a department, a saving of 5 per cent can not be made.

Let me make this suggestion, Mr. President: Whenever Congress undertakes to cut an appropriation, it must get its information from those who represent the spending department in question—that is, the executive department. We sit across the table from those who spend the money, and we ask them to tell us how to cut down the appropriations so that they will have less and less to spend. Of course, it will be recognized immediately that we do not get the wholehearted support that we will have if we place the mandate upon the head of the department, and require him to call in his aides and his chiefs, and say, "It is obligatory to reduce these expenditures 5 per cent. Let it be done in the best and most constructive way." That, Mr. President, is the manner through which we will economize with the least sacrifice to service.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator has stated the amount of the saving that may be effected if his amendment is adopted.

Mr. BRATTON. Slightly more than $140,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understood that was the sum. May I inquire of the Senator whether any of this saving will come through reduction of wages?

Mr. BRATTON. If the amendment which the Senator from Colorado intends to offer is adopted, none of it will come from reduction of wages. Part of it may come from dismissals from service, but not from reductions.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is possible for this sum of money to be saved to the Public Treasury without any reduction of wages?

Mr. BRATTON. I think so. I have not the slightest doubt about it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thought that during the colloquy between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New Mexico when he offered his amendment a few days ago the Senator from New Mexico stated that wages could not be reduced without a specific act of Congress. Am I correctly informed as to that colloquy?

Mr. BRATTON. I expressed that view, but I am not entirely certain about it. This is a later act, and it might be construed as a modification of earlier acts. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from South Carolina has said repeatedly that it can not be done.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator from South Carolina is of that opinion, and several other Senators whose opinion is entitled to great respect believe that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I voted the other day for the Senator's amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. BRATTON. I will take my time on the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I voted the other day on the Senator's amendment with the expectation that the 5 per cent cut would involve consolidations of departments and reductions in the number of employees who are unnecessary, but I did not think it went so far as to reach reduction in wages.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I think it can be administered without reduction in wages.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Mexico a question?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. The statement which the learned Senator from New Mexico has just made will undoubtedly determine how I shall vote upon this proposition. If the adoption of this amendment will reduce neither wages nor salaries I am going to vote for it. I want the Senator's opinion, because I have a high opinion of his judgment.

Mr. BRATTON. I do not think it will bring that about. I think it may result in some dismissals from the service.

Mr. BINGHAM. How can that be done without a reduction of 100 per cent in salary?

Mr. ASHURST. I am opposed to salary reduction. I think that is not the way out of the swamp and morass into which this country has drifted. I think reducing salaries is the worst thing we could do. I am not interested in the dismissal of supernumeraries, I am not at all interested in the dismissal of those persons whose services are not needed by the Government.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator will please bear in mind that I am speaking under a limitation of time.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BRATTON. Again let me refer to the number of persons in the Government service. Last year, after we had enacted the economy bill, the number of employees in the Government service was reduced by 7,353. That was the total reduction in the number of employees, but at the close of the year we still had 564,915 persons in Government service. That is an unbearable load during these times. If it is the plan to cut the number rather than to impose additional furloughs, then I think we must approach the problem from that angle.

Mr. President, I have consumed all the time I desire to take in presenting this amendment. I believe it is the best way in which to approach the subject of economy. It is a sad day if the heads of the departments can not save the people of this country the slight sum of 5 per cent in the bills carrying the enormous appropriations which we have passed from year to year. So I propose and submit to the Senate that the principle declared in the amendment we wrote in the bill the other day now be expanded and applied to the several departments alike, requiring the head of each of them to cut his expenditures at least 5 per cent under the total appropriation in the bill.

Perhaps this amendment should have been offered at the outset instead of the two which were proposed to the bill under consideration. The Senator from Nebraska made the suggestion that it should be done in this way. I readily accepted his suggestion. I think it is the constructive way to act, and I see no reason why the 5 per cent should be applied to the Treasury Department and to the Post Office Department without applying it to the other departments. This amendment would apply it to the others as well. It expands the principle and applies it to the several departments. It will save slightly more than $140,000,000 during the next fiscal year.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire at this time to enter a motion that the vote by which the Connally amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion will be entered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, there is at the desk an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico. I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Colorado proposes the following amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, to add at the end thereof another sentence reading:

In making any reductions in expenditures provided for in this section no wage cuts, other reduced compensation, or furloughs shall be ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer that now?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I offer it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then that is the pending amendment.

MERGER OF DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY CORPORATIONS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I want to bring to the attention of the Senate from the Committee on Enrolled Bills a matter which should have immediate consideration in order to overtake an error that was made in the enrollment of the District street railway merger joint resolution.

At page 910 of the RECORD it will be found that the Senate voted to insert the words, "either directly or through subsidiaries," at line 6 on that page of the bill. When the joint resolution was enrolled, through some error which it is needless to attempt to locate, these words were inserted in line 7 instead of line 6. By the insertion in line 7 the meaning of the phrase is entirely changed. There is no controversy on the subject. I am authorized to say by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who, the Senate will remember, was interested upon one side, that he agrees that the correction should be made immediately, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], who is interested upon the other side, will state for himself that the correction should be made immediately. Therefore, purely for the purpose of correcting the record and bringing it unquestionably in line with the action of Congress itself, I am reporting, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, the joint resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 248) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1933, was read the first time by its title, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to read it the second time at length.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest that the Secretary suspend the reading of the joint resolution. If the statement made by the Senator from Michigan is corroborated by those who are familiar with the subject, I think the correction should be made without delay.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Michigan is absolutely correct, and in order to have in the RECORD information respecting the matter, I ask that there may be printed a letter from the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 4, 1933.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Chairman Senate District Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: Your attention is invited to the fact that lines 8 to 11 of section 2 of Public Resolution No. 47, Seventy-second Congress, entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," as approved January 14, 1933, are not in accordance with the bill as passed by the Senate.

As approved by the President the lines read:

"* * * operate directly transit properties within the District of Columbia and in adjacent States, including the power to acquire, own, and either directly or through subsidiaries operate the properties to be conveyed to the new company in accordance with this agreement * * *."

Reference to page 910 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Thursday, December 22, 1932, will show that the lines were intended to read:

"* * * operate directly transit properties within the District of Columbia and either directly or through subsidiaries in adjacent States, including the power to acquire, own, and operate the properties to be conveyed to the new company in accordance with this agreement * * *."

The plain intent of the lines as they were intended to read and as they should have read is that the new company must operate all property, however acquired, directly if within the District of Columbia, but may operate either directly or through subsidiaries in adjacent States.

Apparently the only way in which correction can be made will be by a new act of Congress. The commission is, therefore, forwarding to you with this letter such a proposed act and recommends that it be passed.

In preparing this proposed measure it has been thought best and simplest to redraft the whole of section 2 of the above-mentioned measure.

The commission therefore requests that this proposed legislation be introduced and, if it meets with the approval of your committee, that it be enacted into law at the earliest possible date.

Very truly yours,

MASON M. PATRICK, Chairman.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, did he not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As this proceeding is by unanimous consent, it is not necessary to lay aside the unfinished business. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That paragraph second of the preamble of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1933, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Second. The new company shall be incorporated under the provisions of Subchapter IV of Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia and pursuant to an act of Congress entitled 'An act to permit the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved March 4, 1925, with power, subject to the approval of the Public Utilities Commission, to acquire, construct, own, and operate directly transit properties within the District of Columbia and, either directly or through subsidiaries in adjacent States, including the power to acquire, own, and operate the properties to be conveyed to the new company in accordance with this agreement, and to acquire and own the stock and/or bonds of said companies and of any other company or companies engaged in the transportation of passengers by street railway or bus in the District of Columbia and adjacent States with the power to mortgage its property, rights, and franchises, and to conduct such other activities as may be useful or necessary in connection with or incident to the foregoing purposes, including the power to buy, sell, hold, own, and convey real estate within and without the District of Columbia. Said new company, when incorporated, shall become and remain subject, in all respects, to regulation by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia or its successors to the extent of the jurisdiction now or hereafter vested in it or them by law over corporations engaged in the transportation of passengers by street railway or bus within the District of Columbia: Provided, That before they are recorded, the articles of incorporation and/or any amendments thereto shall be approved by the Public Utilities Commission."

SEC. 2. That Congress hereby expressly reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH CONGRESS?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, in the New York Times of yesterday there appeared an able article by the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] on the subject "What's Wrong with Congress?" His remarks were so timely and so illuminating that I think they should have wider circulation, and I ask unanimous consent to have the article printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, February 5, 1933]

WHAT'S WRONG WITH CONGRESS?—A SENATOR STATES HIS VIEWS—TYDINGS, OF MARYLAND, PRESENTS SOME OF THE REASONS WHY THE LAW-MAKING MACHINERY FAILS TO FUNCTION EFFECTIVELY

By MILLARD E. TYDINGS

What's the matter with Congress? Why doesn't it function? These queries are the daily utterances of hundreds of thousands; they are found in thousands of letters now pouring into Washington. And candor compels the admission that the expressed impatience and displeasure on the part of the people with the Congress are not infrequently justified.

It is not my purpose to parry the disgust of the man in the street with these delays, but rather to set down here some of the causes for the inability of the National Government to function and, so, to let the facts speak for themselves.

THE PRINCIPAL OBSTACLES

To summarize, these are the chief impediments to reasonable legislative alacrity:

1. The large number of problems demanding solution and treatment.
2. The clash of sectional interests due to the physical vastness of the country, to its diverse conditions and backgrounds, and to its heterogeneous peoples.
3. Lack of authoritative leadership in the White House.
4. The necessity for a knowledge of the international as well as the national point of view on many conditions and propositions.
5. Lobbies.
6. Selfishness on the part of group interests.
7. The system—that is, the rules of the Senate, the size of the House of Representatives (435 Members), the technic of getting reelected, and so on.

Taking up these impediments in order, one finds that this 80-day session of Congress is faced by more diverse and ramified problems than, I dare say, have ever confronted any other. There are at least 20 major matters crying for attention; there are hundreds of minor ones which, to those most concerned about them, seem of equal importance.

GREAT QUESTIONS TO BE FACED

There are the questions of war debts; of world-wide tariff barriers with the consequent loss of world trade and its problems of surpluses of both farm and factory; of disarmament; of depreciated currencies of silver-standard countries and the appreciated currency of the United States; of unemployment; of deficits and unbalanced budgets of the national debt, now again over $20,000,000,000; of agricultural surpluses carried over to 1933, among them cotton, which now amounts to one year's world supply; of railroads, banking reform and relief; of bankruptcy reform, the eighteenth amendment, beer, taxes, the breakdown of State and municipal governments in cases; of private debts, the World Court, public works, veterans, imminent change of administrations, and rehabilitation of confidence.

Any one of those questions could well consume a solid week of debate in order that all points of view might be considered and sound legislation adopted; and all the while, with trade stagnated and economic chaos in the offing, the need is for the right solution of all problems quickly. But men, sections, and interests differ sharply and heatedly about the right solution. Hence the debate on a single problem goes on and on; tempers break, nerves crack, and the man in the street asks: "What's the matter with Congress?"

THE WORLD'S "FOUR HORSEMEN"

Moreover, many of these problems are not within the scope of congressional authority. They will not respond to congressional treatment. The four horsemen of world depression—tariffs, depreciated currencies, debts, and disarmament—can not be roped and broken in the senatorial arena. They ride unchecked in the international pasture. They must be handled through the medium of either diplomacy or a world conference, for no nation can solve them alone; and, until they are dealt with, any recovery can be but a partial recovery. Again, in instances, several of these matters must be considered in concert.

Yet Members of Congress, and understandably so, do not hesitate to speak about them on the floor, even though no question touching them is pending in either branch of the National Legislature. This takes time and in turn, on occasion, draws into the discussion others who had resolved to wait until such matters were more pertinent before entering the controversy. Thus, time passes under the bridge of international despair.

Related to the foregoing is the clash of sectional interest. The Representative from the cotton States wants the cotton surplus considered first; the urban Senator speaks about the need for unemployment legislation; the industrial States' spokesman arises and gravely asserts that a new tariff is needed on such and such an item. In the meantime, prohibition, beer, taxes, and the like are not overlooked; they are debated pro and con when no bill is pending which even remotely touches any of them. Days pass rapidly by and time has not been employed in discussing an actual bill seeking to remedy a definite situation.

Perhaps, if the lame-duck amendment had been adopted two years earlier, there would be now the direction of Congress which is so apparently lacking. With a President in the White House who has been overwhelmingly defeated, and with a President elect overwhelmingly chosen, who is not yet in office, there is no sound, directing authority at the helm. The crew is all captains; the captains may direct the crew, but the crew knows that neither has too much right nor too much authority. And time flits by while the ship of state lolls in the doldrums.

COMPLEXITIES OF OUR PROBLEMS

To pass upon the larger questions now, more than ever, requires some substantial measure of familiarity with the problems and conditions of other countries as well as with one's own. To consider currency legislation requires a knowledge of India's gold-standard venture, the debasing of silver in Belgium, Great Britain, and France, and how this has affected not only our own currency and trade but those of China, Mexico, and South America. So it is with other questions. Research into such matters, not normally important enough to require much consideration, now must be made, for without such examination the solution will be of no avail. This condition frequently delays the projection of many solutions and, when they are projected, prevents their speedy consideration and adoption.

Lobbies contribute no little part to the legislative jam. These, through pressure, cause comparatively unimportant matters to supplant pressing ones. Let there be a project to reduce this or that appropriation, or to tax this or that person or commodity, or to establish this or that policy, and at once the lobby goes into action. First, it insists on long and tedious hearings, which are, quite often, but a parade of obvious facts surrounded by a labyrinth of rhetoric. Then interviews with each Member of Congress are sought, followed by a deluge of inspired telegrams and letters from persons who, too frequently, have no knowledge at all about the pending legislation.

BURDEN OF OUTSIDE DUTIES

These communications take time to read, analyze, and digest as well as to answer. This keeps Members busy in their offices when they should be on the floor of Congress. Hence many quorum calls are necessary to rally enough Members to legislate and, when the legislation is about to be voted on, a delayed Member further postpones its consideration by asking questions which, during his absence, have been abundantly discussed. Lobbies frequently glorify an issue out of all proportion, and Congress debates and considers it at great length because the lobby has planted the germ in the people's minds and they write their Congressmen demanding its immediate consideration.

Group interests and, on occasion, purely selfish interests often become so engrossed in their own problems that they lose all sense of perspective and proportion—and this when the plight of that group is no worse, and in cases better, than that of the remainder of the people. I recall one Senator who made an hour's speech every day during the whole session about the agricultural situation in his State. When he arose other Senators, familiar with these tactics, left the Senate and went back to their offices to work. A group seeking some particular piece of legislation fights only for it and will demand, if possible, that all other matters, regardless of their importance, be laid aside until it is disposed of.

THE INTOLERANT GROUPS

Then, too, racial and religious groups lose all sight of the essential tolerance necessary in legislation in such a country as the United States. In such matters it takes days of strenuous effort to avert such silly and prejudiced attempts as the Force act of the last century from being enacted into law.

The veterans, the farmers, the industrialists, the bankers, etc., often seem oblivious of the national welfare in their zeal for their own concerns. The unemployed may starve, war may hover on the horizon, surpluses may stagnate, but the groups demand that their matter be attended to, pronto. The man who writes one day demanding a reduction in national expenditures wires the next asking that there be no reduction in his subsidy or compensation. These contrary demands tend to keep the national legislature in a turmoil.

The Member of Congress must be callous to these undisguised exhibitions of selfishness. It seems that few—oh, so very few—ever come forward with a proposition of unselfishness.

And selfishness is not the least element in keeping the United States in the throes of unrest while needed legislation is pulled and hauled by the interested parties. A banker writes demanding that we reduce the outlay for veterans. I answer that there is room for proper retrenchment in veterans' expenditures, that it will have my support; I point out, as well, that the interest charge on our national debt, a part of which is soon to mature, is $750,000,000 annually and won't he be glad to surrender his 4½ per cent Liberties for securities (the best in the whole world) bearing 2 or 2½ per cent, so that we can reduce the necessary taxation to care for interest also. This was done in a patriotic campaign in Great Britain.

He replies that that will not be practical, because * * *. But the banker's refusal to be unselfish makes the Congressman less sympathetic to other needed reductions in other expenditures. Hence, no retrenchment at all occurs, for each group is organized to protect what it already has or enjoys. In the end the banker's refusal to be unselfish is the real explanation of his high income-tax brackets. The poorer man, who likewise refuses, forces the imposition of tobacco and other commodity taxes upon all other citizens.

SENATE RULES OBSOLETE

Finally, the Senate rules permitting unlimited debate are, to my view, archaic and anachronistic. I see no reason why the rules of any business discussion should not apply to the Nation's business. Debate, except on certain special days, should be confined to the pending matter, and not, as now, open to every subject from the spread of hog cholera in Kansas to slavery in Abyssinia. A majority of the Senate should be able to bring any proposition to vote at any time, at least in periods of national emergency.

The 435 memberships of the House of Representatives are too many, in my opinion, and a total of 300 Members would make that body more useful. Its present size compels its managing force, the Rules Committee, to make drastic limitations on the right of debate and amendment. An amendment to the country's Constitution has been passed with only an hour's debate (for the entire 435 Members to share) and with no right of amendment at all.

OFFICE BOY OR LEGISLATOR?

The Member of Congress is too frequently forced to decide whether he is going to be a glorified office boy, attending with great punctiliousness to his mail, calling on departments for little favors for his constituents, and the like, or whether he is going to be a legislator. He can not be both. If he selects the former course, he must make sacrifices in time and capacity of the latter, and vice versa. Too often the man who devotes himself and his time to the problems of government finds he has been defeated for reelection, while he who cares for each separate request for his attention and energies, to the exclusion of the demands of his real job, is elected.

Therefore the lack of a truer test of a legislator's fitness than that which is, alas, all too often now employed by the man with the ballot is another reason why Congress does not function. In justice, much of the failure of Congress is due, in the final analysis, to the man who elects it. He demands in one way or another the very things which in the end impel him to berate his Government. For the voter demands of this congressional representative a higher standard of service in a smaller capacity than is demanded of him in the larger and more important field of legislation.

After all, legislation is the reason for the existence of Congress, but sometimes the Congressman wonders if it really is. The pique of a constituent desiring to see his Representative when told the Congressman is "on the floor" or "in committee" is such that he marks his Representative, there and then, for defeat at the next election.

While the Senate, the House, and the committees try to formulate legislation which, on occasion, touches the pocketbook or the welfare of every person in the land, the Congressman is asked to sit in his office listening to a constituent who wants him to go at once to such and such a department and ask personally Mr. So-and-So why it is that the constituent's son did not get a raise in pay last June. And if he goes he will not be on hand to vote in the committee or upon the floor; and if he does not go he may not be on hand to vote at all after the next election.

Expedition in legislative matters would be greatly assisted if it were impossible to call Members of Congress from the floor during sessions. I know certain Members who, in answer to requests for interviews during the session, spend over half the time in their offices and in the reception room talking with constituents while within the Chamber no less a proposition than a billion-dollar tax bill is being debated, amended, and adopted.

HANDICAPPING THE CONGRESSMAN

Obviously, no superman can follow the course of a bill, the contents of which are being changed hourly, and spend over half his time outside the Chamber. The regret is that generally these much-sought-after interviews are matters which could have been handled to the complete satisfaction of the constituent if his request were contained in a short letter.

Quite frequently, when the congressional Representative says he must remain upon the floor, the disappointed constituent berates him with having a "swelled head" or of getting "high-hat" since election.

A colleague of mine, a recently elected Democrat, has shown me a copy of a letter which he has just written to a political friend in his own State. It portrays vividly what I have just related as regards those seeking, for the most part, patronage interviews. I quote from it:

"When your letter came I was ill, having been very badly broken down by the overwhelming demands upon me for the last several months. I have tried to be democratic and have made myself available at all hours to all who desire to see me. I have given a great deal of personal attention to my correspondence, and my breakdown occurred upon a final effort to keep up, by way of staying here in my office until midnight dictating letters.

"I am glad to say that I am recovering, but I entertain no great hopes of being able to get through with this situation. It is indescribable. I am not permitted to write letters by reason of visitors; I am not permitted to go to sleep until after midnight by reason of visitors and long-distance calls; I am not permitted to sit in my seat in the Senate and hear discussions by reason of cards coming in from the lobby, not from Wall Street but from friends; I am not permitted to read the daily papers, and for the first time in many years I have not read for 10 days.

"If I thought it was all behind me I would be more hopeful, but I realize that this is just the beginning. I had at one time hoped to do some good work this year on the floor of the Senate and in the committee, but certainly, if I am to do so, I shall have to close my doors to visitors and abandon my democratic attitude with respect to callers.

"I left last night some 10 people in my office wholly because I was worn out and felt utterly unequal to seeing another human being. This is the first time I have tried to shield myself."

This extract indicates strongly that without being a "high-hat" or a sluggard a Member of Congress may be unable to see all those constituents who want interviews with him if he is to accomplish any of the duties obligatory under his oath.

These, briefly, are a few reasons why "Congress fiddles," and I feel sure, while Congress itself is in no small part to blame, that the judicial reader must concede that quite often the critic does not enter the controversy with too clean hands.

RECESS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 9 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 7, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose glory flames from sun to star, yet to each loving heart how near Thou art, to-day sustain us by Thy holy presence, for we are walking the way checkered with light and shadow, with joy and tears. Do Thou soften sorrow, invest painful memories with grace, and make fruitful in peace the ashes of affliction. One has left the heart of our Nation. The fetters of sense were stricken from his soul, and he left in the glory and promise of eternal morning. We thank Thee, our heavenly Father, that when we sound the depths of experience that earth is not the boundary line of our vision. We praise Thee for Him, who is the Rock of our faith. Upon His emptied and angel-filled tomb the glow of the eternities will never fade away. Let us exult in Him of whom are all things, by whom are all things, and to whom are all things. To Him be glory forever. Amen.

By unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday was postponed until Tuesday, February 7, 1933.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR CALVIN COOLIDGE

The program of arrangements by the joint committee of the House and the Senate follows:

ORDER OF PROCEEDINGS

OPENING

The House of Representatives will convene at 12 o'clock m. and will be called to order by the Speaker, the Hon. JOHN N. GARNER.

Prayer by the Chaplain of the House, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D.

Arrival of the Senate, preceded by the Vice President of the United States, the Hon. CHARLES CURTIS, and its Secretary, Sergeant at Arms, and Chaplain.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives will relinquish the gavel to the Vice President, who will assume the Speaker's chair as the presiding officer of the joint session of the two Houses of Congress.

The Speaker of the House will occupy a seat at the left of the Vice President.

ARRIVAL OF GUESTS

The following officials and invited guests of honor will be announced by the Doorkeeper and escorted to the seats assigned to them, in the following order:

The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The ambassadors, ministers, and chargés d'affaires of foreign governments.

The General of the Armies; the Chief of Staff of the Army; the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy; the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps; and the Commandant of the Coast Guard.

The Doorkeeper, Mr. Joseph J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President and the Senate of the United States.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The Speaker relinquished the gavel to the Vice President, who, as the Presiding Officer of the joint session of the two Houses, called the session to order.

The Doorkeeper announced the following guests, who were escorted to the seats assigned to them:

The Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The ambassadors and ministers and chargés d'affaires of foreign governments.

The Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The chief justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, escorted by the Joint Committee on Arrangements of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet.

The Interstate Male Chorus sang, O Love That Will Not Let Me Go.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The two Houses of Congress, with their invited guests, have assembled to pay tribute to the memory of a great man, a popular President, a man who was loved and mourned by all the people of our Nation, Calvin Coolidge.

The Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following

PRAYER

O God, who art the light of every heart that sees Thee, the life of every soul that loves Thee, the strength of every mind that seeks Thee, keep us ever steadfast in Thy holy love, that we may face with utter confidence the mysteries alike of life and death, daring to live as worthy sons of God. Sanctify to us the meaning of this hour in which the guardians of our Nation's destiny, though pressed by thronging duties, have foregathered here with honored friends from the great family of nations to pay united tribute to the memory of him who as private citizen, trusted servant of his Commonwealth, and President of these United States never failed in his devotion to his family, his country, and his God; that we and every citizen of this Republic emulating his simplicity, integrity, and rectitude of personal conduct may ever thank Thee for the privilege of these mortal years which are but the earnest and pledge of life that shall endless be. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our blessed Lord and Savior. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I present to you Hon. Arthur Prentice Rugg, chief justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, a man who was graduated from the same college and was a warm personal friend of the lamented President Calvin Coolidge. Chief Justice Rugg will now deliver the memorial address.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS IN HONOR OF THE LATE PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

The Honorable Chief Justice Rugg then delivered the following address:

"In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," Calvin Coolidge passed from this life on the fifth of last month. No warning foreshadowed his going. He appeared to be in full strength when stricken. The Nation was stunned by this sudden and unexpected event. The people of the country realized at once that a calamity had befallen them. They would no longer be able to receive his wise counsel or to rely on his understanding heart. His ripened experience, singular insight, and rare sagacity with respect to pending problems would not now be available for the public welfare. The sorrow was universal. Partisan conflicts were stilled in the presence of such bereavement. The chosen representatives of the Government, to which he was so faithful, gather to commemorate his "life, character, and public service" and to demonstrate the gratitude of the Republic for patriotic endeavor in its station of highest honor. The physical presence of the thirtieth President of the United States will be with us no more. He survived by less than four years the expiration of his term. He was but threescore years of age.

The true place in history of those who have occupied exalted public office can not be fixed finally by friends and contemporaries. The perspective of time is required before a generation can arise with a wide vision, unwarped by interest and free from bias, able to appraise his achievements at their true worth. But those who knew him and loved him can not help paying their tribute of esteem and loyalty. The judgment of his neighbors is no insignificant test of the intellectual power and moral fiber of any man. It is with full consciousness of the limitation and the high privilege that attempt will be made in this august presence to portray some of the faculties of the man we mourn.

There can be no adequate estimate of the qualities of anyone without some knowledge of his birth and inheritance. The Puritan immigrants from England were in the main the humble of their native land seeking on the wild and unsettled shores of Massachusetts liberty to worship God according to their own conscience. In that solitude they built their homes and churches. Among them, in 1630, came John Coolidge, who settled in Watertown. About 1780 his descendant of the same name went as a pioneer to what was then a difficult frontier at Plymouth, Vermont. There he and his descendants lived until the future President was born on the birthday of the Nation in 1872. His mother came partly from the old New England stock and partly from Scotch, with a mixture of Welsh. She had keen appreciation of the beauty of nature and the grandeur of the firmament. She spent her waning strength upon her children, lavished on them the love of a wonderful woman, and gave up this life when the son was twelve years old. As he has said:

> It seemed as though the rich green tints of the foliage and the blossoms of the flowers came for her in the springtime, and in the autumn it was for her that the mountain sides were struck with crimson and with gold. * * * The greatest grief that can come to a boy came to me. Life was never to seem the same again.

His father was the chief man of the town—farmer, storekeeper, deputy sheriff, representative and senator in the State legislature. He was a good business man and skilled in all the trades essential for an isolated country community. He was economical, thrifty, silent. Honesty and fidelity were native in his being. He had great strength of character. The people of the region sought and followed his advice in purely personal as well as in practical affairs. For him the son had profound respect and deep affection. When the father married a second time the son found in this wife all the motherly devotion and intelligent help that she could have bestowed on her own child, and he in turn gave her the filial attention of a most dutiful and loving son.

It was a plain farm in a tiny hamlet in the Green Mountains where he was reared. It was miles from railroad or telegraph. It yielded a living only to those who worked hard. Its owner was the product of a struggle for nearly three centuries to wrest a livelihood from the soil in the climate of New England. The son was brought up to be industrious, thrifty, trustworthy. He shared in all the toil of the farm, the stated daily tasks, and the variety of work necessitated by the changing seasons. In the store he acquired the elementary principles of business.

Faithfulness over a few things was the exercise of every day. The stillness of the mountains impressed its lesson. The freedom of the out-of-doors was always at hand. The atmosphere of the town meeting was around him, where education and other local affairs were discussed by any voter who desired to speak, where officers were elected, and where taxes were raised. His was a home where example taught honor, character, high ideals. The Bible was read and quoted. It became the model of his language. The training of the district school in his town and of the country academy in his State were his.

He attended Amherst College at the cost of some sacrifice at home. He was graduated in 1895. He went there to learn. He cherished deeply its advantages. He took pains to acknowledge his indebtedness to the instruction and inspiration it brought to him. He was unobtrusive and hard working. At commencement he was grove orator, a distinction given by his classmates to the one who combined capacity and humor. In college he was stimulated by contact with several remarkable teachers. He frequently paid special tribute to Charles E. Garman, whom he described as one insisting upon the necessity of distinguishing between the accidental and the essential, and of perfecting human relationships in accordance with the law of service. Thus his philosophy of life was in no small measure engendered and shaped.

He studied law with leading lawyers in Northampton, only six miles from Amherst, and maintained his home and office there the rest of his life. His work as a lawyer was that natural to one of his character in a shire town of that size. He became counsel for a newly organized savings bank, settled estates, drafted legal papers, and tried some cases. His almost continuous service in public offices prevented the attainment of preeminence in the profession, which otherwise doubtless would have been his.

Within two years after beginning practice he was elected a member of the city council. In quick succession and for brief periods, in no instance exceeding two years, he was city solicitor, representative in the State legislature, and mayor of his city. He was appointed clerk of courts for a few months to fill a vacancy. Although the office was important and honorable and carried a salary much in excess of his income from clients, he declined to be a candidate for election. These offices show the nature of his early education in public business. They brought a variety of experiences involving companionship with plain men. They offered unrivaled opportunity for the study of government in application to practical affairs and for learning methods of influencing men in and out of official station to cooperate for the accomplishment of the best attainable ends. They speak of growing realization by those who knew him of his capacities for public service. Beginning in 1912, he was annually elected to the Senate of his adopted State for four consecutive years. For the last two of these years he was president of that body. Thus he was brought into a wider field of responsible activity.

The impression made upon all who came in touch with him was that here was a man, modest in spirit and in demeanor, diligent in the business of legislation, striving solely for the common good. His address to the Senate on first being elected its president disclosed to the people of the Commonwealth the type of man he was. Two paragraphs reveal the ruling forces of his nature:

Do the day's work. If it be to protect the rights of the weak, whoever objects, do it. If it be to help a powerful corporation better to serve the people, whatever the opposition, do that. Expect to be called a stand-patter, but don't be a stand-patter. Expect to be called a demagogue, but don't be a demagogue. Don't hesitate to be as revolutionary as science. Don't hesitate to be as reactionary as the multiplication table. Don't expect to build up the weak by pulling down the strong. Don't hurry to legislate. Give administration a chance to catch up with legislation. * * *

Statutes must appeal to more than material welfare. Wages won't satisfy, be they never so large. Nor houses; nor lands; nor coupons, though they fall thick as the leaves of autumn. Man has a spiritual nature. Touch it, and it must respond as the magnet responds to the pole. To that, not to selfishness, let the laws of the Commonwealth appeal. Recognize the immortal worth and dignity of man. Let the laws of Massachusetts proclaim to her humblest citizen, performing the most menial task, the recognition of his manhood, the recognition that all men are peers, the humblest with the most exalted, the recognition that all work is glorified. Such is the path to equality before the law. Such is the foundation of liberty under the law. Such is the sublime revelation of man's relation to man—democracy.

His course demonstrated that these were no empty words but were underlying principles of his conduct. He supported measures designed to promote social service and the welfare of labor. But he was no specialist in legislation. He studied every problem in the light of the promotion of the general welfare as he conceived it to be.

In 1915 he offered himself as candidate for lieutenant governor. This was his first appeal to the voters in a statewide contest. He was elected and served three years. That office afforded occasion for intimate knowledge of various administrative departments and State institutions and for relief to the governor in numerous ways during the stress of the Great War. Every privilege for service of this nature was fully utilized.

In November, 1918, he was elected governor. His administration was notable in many respects. By recent amendment to the State constitution it became necessary to reorganize and consolidate the executive and administrative work of the Commonwealth from many over a hundred departments into not more than twenty. He pressed for legislation to make quickly effective this mandate of the people and became obligated to appoint the heads of these new departments, a work of momentous importance fraught with much political danger but performed to general satisfaction. He interposed a veto to several measures supposed to possess a wide popular appeal but which he believed to be unsound on unanswerable grounds. One event of his administration so overshadows all others in significance that, weighty as they are, they seem on this occasion not to require discussion. The causes of the police trouble in Boston need not be rehearsed. They have been often stated. Three-quarters of the force abandoned their posts of duty and left the public well-nigh unprotected. The governor was obliged to call out the entire State guard to preserve the public safety. Alluring voices warned him that adherence to his views would mean his defeat and political ruin in the election then not sixty days away. He replied that it was not necessary that he should be reelected. There were many suggestions for concession and settlement. Touching those suggestions, he said in the course of a brief proclamation:

The authority of the Commonwealth can not be intimidated or coerced. It can not be compromised.

In these circumstances the statement was made by the governor in a reply to a telegram from a leading official of organized labor:

There is no right to strike against the public safety by anybody, any time, anywhere.

The conciseness of this statement, its compelling verity, its matchless clarity challenged nation-wide attention. It was received with nation-wide acclaim. Its truth is instantly obvious. It becomes more impressive the longer it is pondered. It is not confined to any one class. No association, individual, corporation, or combination is omitted from its sweep. No particular kind of strike is specified. Protection of the public safety under the law is supreme and regnant over everything else. The chief executive of a sovereign State capable of making that statement in the situation confronting him inevitably and at once became a national figure. The impending campaign for governor, in which he was a candidate to succeed himself, was fought chiefly on the issue of the Boston police strike. The result was reelection by a huge majority—about seven times larger than that of the previous year over the same opponent. Such a triumph at the polls in those conditions was signal. It has a vivid significance in political history from the fact that Woodrow Wilson, then President, sent Mr. Coolidge this message:

I congratulate you upon your election as a victory for law and order. When that is the issue, all Americans stand together.

There was nothing in the utterances of Governor Coolidge in connection with the police strike not foreshadowed in his earlier papers and addresses. His convictions respecting government, obedience to law, and the duties of public officers and citizens were well known. His action in that crisis was but the inevitable application of his principles to a new and unprecedented state of affairs. The police strike did not make him; it "only revealed him." It tried him; he was not found wanting. It merely disclosed his power. He was prepared to meet the emergency. When opportunity came he was ready. He established anew confidence in government.

It was the inescapable result that he should be thought of widely for nomination as candidate for President at the convention of his party in June, 1920. Expressions of that nature were made in different sections of the country and were impressive in his home State. The movement gathered considerable momentum, and plans for an organization for a general campaign to that end were taking shape. When he gave serious attention to the matter he was convinced that he ought not to become engaged in such a contest, involving, as it apparently would, rivalries for delegates in his own State. Therefore, early in January, 1920, he announced that he was unwilling to appear as a candidate and would not enter his name in any contest at the primaries. Thus he was left in a position where no risk was run of exposing him to criticism in the great office of governor, and where it would be guarded and protected, so that the people might know it was being administered, not for his benefit but for their benefit, and where no other imputation would be possible. Nevertheless, some activity was kept up, and there was considerable circulation of his book of speeches entitled "Have Faith in Massachusetts." His name was presented for nomination as candidate for President, but he received comparatively few votes. After the main selection had been made by the convention his name was offered as candidate for Vice President by a delegate from Oregon. There was no prearrangement. But by spontaneous action there was a stampede in his favor, and he was nominated by a large majority. He became Vice President on March 4, 1921. Then, for the first time in our history, the President invited the Vice President to attend all meetings of the Cabinet. Coming thus to the field of national affairs, he had the opportunity as Presiding Officer of the Senate of observing the transaction of business by the Congress and also the operation of the executive department of government as revealed in the deliberations of the Cabinet.

In the summer of 1923 Mr. Coolidge went to his father's home to spend the vacation period amid the scenes of his childhood. He shared, as usual, in the work of the farm. President Harding made a trip to Alaska in order to see for himself its wonders and its resources and to gain personal knowledge of its needs. During the journey he suffered an illness, and there were alarming reports of his condition.

Then the news was so reassuring that the Vice President believed that all danger was past. During the night of August 2 he was awakened by his father in a voice trembling with emotion, who told him that President Harding had just passed away. The message had been brought over the road by motor vehicle and messenger to the little cottage by the roadside. He was aroused from the peace, the plain duties, the simple pleasures of the farm to assume the most responsible position in the Republic. Before leaving his room he knelt down in prayer and asked God to bless the American people and to give him power to serve them. Then, in the sitting room, by the light of the kerosene lamp, with the Bible of his mother lying at his hand on the table, the oath of office as President was administered to him by his father in his capacity as notary public. There were present besides his wife, Senator DALE, who happened to be stopping a few miles away, his stenographer, and his chauffeur. The ceremony took place a little before three o'clock in the morning Never was there such a transition. From the simplest surroundings he went to the office of greatest power. The aged father, plain farmer as he was, administered the oath to his son for the highest office in the Nation. The scene is most dramatic. It is symbolic of American institutions. It exemplifies the opportunity open to all in our country. It will thrill every child, no matter how humble his birth. It will inspire every citizen. It is the memorial of honor crowning merit. The place where it occurred has become a shrine.

The new President first sent a message of condolence to the bereaved widow of his predecessor. He issued a proclamation to the American people. Before leaving for Washington that morning he turned aside and made a brief devotional visit to the grave of his mother. With punctilious care he attended to arrangements for the obsequies of the deceased President. He declared his purpose to maintain the continuity of the administration and to carry out the policies of his predecessor. All members of the Cabinet were retained. It would be vain to undertake to recount all the important measures of his administration. It is practicable to mention only those of outstanding significance.

No discussion of domestic or foreign problems was made until his first message to the Congress in December, 1923. That document aroused widespread interest. It was couched in such plain language that everybody could comprehend its meaning. It disclosed a clear understanding of the issues which the country faced. It was not too long. It avoided nothing that ought to be met. It covered the field. It was courageous. He stated unequivocal opposition to the bonus in a single sentence. It was well received by the people. Its main weight was placed upon a program of economy to the end that taxation be made lighter and the public debt be reduced. He perceived that the welfare of the country required action tending to afford relief in these directions. This was his initial recommendation. But it continued throughout his administration to be one of his major policies. In his first message to the Congress his purpose was stated to be to strive toward financial stability as the first requisite of sound government and to restore national finances to a secure and endurable position so far as permitted by the inevitable results of the economic disorders following the Great War. He declared that the paramount service to be rendered the country was the reduction of taxes as much as prudence would permit and a corresponding reduction of expenditures. He approached the financial operations of government, not so much to find and raise revenue, whether from old or new sources, as to conserve the expenditure of revenue. In the pursuit of this end he declared that the > greatest emphasis should be placed on constructive economy. Merely to reduce the expenses of the Government might not in itself be beneficial. Such action might be only the discontinuance of a wholly necessary activity. * * * The underlying spirit of economy is to secure better education, wider administration of justice, more public order, and greater security from conflagration, all through a superior organization which will decrease the unit of cost. It is all reducible to a question of national efficiency.

is an effort to enrich the lives of the people we serve. There could be no nobler purpose.

Again he said:

> I favor the policy of economy, not because I wish to save money but because I wish to save the people. The men and women of this country who toil are the ones who bear the cost of government. Every dollar that we carelessly waste means that their life will be so much the more meager. Every dollar that we prudently save means that their life will be so much the more abundant. Economy is idealism in its most practical form.

In his last annual message to the Congress, in December, 1928, he recounted briefly some of the financial accomplishments during his administration:

> Four times we have made a drastic revision of our internal-revenue system, abolishing many taxes and substantially reducing almost all others. Each time the resulting stimulation to business has so increased taxable income and profits that a surplus has been produced. One-third of the national debt has been paid, while much of the other two-thirds has been refunded at lower rates, and these savings of interest and constant economies have enabled us to repeat the satisfying process of more tax reductions. * * * That is constructive economy in the highest degree. It is the cornerstone of prosperity. It should not fail to be continued. This action began by the application of economy to public expenditure. If it is to be permanent, it must be made so by the repeated application of economy. * * * The country is in the midst of an era of prosperity more extensive and of peace more permanent than it has ever before experienced. But, having reached this position, we should not fail to comprehend that it can easily be lost. * * * The actions of the Government must command the confidence of the country. * * * We must extend to other countries the largest measure of generosity, moderation, and patience. In addition to dealing justly, we can well afford to walk humbly. * * * Our country has been provided with the resources with which it can enlarge its intellectual, moral, and spiritual life. The issue is in the hands of the people. Our faith in man and God is the justification for the belief in our continuing success.

This policy was adopted and urged, not under the pressure of economic depression but during a period of increasing prosperity, when there might have been incitement to easy spending of public money. It was his steadfast purpose, without impairing the efficient operation of all the functions of government, to relieve the country from its enormous public debt and to diminish taxes. His vetoes were in part to the same end, although they were based upon his belief in the fundamental unsoundness of the bills to which they were directed.

A most remarkable achievement of his administration was the carrying home to the minds and hearts of his countrymen an unfaltering faith in his capacity and intention to do what was right under all circumstances. His nomination and election as Vice President were due in no small measure to belief in his courage, his simplicity, and honesty of purpose. This confidence among the people steadily grew.

One example serves to emphasize this fact. Within a few months after he became President there were startling revelations tending to show corruption in the leasing of Government oil lands. Officials in high station of his own party, as well as others, were under odious suspicion. With calmness and firmness he declared that, while everybody was entitled to the presumption of innocence until proven guilty, he should not flinch in securing the enforcement of the law; that he proposed to follow the path of justice and without hue and cry to undertake immediate, adequate, nonpolitical and unshrinking prosecution, criminal and civil, to punish the guilty and to protect every national interest. He called upon all the people to support his course for speedy and effective execution of the laws without fear or favor and regardless of consequences. His action forthwith added force to his statement. Proceedings were instituted and prosecuted with energy. Although final results in punishment of the guilty and recovery of Government property were not reached for several years, the response of the people to his attitude and his appeal was instant. Confidence in the President was established; it was widespread; it endured. Reliance upon his integrity of purpose and faculty to carry that purpose into execution was unquestioning. The nobility and strength of his character were beyond doubt. He was wise in statesmanship. The public faith was shown by his nomination and election to the Presidency by a startlingly large majority over very active opposition in 1924. He became, as was aptly said, his own platform. The impregnable nature of the faith reposed in him as President was given unmistakable proof. This incident well might have been thought capable of wrecking the dominant party and the President. In truth, it became an important factor in making certain his power as a leader of the people. His simple words and straightforward conduct carried conviction that he was worthy of the highest trust.

In international affairs his policy was to promote throughout the world peace and good will based on a sense of justice and fair dealing, and guided by patience and tolerance. This was perhaps best made manifest in his address to the Pan American conference at Habana. It was enforced on other occasions. It received striking illustration in the conduct of diplomatic relations with Mexico whereby misunderstandings were cleared away and a spirit of cooperation, friendship, and charity was established.

Adherence to the Permanent Court of International Justice received his early and constant advocacy. He believed that our country would be safer and meet its duties better by supporting it and making every possible use of it. He was confident that such action > would make a greater America, that it would be productive of a higher and finer national spirit, and of a more complete national life * * *

> would add more securities to human rights and more guaranties to international tranquillity.

The negotiation of the Pact of Paris was doubtless the signal feature of his administration in the field of foreign relations. It was signed in Paris in August, 1928, by the representatives of sixteen nations, including those of greatest power. It was ratified by the Senate in January, 1929. The contracting nations thereby condemned recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounced war as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another; they agreed that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts arising among them should never be sought except by pacific means. Whatever else may be said concerning this multilateral treaty, it is at least a most solemn declaration of the nations against war and in favor of peace. It seems likely to nourish a spirit of international accord and fraternity, and to kindle an understanding whereby charity and good will may be cherished. In times of international disagreement it turns the thoughts of people toward peace rather than war. It creates a tendency to establish means for use in times of stress for the composition of differences without appeal to arms. It has set up a new standard, around which can rally the enlightened opinion of the world to prevent outbreaks of hostility. The scourge of war has been the theme of orators and poets from early times. It has been burned into the consciousness of the present generation by the frightful sacrifices of the Great War. Peace has been one of the loftiest moral aspirations of the race. It was the burden of the angel song on the night of the Nativity. The adoption of the provisions of the treaty by so extensive an international agreement constituted a realization of practical idealism of transcendent importance.

When, in 1927, Mr. Coolidge made to the country his famous announcement, "I do not choose to run for President in 1928," it was the general sentiment that he was at the zenith of popularity. His nomination and reelection as President, if he were willing, appeared to be beyond reasonable doubt. No personal ambition tarnished that great office. He renounced what seemed to be a certainty. He returned from the White House to his humble home. Having come out from among the plain people to serve them greatly, he became one of them again after the performance of his official work.

In the comparatively brief time left to him his conduct was an example of the best that an ex-President may be. Complete propriety characterized his bearing. He declined all offers of highly remunerative business and other connections. He served as a director in a great life insurance company with the thought of encouraging thrift and protecting the savings of many policyholders. He became president of the American Antiquarian Society because of his genuine sympathy with its design to cultivate study in the sources of American history and to assemble a rich store of material for that purpose. He contributed articles to magazines, some of which were gathered into his autobiography. Beginning with July 1, 1930, for a year on each secular day he wrote a brief article, syndicated and published widely in newspapers throughout the country. These were short comments upon matters of general interest. They were of notable value in promoting sound thought touching public affairs among all the people. At the time of his death he was engaged with a committee of eminent citizens in the difficult study of transportation problems of the country.

No estimate of Mr. Coolidge rightly can omit reference to the extraordinary felicity of his home life. It was in the early days of his practice of law that there came the crowning fortune of personal life in being wedded to the woman of his choice. The half of the two-family wooden house on Massasoit Street, in Northampton, was rented. That remained the home until some time after he ceased to be President. Shortly after leaving the White House he wrote of their marriage in these words:

> From our being together we seemed naturally to come to care for each other. We became engaged in the early summer of 1905 and were married at her home in Burlington, Vermont, on October 4 of that year. * * * We thought we were made for each other. For almost a quarter of a century she has borne with my infirmities, and I have rejoiced in her graces.

Vivacity and intelligence were combined with gracious simplicity in her rare natural charm. Accurate intuition and correct judgment marked her every act. She contributed in no small measure to the hold of her husband upon the people. The whole Nation was a growingly enthusiastic witness to the unaffected kindness and inimitable attractiveness of the first lady. The life of these two joined in one has been the American ideal. They have shared the exquisite joy of the birth and nurture of children. Sorrow has befallen them and bound them closer. They presented perfect illustration of his own words:

> The destiny, the greatness of America lies around the hearthstone. If thrift and industry are taught there and the example of self-sacrifice oft appears, if honor abide there and high ideals, if there the building of fortune be subordinate to the building of character, America will live in security. * * * Look well, then, to the hearthstone; therein all hope for America lies.

A great statesman is the product of heredity, endowment, education, and the times. Mr. Coolidge was the son of generations inured to toil and discipline amid the mute eloquence of mountain and valley, inspired by the strength and beauty of nature, trained by association with the keen witted, honest, industrious inhabitants of the sparsely settled country. He typified the characteristics of the race from which he sprang. He was not given to emotion. He was shy. His path was steep; it could be scaled only by unyielding determination. In no small measure he had clearness of perception, retentiveness of memory, soundness of judgment. He applied these faculties with the greatest perseverance to whatever required his attention. Industry was his early training. It grew with his years. Thrift was the habit of his life. It was applied not alone to material affairs but to time, speech, energy. His intellectual resources were directed unwaveringly but without waste to the accomplishment of his main aims. He was not infrequently termed silent. This was one aspect of the shrewdness of his nature. No one understood better than he that the unspoken thought never wounds, never harms, never needs to be modified or withdrawn. When speech was required, he never failed. His tastes and manner of living were simple. Many examples of his keen and kindly wit found their way into the common knowledge of his countrymen.

His talents were extraordinary. His ability in statecraft was of the highest order. His vision of the needs of the country was wide, profound, unclouded. His opinion as to what could be accomplished was sure. His judgment was true. The power of his mind was capable of dealing with any exigency. There accompanied his every act a reserve force susceptible of coping successfully with a more extreme need. His humility and quiet may have obscured these great qualities to the unthinking. They were clear to those who knew him. They were sensed by the mass of the plain people and supported their confidence in him.

Few Presidents have made imperishable contributions to literature. Some utterances of Mr. Coolidge may be thought to reach close to that height. Rarely is a sentence more moving than his reference to the love he bore to the State of Vermont:

> Here I first saw the light of day; here I received my bride; here my dead lie pillowed on the breast of the everlasting hills.

His address on the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock compressed into two printed pages of genuine eloquence the meaning of that great event. In another connection occurs a touching reference to the birthplace of the great:

> Men build monuments above the graves of their heroes to mark the end of a great life, but women seek out the birthplace and build their shrine, not where a great life had its ending but where it had its beginning, seeking with a truer instinct the common source of things not in that which is gone forever but in that which they know will again be manifest. Life may depart, but the source of life is constant.

These are but selected illustrations. They appeal to common impulses of mankind. They are memorable, if not indeed unfading. He was a scholarly man. The science and administration of government were the dominant subjects of his attention and investigation. But after studying law he read numerous books in French and the whole of Dante in the original Italian. His interest in education caused him to serve as a trustee of his college for the last decade of his life. He was the embodiment of the strongest and best in character. His own words concerning others describe himself. He was endowed with "the highest type of intellectual power—simplicity and directness; the highest type of character—fidelity and honesty." "An all-embracing intellectual honesty saved him from deceiving himself." He was a deeply religious man, constant in his attendance upon public worship. References to this need in national and personal life were not infrequently on his lips. He declared it to be his > conviction that our Government rests on religion; that religion is the source from which we derive our reverence for truth and justice, for equality and liberty, and for the rights of mankind.

The years of the twentieth century preceding his presidency had seen much political agitation and change and had witnessed the upheaval of the Great War and the disillusionment following its close. The country needed an opportunity to readjust itself. The people wanted to attend to their own affairs. They were reassured to know that in the office of President was a man of rugged honesty, calmness, wisdom; who was reticent, modest, courageous, experienced; to whom no duty was trifling or obscure; who had broad sympathy and deep understanding of his fellow men. The depth and breadth of his nature, the acuteness of his mind, the soundness of his moral purpose, the resources of his wisdom were sufficient for every day and for any emergency. His capacity, his temperament, industry, simplicity were adapted to the times and to the work to be done.

The people responded to his ability to discern their thoughts and needs. They looked to him, not for new and startling theories of government, economics, or politics, but for expression of their inmost spiritual longings and aspirations. They were not disappointed. They could understand him. They thought of him as one of their own kin. They bestowed on him in steadily increasing measure deep, constant, unshaken confidence. They paid most illustrious honor, not so much to what he had done but to what he was. They showed thorough appreciation of his noble character. He was the incarnation of the ideal of the America of his day.

These lines, which appealed to his own soul, may be the message of his life:

> O heart, be strong!
> Be radiant to do battle for the right;
> Hold high truth's stainless flag, walk in the light,
> And bow not weakly to the rule of wrong.

The Interstate Male Chorus sang Crossing the Bar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The benediction will be pronounced by the Chaplain of the House, Doctor Montgomery.

Dr. James Shera Montgomery, Chaplain of the House of Representatives, pronounced the benediction, as follows:

BENEDICTION

And now unto Him who is able to keep you from falling and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with great joy, unto the only wise God, our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. And now may grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit abide with us and keep us always. Amen and amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint session of the two Houses is now dissolved.

Thereupon the President and his Cabinet, the diplomatic corps, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Commandant of the Marine Corps and the Commandant of the Coast Guard, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Vice President and the Senate retired.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings of to-day be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Joint Resolution No. 10

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill known as the Glenn-Smith bill, providing for the refunding by the National Treasury of all levee and drainage district bonds, said disbursement of the Treasury to be repaid over a period of 30 or 40 years at a small rate of interest; and

Whereas this great burden on the farmers of large areas of our State is causing an abandonment of thousands of acres of the most fertile and productive lands within our State; and

Whereas said Glenn-Smith bill provides for the purchase by the Government of the bonds of the various levee and drainage canal districts at a rate no higher than said bonds are selling on the open market; and

Whereas great and lasting benefits would accrue to many thousands of farmers of our State at no cost ultimately to the National Government by the enactment of said Glenn-Smith bill: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the forty-ninth general assembly (the senate concurring therein), That the National Congress be, and it is hereby, memorialized to give precedence to a consideration of said Glenn-Smith bill, to the end that relief from a great portion of their burdens may be speedily extended to a suffering and worthy portion of our population.

LITTLE, of Mississippi County.
HARRIS, of Crittenden County.

JAMES R. CAMPBELL, Chief Clerk.

Mr. BLAINE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the adoption by Congress of a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution repealing the eighteenth amendment thereto, and also to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate on yesterday by the Vice President, p. 3422, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. BLAINE also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the passage of the so-called farm allotment bill, the Frazier farm relief bill, and also "to moderately increase the currency with the end in view of relieving mortgagors and other debtors from having to repay, in terms of purchasing power, a great deal more than they borrowed," which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate on yesterday by the Vice President, p. 3421, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by the congregation of the Methodist Church of Burdett and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bloomington, in the State of Kansas, protesting against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution or the repeal or modification of the national prohibition law, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by local chapters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Burdett, Kiowa, and Cedar Vale; and the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday school, the congregation and Sunday school of the Christian Church, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the congregation and Sunday school of the Presbyterian Church, and the Presbyterian Missionary Society, of Miltonvale, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the passage of legislation to regulate and supervise the motion-picture industry, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BROOKHART presented petitions numerously signed of sundry citizens of the State of Iowa, praying for the passage of legislation to regulate and supervise the motion-picture industry, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 5530. An act to provide for placing the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Washington City post office in the Secretary of the Treasury (Rept. No. 1157); and

S. 5588. An act authorizing the acceptance of title to sites for public-building projects subject to the reservation of ore and mineral rights (Rept. No. 1158).

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 5382) providing for an exchange of lands between the Colonial Realty Co. and the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1159) thereon.

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 236) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1933, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1160) thereon.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE MEMORIAL SERVICES IN HONOR OF CALVIN COOLIDGE

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, from the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Concurrent Resolution 42. It is merely a formal matter relating to the printing of bound volumes of the address of Hon. Arthur Prentice Rugg on the occasion of the Calvin Coolidge joint congressional memorial exercises yesterday in the House. The number of copies is the same as has been designated in previous resolutions relating to the printing of the proceedings in memory of deceased Presidents. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I trust there will be no objection.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 42) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be compiled, printed with illustrations, and bound, as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 25,000 copies of the oration delivered by Hon. Arthur P. Rugg in the House of Representatives during the exercises held in memory of the late President Calvin Coolidge on February 6, 1933, including all the proceedings and the program of exercises, of which 8,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 17,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on to-day, February 7, 1933, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 487. An act for the relief of Herbert G. Black, owner of the schooner Oakwoods, and Clark Coal Co., owner of the cargo of coal on board said schooner;

S. 2200. An act to authorize the presentation of a medal of honor, posthumously, to the late Henry Clay Drexler and the late George Robert Cholister; and

S. 4509. An act to further amend the act approved February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 5593) granting a pension to Nancy Jane Ruffin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRAZIER (by request):

A bill (S. 5594) to provide for the exchange of Indian and privately owned lands, Fort Mojave Indian Reservation, Ariz.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5595) authorizing the sale of portions of the Pueblo lands of San Diego to the city of San Diego, Calif.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5596) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Arthur A. Lee, Supply Corps, United States Navy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 5597) amending the emergency relief and construction act of 1932; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 5598) for the relief of Lieut. Thomas O'C. McCarthy, United States Navy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 5599) authorizing the appointment of John A. Crow as a warrant officer, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HULL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 249) proposing a reduction in interest rates on Government loans; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 250) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, reducing the membership of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF COTTON—AMENDMENT

Mr. SMITH submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 5122) to provide for the purchase and sale of cotton under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. GEORGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 14562, the legislative appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 4, line 7 (in the item for clerks to the Senate Committee on Civil Service), to strike out "assistant clerk, $2,220" and insert "two assistant clerks at $2,220 each."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that, pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 44, the Speaker had appointed Mr. LAMAR JEFFERS a teller on the part of the House to count the electoral vote on February 8, 1933, vice Mr. PATRICK J. CARLEY, resigned.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING SYSTEMS

Mr. WHEELER subsequently said: Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it may be read. Then I am going to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I wish to say that I do not think it will require any discussion. The resolution merely calls upon the Comptroller General to point out before the 15th of April how certain economies may be effectuated in the accounting department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The resolution will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 350), as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to submit, on or before April 15, 1933, to the Senate of the United States a detailed report of the savings that may be effected through the reorganization, centralization, consolidation and/or elimination of accounting records, accounting and audit procedures, disbursing and collecting officers, and purchasing and warehousing activities of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think I am in favor of the resolution, but will the Senator from Montana let it go over until to-morrow?

Mr. WHEELER. Very well.

Mr. FESS. The only reason why I make the request is that I should like to make a little investigation as to what sort of an effort it would require and whether it is going to entail any considerable expenditure. I should like to have the Senator let it go over and I assure him that I will not attempt to delay its consideration. I merely wish to ascertain, by an examination of the resolution, exactly what he wishes to accomplish by it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Ohio to object, and the resolution goes over under the rule.

REPORTS ON DEPARTMENTAL FUNCTIONS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I send to the desk another resolution of a similar nature calling upon the heads of the different departments for certain information along the same line. I ask to have it read and I presume it also will go over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the resolution be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 351), as follows:

Resolved, That the heads of all departments, independent establishments, and Government owned and/or controlled corporations be, and are hereby, directed to submit on or before April 15, 1933, to the President of the United States and to the Senate of the United States, a detailed report of all functions, including accounting, disbursing, collecting, purchasing, and personnel, performed by said departments, establishments, and corporations, together with the authority for the performance of each function and the annual cost thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be received and lie over under the rule.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], which will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Colorado proposes the following amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, to add at the end thereof another sentence reading:

In making any reductions in expenditures provided for in this section no wage cuts, other reduced compensation, or furloughs shall be ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether it would be possible to interpret his amendment so as to prevent 100 per cent wage cuts?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, as I understand the committee proposal—that is, the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], supported by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]—complete authority is vested in the heads of departments to make dismissals, order furloughs, and deal otherwise with the personnel. The language of the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico authorizes the heads of departments to make reductions in expenditures which in the aggregate will equal at least 5 per cent of the total amount appropriated for such departments.

From the beginning of the discussion of this question I have pointed out that I fear that under the language used reductions even to the extent of 100 per cent—or equivalent to dismissals—are permissable. I am therefore hoping that during the course of our discussion the Senator from New Mexico will be willing to withdraw the words "at least."

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator did not reply specifically to my question, although I imply from his answer that his amendment would mean that no one's salary should be reduced 100 per cent; in other words, that there could be no dismissals under his amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is not what I was endeavoring to say to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The language of the amendment has relation to reductions in expenditures. It does not relate to dismissals from the service, and I do not think there is anyone who would construe the amendment as affecting the right to remain in the service or the right of the head of a department to dismiss someone from the service.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the able Senator from Arkansas refer to the language of the Bratton amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I refer to the language of the Costigan amendment, which was the subject of inquiry by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the views expressed by the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Colorado are exactly in accordance with my own. I merely wanted to get it definitely of record that adoption of the amendment means the dismissal of hundreds, if not thousands, of Government employees.

I realize perfectly well that there are organizations in the country whose devotion to a certain standard of wage is such that they are perfectly willing to see the number of unemployed increased in order to maintain that standard of wage. The effect of the amendment, if adopted, will be to increase greatly the hardship and the unemployment among the people of the United States. Let there be no question about that whatsoever. In order to prevent any administrative furloughs, any further legislative furloughs, the Senator from Colorado prefers to see dismissals, because that is the only way in many departments in which a 5 per cent cut could possibly be accomplished.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator must have misunderstood me. I said that, in my judgment, the language of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado has no relationship to the subject of dismissals from the service. It does not affect dismissals.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; except that, in connection with the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, it encourages and forces dismissals. There are departments in which practically all the appropriation is used for personal services.

Mr. COUZENS and Mr. COSTIGAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Michigan, who, I think, rose first.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Connecticut if the real situation which he describes could not be avoided by rejecting both these amendments?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly, I think it could.

Mr. COUZENS. We ought to reject both the Bratton amendment and the Costigan amendment, and then there would be no situation arising either about dismissals or cutting wages.

Mr. BINGHAM. I intend to join with the Senator in voting against both amendments; but I want to point out to the Senator at this time, while we are considering the Costigan amendment, lest there be any misunderstanding about it, that, in my opinion, it is better for a family to get along with 5 per cent less in their income than with 100 per cent less. I believe that the amendment, if agreed to, will greatly increase the suffering. We were told this morning in the Appropriations Committee by the Assistant Secretary of State that the adoption of the pending amendment and the Bratton amendment would mean in regard to the Foreign Service officers of the United States a dismissal of 50 out of 750, which is a very large percentage, and those men with families, or without, as the case may be, will be simply out of employment. Here in Washington there are Government offices containing 200 clerks. Under the Bratton amendment, without the Costigan amendment, it will be possible to reduce the salary of each of those clerks 5 per cent to meet the demands of the Bratton amendment; but under the Costigan amendment it will be necessary to dismiss 5 per cent of the employees. That is the only way the saving could be effected.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; Mr. President.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that if there are departments in which that would be the result, it would be undoubtedly easy for the Senator to provide for an exception with respect to those departments. May I further say that the Senator also apparently disagrees with the author of the original amendment, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], who last night positively stated:

> I said before, and I repeat now, that, in my opinion, a wise and a humanitarian administration of this proposal can save the 5 per cent without affecting personnel. I repeat that belief with confidence and with assurance.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a very convenient belief to have. I have no doubt the Senator is entirely sincere in it. If I could believe that also I would not now be speaking, but, from my study of matters in the Appropriations Committee during the past five years, I do not agree with the Senator's belief. The Appropriations Committee is endeavoring from time to time to make reductions. Last year, under the orders of the Senate, we made reductions of 10 per cent in the appropriations for a number of the departments including the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, Labor, and, I think, Interior; those departments were affected by that 10 per cent cut. In our efforts to meet that demand it was utterly impossible for us not to cut the appropriations for personal services. If the Senator from New Mexico should change his amendment so as to make it permissive and advisory and not directory, then I agree that it might be possible to get along without wholesale dismissals and without wholesale reductions in salaries; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment now offered by the Senator from New Mexico is directive; a department has no choice but to make at least a 5 per cent reduction. That will cause in the State Department alone, from the little State Department, which is one of the smallest departments in Washington, the dismissal of 50 persons from the Foreign Service of the United States. Those are not large figures, but I give them because they were given to us fresh this morning. It is impossible in many of the departments to effect, without dismissals, the kind of cut that the Senator from New Mexico wants.

Yesterday the Senator from Arizona asking a question expressed his entire willingness to see unnecessary bureaus wiped out and supernumerary employees discharged. With the Senator's position in ordinary times I should have no dispute whatever, but these are not ordinary times, and I dislike to see at this time, in view of the necessity for economy, any additional Government employees thrown out on the streets with no jobs at all and no chance of getting any. I think that the average Government employee if he would think the matter over, and not be guided entirely by the opinion of his leaders and the union, would agree with me that it were better that they all should take a 5 per cent cut, if a cut be necessary, rather than 5 per cent of them should be thrown out on the streets.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, all of us, I assume, are profoundly interested in the humanitarian aspects of the pending amendment. Unwisely, however, in my judgment, the Bratton proposal disregards those aspects, since it proceeds in a fashion which permits indiscriminate wage and salary cuts, furloughs, and dismissals. As I declared Saturday, when a similar amendment was proposed by me, prior to its decisive adoption by the Senate, it appears clear that the approval of the Senate can not be secured to eliminate, as I should be happy to do, the possibility under this 5 per cent clause of any further dismissals than those already authorized by law. The purpose of my amendment is to save reasonable wage and decent living standards for Federal employees. As drafted, it is designed to prevent, under the so-called 5 per cent cut, wage or salary reductions or any further furloughs. If the Senate desires to include dismissals, no one in the body will be happier to welcome an amendment of that kind than myself.

Personally, I am opposed to the Bratton amendment in part, because it permits uncontrolled dismissals. I am opposed to it because it includes unlimited furloughs and wage cuts in an additional 5 per cent or greater reduction, when the commander of this ill-considered drive concedes that neither wage cuts nor furloughs nor dismissals will be necessary to effect a 5 per cent saving under humanitarian departmental heads. I wonder whether the Senate realizes that we already have in the law a furlough provision applicable to other economy features of the law? That provision is not affected by my amendment. It is section 216 of the original economy act, which is continued in the pending bill. Under that provision for administrative furloughs many employees have been given indeterminate furloughs, which are, in effect, dismissals, and we are to-day confronted with precisely the same kind of a situation against which the Senator from Connecticut at this moment appears to be protesting. Before the day has gone it surely is to be hoped that the Senator from Connecticut and other Senators who are protesting against dismissals may be given some opportunity to vote upon the question whether or not they favor banning dismissals at this time.

The amendment before us is confined to furloughs and wage cuts and other salary reductions in the 5 per cent bracket. It does not affect wage cuts and dismissals and furloughs which have already been put into effect by the Government.

The Senator from New Mexico, with his usual candor, last night advised the Senate that he believed it entirely possible to put into effect this additional 5 per cent cut without any reduction in personnel. I agree with him and have been hoping that he might this morning be willing to modify his amendment so that there will be no danger of further salary reductions or further furloughs under his proposal.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I did not understand the Senator from New Mexico, in reply to my question, to say that his amendment would prevent reductions in personnel. He did say it would, in his opinion, prevent reductions in wages; but I understood him, in fact, to say that it would probably bring about reductions in personnel.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that he doubtless failed to hear that portion of the address made last evening by the Senator from New Mexico which I read a few moments ago, as follows:

> I said before, and I repeat now, that, in my opinion, a wise and a humanitarian administration of this proposal can save the 5 per cent without affecting personnel.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I read from the RECORD along this line a question and the response to the question?

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I finish the quotation?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from New Mexico continued:

> I repeat that belief with confidence and assurance.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On page 3478 I inquired of the Senator from New Mexico, as follows:

> It is possible for this sum of money to be saved to the Public Treasury without any reduction of wages?
> Mr. BRATTON. I think so. I have not the slightest doubt about it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the quoted statement of the Senator from New Mexico is merely confirmatory of the one just read, confined in this instance to the subject of wages? The Senator from New Mexico is present and may correct me if I am in error.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. I intended to say definitely last night that, in my opinion, the 5 per cent may be saved without going into personnel, but if I should be in error in that, and it should be necessary to go into personnel, then that could be done by dismissals. Under the amendment of the Senator from Colorado it would be done by dismissals rather than by additional furloughs or cuts.

Mr. COSTIGAN. My argument the other day was, in part, inspired by the statement of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], who urged, if there are to be further wage cuts, that they be authorized by Congress and not left to the administrative discretion of the heads of departments. Under the amendment of the able Senator from New Mexico the head of a department is given unlimited discretion in making at least a 5 per cent cut, and no one knows how much farther the head of the administrative department may desire to go through reductions in wages, dismissals, and additional furloughs. The unwisdom of that course ought to be manifest to everyone in this Chamber.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator from New Mexico is correct—and I believe he is—in the view he takes that department heads can cut wages if his amendment is adopted without the Costigan amendment being attached thereto, then it would place in the hands of the heads of the different departments the right to cut the wages of one group of employees 10 per cent, another group 15 per cent, and another group 20 per cent, in order to reach the maximum of 5 per cent. Likewise it would mean that, for instance, the Agricultural Department might cut their employees 7½ per cent, the Treasury Department might cut some of their employees 20 per cent, and some other department might cut their employees 15 per cent. The result of it would be that we would have chaos, it seems to me, with reference to the wage situation throughout the Government bureaus.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the able Senator from Montana is entirely right. Last Saturday I pointed out to the Senate that in the case of postal employees, because of certain fixed expenses in the department, the 5 per cent provision for reduction would amount to a reduction in employees' salaries of approximately 7¼ per cent.

I have before me a statement with reference to the Office of Education in the Interior Department which further illustrates some curious inconsistencies which will result from the course the Senate is now taking.

A memorandum in my hands indicates that under the three different proposals now under consideration by the Congress—the Department of the Interior bill, the Bratton amendment, and the economy bill—total salary cuts in the Office of Education which employees will bear, if the pending legislation passes, will aggregate 23.3 per cent.

I ask to have this memorandum incorporated in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY

Salary cuts for 1933–34 provided for in bills now pending before the Senate

The following data show how the salary cuts provided for in bills pending before the Senate (February, 1933) would affect the bureau.

Salary cuts for every employee in the Office of Education are provided for in three bills now before the Senate, as follows:

| | Per cent |
|---|---|
| 1. In the Department of the Interior bill now in the Appropriations Committee: | |
| (a) Legislative furlough (4 weeks) | 8.3 |
| (b) Cut in salary budget which will result either in dismissals or necessitate 4 weeks' administrative furlough (this cut was made in the House) | 8.3 |
| 2. In the Bratton bill (at least) | 5.0 |
| 3. In the economy bill | 1.7 |
| Total salary cuts which every employee will receive if pending legislation passes | 23.3 |

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, it is not my intention to pursue this subject much farther; but, since there has been some misunderstanding of the effect of my amendment and some obvious misconception of the fact that it should save to Federal employees something which is in no wise protected under the Bratton amendment, I appeal to Members of the Senate to give attention to what leaders of responsible organizations representing Federal employees have to say about the pending amendment.

I direct attention first to a letter from President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, written yesterday. He says:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 6, 1933.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to advise you that I am pleased to extend my approval to the amendment which you have prepared to offer to the Treasury-Post Office bill, and which reads as follows:

"In making any reduction in expenditures provided for in this section no wage cuts, other reduced compensation, or furloughs shall be ordered."

It is my understanding that this amendment provides that in the event appropriations provided for in the Treasury-Post Office bill are reduced 5 per cent, that the wages and salaries of Government employees will not be reduced and that no additional furlough will be imposed because of the 5 per cent reduction in general appropriations.

It is my understanding that this amendment meets with the approval of the representatives of Government employees' organizations. I am glad to join with them in extending personal and official approval.

Appreciating very much the interest you have shown in Government employees and the splendid efforts you are putting forth to maintain decent American standards of living, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,
President American Federation of Labor.

Here also are two other letters from other representatives of Federal employees.

The first is from the National Federation of Federal Employees, dated February 3. The president, Mr. Luther C. Steward, says, referring to the substantially similar amendment adopted last Saturday:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1933.

Senator EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR COSTIGAN: We desire to express thorough accord with the purpose of the amendment offered by you and adopted by the Senate yesterday placing a limitation on the 5 per cent additional savings authorized in the Bratton amendment. On page 72, lines 1 to 8, of the bill now under consideration by the Senate there appears language continuing the existing provision for administrative furloughs, which will afford ample latitude for administrators to effect economies without resort to dismissals. We feel that the effect of your amendment is to place the emphasis on the possibility of savings from sources other than personnel.

Very truly yours, LUTHER C. STEWARD, President.

The third letter is from the National Federation of Post Office Clerks. It is signed by Mr. Thomas F. Flaherty, the secretary-treasurer of the federation. It is dated February 3, 1933, and reads:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1933.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your amendment to exclude wage cuts and furloughs from the application of the Bratton amendment is workable so far as the Postal Service is concerned, and I trust it will be finally enacted into law.

The pending postal appropriation bill carries a total of $717,033,378. Of this amount, $435,872,981 covers the wages of the personnel, leaving a total of $281,160,397, from which the 5 per cent saving can be effective without the impairment of contracts or the efficiency of the service.

For instance, $100,000,000 is appropriated for railroad and messenger transportation under contracts that are subject to immediate revision.

Other transportation costs, including star routes, ocean and air mail subsidies, aggregate $50,850,000, and can be scaled downward under existing or new contracts at considerable saving.

Rents, fuel, and lighting charges amount to $16,000,000, and there are ample opportunities for savings here because of lowered rental costs and material prices.

Thus the savings contemplated by the Bratton amendment can be made without reducing wages or adding additional furloughs and consequently your amendment will serve its purpose and prevent undue hardships upon the employees.

My hope is the Senate will not enact the Bratton amendment without the safeguard of your amendment, because in its original form it will result in wage reductions and enforced furloughs.

Sincerely appreciating your interest, I am

Very truly yours,

THOS. F. FLAHERTY,
Secretary-Treasurer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired. He has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The remaining time will be taken on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, it is unnecessary for me to add anything to what has been read. These noteworthy representatives of Federal employees know best the problems of their fellow men and women. I merely desire to suggest that it will be singularly unfortunate if the Government of the United States, in this period of widespread unemployment and general economic chaos, adds to the general catastrophe such results as are latent in the pending proposals. Certainly it is to be hoped that we here, in an hour when increased purchasing power and employment are supremely needed, will not sanction wage reductions which will be taken by industry as justifying like wage reductions everywhere. Surely every sound and humane impulse requires us to guard against new disasters while correcting the old, and building as rapidly as possible toward a new and better era.

I appeal to the Senate to see that the Bratton amendment is so improved in form that if the Senate later regrettably decides to adopt it, the amendment will do the least possible harm to the overwhelming majority of employees of the Federal Government whose faithful years of service ought to receive the most thorough and intelligent consideration of which we are capable.

Mr. President, concluding my remarks, I request that there be inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Federal News, of Saturday, February 4, 1933, entitled "Congress Should Defeat Efforts to Crush Standards."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS SHOULD DEFEAT EFFORTS TO CRUSH STANDARDS—REHABILITATION CAN NOT BE ACHIEVED THROUGH WAGE CUTS, WHOLESALE DISMISSALS, AND CURTAILMENT OF ESSENTIAL SERVICES

The way to improved economic conditions does not lie in further slashing meager Federal wages.

The way to sounder Government finances is not to be found on a road signposted by increasing deflation of pay rates.

The solution to the acute unemployment problem, which the Government itself is endeavoring to solve, does not consist in adding to the total of jobless by dismissing essential Federal personnel.

There is no wisdom in a policy which would deprive the people of the country of vital constructive services at a time when those services are most needed.

These are inescapable truths which Congress should bear in mind.

They are truths which every intelligent citizen recognizes. They are truths which legislators should have the courage to face squarely.

No sound economist favors Federal pay cuts. Each additional cut sinks us deeper in the mire of deflation, retarding the return of normal conditions.

The demand for Federal pay cuts comes not from the average citizen, the average wage earner, but from the selfish special interests, who are convinced they stand to reap large profits by permanently wrecking the whole American wage standard.

No intelligent observer, in Congress or out, contends that Federal wage cuts provide a saving in any degree proportionate to the wrongs they bring and perpetuate.

Yet it is on the specious grounds of "balancing the Budget" that the Federal wage scale has been reduced. And it is upon those grounds that it is being attacked now.

At a time when the Nation looks to Washington for moral courage and guidance, when the rank and file of employers are looking for a stiffening of their resolve to carry on under the American standard of wages and working conditions, Congress should not set an example of supine weakness.

Now, as never before, Congress should stand four square by the principles under which we have prospered and progressed.

* * * * * * *

Proposals which would arbitrarily dismiss hundreds and thousands of workers, ruthlessly and with virtually no regard for the value of the services they are rendering to the whole people, have no more merit than the wage-slash program.

By what stretch of the imagination can such dismissals prove of benefit to the American people?

Is there any constructive end to be gained by adding to the unemployment roll?

Is anything to be gained by putting the Federal Government in the same class as the so-called "big" industrialist whose first thought in a crisis always has been to throw overboard the human beings who made possible his success?

The legislator errs who believes that the wage earners of this country want him to use his influence to place the Federal Government in that category. He errs also if he believes that in setting such an example the Federal Government would be aiding in leading the country out of the depression.

At no time should the Federal Government maintain surplus employees. The National Federation of Federal Employees always has been a firm advocate of the highest efficiency and the greatest possible degree of sound economy in the executive establishments.

But these objectives are not obtained by arbitrarily dismissing so-and-so many workers. In addition to being a brutal, inhuman practice, it is rankly bad personnel policy.

Like all bad policies, it will prove definitely costly in the long run.

Wage cuts, wholesale dismissals, radical curtailment of essential services. These are the ends which selfish special interests now are inducing the Congress to attain in increasingly large degree.

Wage cuts, wholesale dismissals, curtailment of essential services.

They are the big three of deflation, depression, disaster.

Upon the highway trod by "big business" since 1929 the names of these three are writ in giant letters. No one need be told what they have brought in their wake.

Yet, with full knowledge of that holocaust of suffering, interests blinded by their own greed are demanding that Congress force the Federal Government to lead the grim procession of despair.

Wage cuts, wholesale dismissals, curtailment of essential services.

Is there a man or woman on Capitol Hill who believes that these three offer a solution to the vast problems of national economy and Federal finances?

There can be but one answer. Statesmanship will dictate but one position.

The time is ripe for statesmen to take that position and to hold it steadfastly.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I desire to take only a few minutes to point out the absurd circle in which we are going. It is my judgment that the Congress has gone literally mad over economy.

I do not mean to imply that there is not room for more efficiency and a better regulation of government; but this is no time to undertake the solution of the problem at the sacrifice of human beings.

Congress has recently appropriated $650,000 for feeding the bread lines in the District of Columbia. Now, there is a proposal, not only in the Bratton amendment but in other amendments that are being considered, to lay off thousands of Federal employees or reduce them to the point where they will have to have Federal assistance.

Not only that, but there has come to my attention the fact that there are thousands and thousands of Federal employees who are keeping their relatives out of the bread lines in the cities back home.

Is this a time when Congress should lose its head over an economy drive and sacrifice every principle that we have established in trying to maintain decent and respectable incomes for Federal workers?

Mr. President, everyone sympathizes in principle with the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]. Everyone would like to do what he proposes to do; but we are going in a vicious circle. We are laying off employees, we are cutting wages, and at the same time we are appropriating hundreds of millions to feed them in the bread lines.

Not only have we appropriated $650,000 to feed the bread lines in the District of Columbia, but a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee yesterday approved an appropriation of $300,000,000 more to contribute to the States to aid the bread lines to feed the distressed.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] have a joint bill now on the calendar providing an appropriation of another $500,000,000.

Is it not silly that we should spend our time discussing taking off 5 per cent of somebody's salary, or laying off some poor devil who is getting a couple of thousand dollars a year, and at the same time appropriating and proposing to appropriate billions of dollars to feed them in the bread lines? Can any sane person approve of such a proposal?

A very distinguished professor in my home city made a speech the other day in which he said that the people of the United States are absolutely going crazy. I concur in that view; and the craziness is emanating from the top and not from the bottom. For some absurd reason those in the most powerful positions are the ones who are conducting this terrific drive further to depress the incomes not only of Federal Government workers but of all other governmental workers, whether in States or other political subdivisions. We are responding to that drive, and at the same time we are in the absurd situation of having bills pending here for $800,000,000 to feed the very persons whom we are going to discharge and thereby save $100,000,000.

I am unable to comprehend such an economic heresy as is involved in a proposal of that kind.

Not only that, but if we reduce the salaries of the Federal employees, or lay them off, under the Bratton amendment, more thousands of people back in the States will be added to the bread lines, and we will be appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars more to feed them.

Mr. President and Senators, I submit that such an idea is an economy heresy, and that neither of these proposals should be adopted.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, a day or two ago, on motion of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], we cut off from the Customs Bureau of the Treasury Department $2,500,000 and from the Internal Revenue Bureau $1,000,000. I have received word from the department that 92 per cent of the cut in the case of the internal revenue and 93 per cent in the case of the customs must fall on the personnel of those particular bureaus.

Everybody wants to economize, but it looks to me as though, in our efforts to economize, we were entirely losing sight of the fact that if we adopt the methods proposed we will be turning people out on the world, with no possibility of getting jobs and no possible means of existence. The Bratton amendment only makes the case worse; it would make it obligatory to refrain from administrative furloughs and to keep wages where they are. It forces dismissals.

We have the assurance of the Senator from New Mexico that we could readily make a cut of 5 per cent without interfering with the personnel. I have no such information in my possession, and no such suggestion has been made to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not believe it is in any way possible to do anything of the sort. But depending on the assurance that it can be accomplished under the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico we are called upon to make the 5 per cent cut absolute.

The amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] would prevent the use of the furlough which would allow all employees, if they did not get their full salaries, still to get something, still to get enough to live on.

In what kind of a situation do we find ourselves? Obviously, if the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico shall be adopted, we will have to make the cut provided, and if we can not make it in the way of furloughs or by reduction of salaries, obviously we will have to dismiss the men and women in the service whose numbers will be high up in the thousands. I shall speak later on the Bratton amendment, and I shall go into it more at length at that time.

Mr. President, it looks now as though we could get through with the pending bill to-day, and if Senators will assist we can certainly accomplish that. I think we ought to stay in session until we are through with the bill, and unless we get through by the end of the afternoon I shall ask the Senators in charge of the bill to hold the Senate in night session to-night.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, on the floor of Congress for all of this session a great many Members have been talking about the need for inflation. They have projected the viewpoint that the dollar now is valued at $1.56, in other words, that it has appreciated in value 50 per cent.

If that is true, may I ask if the Government employee who takes a 10 per cent cut can not buy more with the 90 cents out of the dollar than he or she could have bought with $1.25 four or five years ago? Certainly, we can not rise on this floor and say that the dollar has gone up so high that it will buy 50 per cent more than it would have bought four or five years ago, and then refuse to make adequate economies in the conduct of the Government. Let us take one horn or the other of the dilemma. Let us not say that they can buy more with this money and then say that they are not as well off, if we cut this appropriation 5 or 10 per cent, as they were four years ago.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Maryland says to the effect that the dollar has gone up in value, but what he is proposing to do by cutting salaries and cutting wages is to make it go up more in value rather than to bring it down. Whether or not the dollar goes up in value or whether it goes down in value depends to a large extent upon the velocity with which money circulates. The trouble to-day is that money is not circulating, that the velocity of money has been lost, practically, except with people who are being paid wages. When people are thrown out of work, or the amount of money they are receiving is cut down, the velocity of money is further slowed up, and consequently there is further deflation, instead of an attempt to inflate.

That is the very reason why I am opposed to further and continued deflation. I am heartily in accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS]. I contend that there is positive hysteria throughout the country with reference to cutting down expenses of governments and with reference to taxes. But the attack on the situation is entirely from the wrong end.

I dare say everybody will concede that we are right at the crossroads. We must determine upon a positive policy for the Government to follow. Either we will have to follow the policy the Senator from New Mexico has inaugurated, of cutting wages and cutting wages, thereby bringing down the standards of living of American working people and the American farmer to the present low levels of Europe, or we will have to start in with positive inflation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not taking issue with the Senator on the basic proposition.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I realize that there is a great disparity between money and commodities, but I did not rise to argue that. I am only going to observe in passing that one of the best ways to cure the depression would be to double everybody's salary. That would speed the velocity of money. But what I am wondering is whence the money is to come with which to do that.

I want to say this: That I will be very much surprised if any economy is effected. I know it is useless to make a fight for economy, and I now issue the challenge to any man in the Senate to point out where $100,000,000 of economy can be effected, and I say that because, even though everybody talks about economy, nobody votes for it, and until we begin voting for it, I suggest that we stop talking about it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I think there are ways in which we can economize in our Government expenditures and can save money. I do not agree that we can save such a tremendous lot as has been estimated by some, but I do say that the thing we ought to try to do is to put people to work so that the velocity of the currency would increase, so that commodity prices would come up, rather than take people off the pay roll and cut the pay roll down.

It seems to me that it is perfectly asinine for men to stand here on the floor of the Senate and talk about balancing the Budget while commodity prices are continuing to fall, because the Budget can not be balanced, and anybody who has any sense at all ought to know that it can not be balanced, while commodity prices are continually falling and falling. It might be balanced for to-day, but it can not be balanced and kept balanced while that condition exists. Any economist of note at all, or with any intellect at all, will agree with the statement which I have just made.

Mr. President, the unfairness, the inequality, that is to be perpetrated if the Bratton amendment is agreed to without the amendment of the Senator from Colorado must be apparent to the simplest minds in this Chamber, and I will explain just what I mean. Suppose I am the Secretary of the Interior, or the Secretary of Agriculture, or Secretary of some other department; it would simply mean, if I have to reduce 5 per cent, that I may be able to cut out some things in my department to the extent of 2 per cent without reducing salaries, but I will have to make up the balance of the reduction by cutting salaries. Consequently, I will have to cut salaries in the Interior Department, we will say, 7½ per cent. But the Secretary of Agriculture may say, "I can not cut out this function of my department, and consequently, in order to make a saving of 5 per cent, I will have to cut wages in my department 10 per cent." The Secretary of the Treasury may say, "I can not cut out this function, and in order to effect the 5 per cent saving in my department I will have to cut wages 15 per cent."

Mr. President, if the Congress of the United States wants to cut wages, there is one way to do it, and there is only one way to do it, it seems to me, in fairness to all of the departments, and that is to say that we are going to cut the wages of employees in all branches of the Government 5 per cent or 10 per cent, or whatever in the wisdom of the Congress of the United States we think they should be cut. I am opposed to that, myself. I think it is wrong. But if that is to be done, if that is to be the policy of the Government, let us not leave it up to the heads of the departments to say they will cut 7½ per cent in this department and in that department 5 per cent and in some other department possibly 20 or 25 per cent. It is not the scientific way to legislate; it is not the scientific way to go about wage cutting; it is not the scientific way to effect reductions in Government expenditures.

Mr. President, for the reasons I have stated I am opposed to the Bratton amendment. It would place in the hands of the executive branch of the Government a power which it should not possess. They could say that one group of employees should be cut 20 per cent, that another group in the same department should be cut 5 per cent, and another one 2 per cent. Is there any fairness in that proposition at all? Is there any justice in it? We would simply be saying to them, "Go in and cut your department expenses 5 per cent," and it would be entirely up to them as to how they should do it.

Mr. President, there are some on this side of the Chamber who argue that the heads of the departments would not be permitted to cut wages at all. I do not agree with them in that view of the matter. But if that is the correct view, and they could not cut wages under the Bratton amendment, then why not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado and indicate that we do not intend that they should have the power to cut wages as a result of our action?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I dislike very much to be compelled to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN]. When I disagree with that Senator on questions of this kind I always hesitate with some fear that I myself must be wrong. I know that in his study of such questions as are involved in wage scales, and so forth, he is an expert; that he is not only an expert, but that he is absolutely conscientious in his belief; so that I have some fears of my own judgment when I find myself in disagreement with him on questions of this kind.

As I look at it, the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, to a great extent, will nullify the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico. He has offered it now at a place in the bill where, if it is agreed to, it will apply to all departments alike. That is the reason why I objected to it the other day when it was offered where it would only apply to one or two departments and let the others escape.

The Senator from Colorado has offered an amendment which will make it impossible, in carrying out a reduction in expenses, to reduce any salary. I believe there is a great deal in the argument made that if the head of a department is driven by this law to reduce expenses somewhere and is unable to do so without cutting wages, then if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is in the law he will not be allowed to cut wages and as a last resort will be compelled to dismiss employees. Senators have been arguing against both amendments on the ground that it would bring about a dismissal of employees. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado, in my humble judgment, will bring about that very thing unless it is found possible to make all of the necessary decreases in other branches of any particular department, and I confess I do not believe that can be done.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does not the Senator from Nebraska agree that under the Bratton amendment, if not further amended, it will be possible to make dismissals, order furloughs, and reduce wages?

Mr. NORRIS. That is probably true, Mr. President. When we adopt the Bratton amendment we have conferred upon somebody authority to do what Congress has been trying to do for over a year and found itself unable to do. I concede that it is not the most efficient way to bring about economy. I readily admit that the proper way to do it is to enact laws by which particular reductions are brought about. That is what ought to be done. I argued that in the last Congress and voted against the straight cut, but I found that however desirable and proper and efficient that way was, yet in practice it is an impossibility, and Congress ought to know that by this time.

It is unnecessary to discuss the reasons for it, it seems to me. I believe it will be conceded that two large legislative bodies like the Senate and the House are going to find it impossible by legislation to do what we all believe ought to be done to bring about economy. This provision delegates to the heads of departments the authority to make the reductions that we as a legislative body are unable to make.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I was wondering if the Senator would not believe that the humane time to do this job is when there is opportunity to find work elsewhere?

Mr. NORRIS. My theory is that if the Bratton amendment is agreed to without the Costigan amendment tied to it, this is what will happen. Reductions will be made, but no dismissals except in cases where an employee is doing some useless work or where two employees are overlapping in work and doing the same work. What will occur will be reductions, of course, of that kind, either because of useless work or because of two employees overlapping on the same kind of work; but in my opinion, much as I regret it, though I believe it necessary, it will mean a reduction in salary and not dismissal if the Costigan amendment is rejected.

Mr. COUZENS. I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he can find any authorization in the amendment to that effect? In other words, the head of every department will be able to discharge anybody he sees fit to discharge, to cut the salary of anyone whom he does not like, and to punish them in any way he chooses.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that. I admit that is the danger. I would like to avoid it by direct legislation, but, as I said, I believe that is an impossibility and that we are going to do something here that is not done in the most efficient way. We must trust somebody to do it. My idea is that above all heads of the departments will be the President of the United States, that he and they will meet and agree on some method of reduction that will apply alike to all departments. I am not in favor of having a clerk doing some work in the Agricultural Department and getting less pay than a clerk in the Navy Department who is doing identical work. I do not believe that will occur. Over and above all these departments is the President, with the deciding power of course, and in order to carry out a law which Congress has made mandatory they will agree upon the method of carrying it out.

I can easily imagine how, if they did not want to carry out the law in good faith, all kinds of difficulties would occur, the difficulties pointed out by various Senators, that under this amendment it would be possible for a department to dismiss all of the stenographers, for instance. That is true, but who thinks for a moment that would occur? If we are not going to do it ourselves and if we trust it to somebody else to do, it must be on the theory that they are going to do the job properly, that they are going to do it efficiently and fairly, that they are not going to disregard human nature and everything else and discharge people without cause. It is conceded that if two women are doing the same work in different departments which one could do that they are overlapping and that there ought to be a discharge in that kind of a case, even though it would create a hardship, and I concede that it would.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with all that the Senator has said. With 12,000,000 unemployed, to keep one person who is not needed in a position at a high salary simply because that one person has a preferential position over the other 12,000,000 is not proper, and if he is not needed we ought to have the same rule applied.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so, and I thank the Senator for his interruption. That reminds me that we are compelled to do it not because we want to, but from the very condition in which we find our country to-day. I want to say to the Senate—and I am in earnest about it, although it is a repetition of what I have said before—that I would rather save the country from a catastrophe, perhaps even from ruin, even though to do it I had to bring about changes that I believe in ordinary circumstances would be absolutely inexcusable, and I think that is the position we are in now as a nation.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, I do not agree at all with the Senator's statement, and I want to ask if the Senator wants to reduce wages, if he does not want to avoid any inequalities?

Mr. NORRIS. I just said that.

Mr. WHEELER. But the amendment would enable one department to reduce wages 5 per cent and another one 10 per cent, and so on.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator did not hear what I said or he would not have asked the question. I have admitted that. I concede that would not be right. I do not want it to occur. I concede, when we give these gentlemen authority, that if the persons to whom the authority is given want to abuse it and not act in good faith they could do those very things. I admit all that, and I am only urging it to be done because, so far as I am able to reason the thing out, there is no other way to do it.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator has voiced my feeling in exact language. I see no escape. We are in perfect accord about that.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I merely rise to ask the Senator from New Mexico how he justifies his statement and reconciles his last statement with his other statement that it is not necessary to make dismissals or reduce wages?

Mr. BRATTON. I did not say that. I do not recede from my previous statement one iota.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I can not yield to one Senator to ask another Senator questions in my time. How much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has three minutes remaining.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I yield the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the other day my attention was called to a survey made in different sections of the country as to the cost of commodities used within the home. That survey showed that, including rent, clothing, and all that is used in the ordinary home, the cost is 22 per cent less to-day than it was three years ago. I have not had time to check that survey. I do not know whether it is true or not, but it was made by a reliable organization. I was very much surprised to see that all those items, including rents and the necessities of the home, are 22 per cent less in cost to-day than they were three years ago.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have only a few words to say. I deem it proper to say a few things about the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

I agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that we are not going to do anything about economy at this time. A good many years ago the people in a school district down in the country decided that they wanted to build a new schoolhouse. The people wanted it, but the trustees did not want it very much, so they adopted a resolution and wrote it on their books providing that there should be a new schoolhouse, that it should be built on the exact site of the old schoolhouse, but that the old schoolhouse should not be taken down or removed until the new schoolhouse was completed. [Laughter.]

That is exactly the kind of economy proposals we have here. If some Senator proposes a worth-while law or amendment to a bill that would bring about real results, then some other Senator proposes something that would provide that the first provision should not go into effect. I do not believe that we are going to make any saving worth while until the time comes, and it will come soon, when our Government securities, our Government bonds begin to go down. When they reach 70 or 75, because we have failed to balance the Budget, then the Congress of the United States will become panic-stricken and will rush through legislation that will do a real injustice, a great injustice to the Federal employees. In my humble judgment he is no friend to the Federal employee who advises him not to submit to any reasonable readjustment, although it may cause the dismissal of some and a reduction in salary of others.

What is the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico? It simply leaves to the head of the department the authority to reduce by 5 per cent the amount of money authorized. No one can do it as well as the head of a department. That is the only feasible plan to follow, because we do not know, and we can not find out, just what can be done.

It is suggested that the departments may adopt different rules, and that there may be a greater cut in some than in others. Perhaps that may prove to be true. We are living in an imperfect world; we must take things as they are and not as we would have them, but when we reach the point in our governmental life that we can not trust anyone, then we had as well abandon all efforts to carry on governmental affairs. Authority must be placed in some particular person or group of persons, and that person or group of persons must be held responsible for carrying out the authority in a way that will be for the best interest of all the people. So I regard as puerile the suggestion that the heads of departments would be unfair.

Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. The objection which is urged to it by some—that it does not allow dismissals—is, in my judgment, not sound. In my opinion, if we are going to eliminate governmental activities—and that is what is necessary—it follows, as a matter of course, that employees will be dismissed because their services will not be necessary to carry on the governmental activities which have been eliminated. So it seems to me that it is an argument advanced without thinking when we say that we will cut an appropriation, that we will eliminate certain work, that such action must be taken, but we will provide that no employee shall be dismissed. That means, of course, that we are required to carry on the pay roll employees whose services are not necessary.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LOGAN. I do.

Mr. WHEELER. The Bratton amendment does not provide that there shall not be dismissals.

Mr. LOGAN. No.

Mr. WHEELER. Neither does the Costigan amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. Neither does the Costigan amendment; and, therefore, I have no objection to the Costigan amendment; but if we provide in the law that there shall not be dismissals, then we force the reduction of governmental activities along certain lines and compel the retention on the pay roll of employees who ought to be dismissed.

There is another side to it, as suggested by the Senator from Michigan. I am a friend of the Federal employees; I do not want to see their salaries reduced below what is reasonable; but the argument that if we dismiss some one it will increase unemployment is a fallacious argument; it is not supported by any good reason. Those who are on the Federal pay roll must be supported by those out in the country who are now suffering, who are now without food to eat or clothes to wear. They must help to support those who are to be retained on the Federal pay roll when there is no necessity for their services. But, as I said a while ago, I agree fully with the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland that we will probably make no real reduction in governmental expenses until the hour of our calamity comes, although the danger may be seen on every side in deficits piling up day after day and no effort being made to balance the Budget. Some more learned Senators than myself say that it is not necessary to balance the Budget, but I know that if a condition like that shall prevail for a year or two longer there must be a crash. If the bonds of the Government depreciate very greatly in value, then we will have more bank failures and the failures of more financial institutions than we have ever dreamed of.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LOGAN. I do.

Mr. DILL. I have noticed that, despite the deficit, the value of our Government bonds is higher to-day than it has been at any time during recent years.

Mr. LOGAN. May I call the attention of the Senator to a truth that he knows as well as I: That a little more than a year ago, in September, 1931, the Treasury of the United States sold a billion dollars of Government bonds, and in less than 90 days they were selling around 84. What was the reason? What was the cause of it? Of course, Government bonds are now rather high because the Federal Reserve Board has been buying them. I am quite sure that the Senator recalls that the Federal Reserve Board has been purchasing $50,000,000 or a hundred million dollars of Government bonds a week. Why? To peg the price of the bonds. But the Federal Reserve Board can not continue that indefinitely.

Mr. DILL. They had not been buying Government bonds for several months until last week.

Mr. LOGAN. Last week they commenced to buy them again.

Mr. DILL. And the price of bonds has gone up to around 110.

Mr. LOGAN. Can the Senator give any good reason why the price of Government bonds should go up, when we have a bonded debt now amounting to nearly $21,000,000,000 and a deficit increasing at the rate of about $6,000,000 a day?

Mr. DILL. I think the reason is that people are putting their money into tax-exempt securities, because they think their money is safe there, and they do not put it into industry or into ordinary commercial business.

Mr. LOGAN. Does not the Senator think that the time will soon come when the money, such as the people have, will all be invested in such bonds, and they will begin to slide down?

Mr. DILL. It will then be necessary to have some inflation, perhaps.

Mr. LOGAN. I think so, but what are we going to do? Just sit still and wait until the Government is destroyed before we attempt to do anything, and "mouse track" as we have been doing for some time?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that during the World War we did not balance the Budget, and no attempt was made to balance the Budget, and yet, as a matter of fact, after that war Government bonds went down at a time when we were supposed to be in the most prosperous condition in the history of the country and when we were not only balancing the Budget but when we were paying off money that we had previously borrowed. The reason bonds went down at that time was because of the fact that the people were making more money and putting their money into industrial concerns and getting a higher rate of interest. The fact of the matter is, the question of balancing the Budget does not affect our bonds very much, unless we should go to the point where our country would become bankrupt; and certainly the Senator does not think if we do not adopt a 5 per cent cut and do not decrease the salaries of employees that this country is going to be bankrupt. It never will be saved from bankruptcy in that particular way.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think that it will be necessary at all to cut the salaries of Government employees by reason of the adoption of the Bratton amendment; but I do very seriously disagree with the Senator from Montana when he says that the Government can not go bankrupt. Other governments down through the ages have gone bankrupt; other governments have failed; governments are failing in modern times; and if we continue collecting less than around two and a half billion dollars a year and spend $5,000,000,000 or more a year, with $200,000,000,000 of debts, public and private, resting on the backs of the people, it seems to me that it may not be long until the Government will be at least very seriously impaired so far as its financial affairs are concerned.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say that I think the Senator will agree with me that the cutting of wages and further deflation is not the way to solve the problem which confronts us, and that what we should be doing, rather than further deflating conditions in the country, is to attempt to inflate and bring up commodity prices, thereby putting more people back to work and increasing the velocity of the money that is in circulation. In that way we could balance the Budget, because the people would have greater incomes.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator. But we are not going to do that, and I do not think that we will do anything until action is forced upon us by a calamity which will necessitate our doing things which will result in injustice to a great number of people.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a very distinguished statesman once said that it is a condition, not a theory, that confronts us. That is what we have to-day. I assume that all must agree that we must cut to the bone the expenditures of the Government. I do not think anyone will question that statement; it is so obvious. The Government's income is constantly diminishing, and its outgo, unless we proceed to reduce expenditures, will remain stationary, if it shall not increase. So it seems to me that it can not be disputed that we must cut the expenditures of the Government.

I agree precisely with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who has just spoken, that we are not going to decrease the cost of government unless we proceed along the line suggested, and by proceeding along this line we are not going very greatly to reduce expenditures.

I recognize that there are vices in the so-called Bratton amendment; there are elements in it that none of us like. I do not like the idea of delegating to the heads of the departments the discretion which is written into the amendment that, under the compulsion of reducing expenditures 5 per cent, they may have such latitude as to make it possible for them to take it all off one particular unit, or to grade it, so as to impose a reduction of a certain per cent on one and a different per cent on another, and still a higher per cent on another. I do not like that feature of the proposal any better than do those who have submitted it, but I do not see any other way unless we proceed by legislation to make the direct cuts, which everybody knows we are not going to do. Every one knows that if that is not impossible it is impracticable. So we are left to the alternative of giving some discretion to the heads of the departments or else confess our inability to do anything. While, as I have said, there are elements in the Bratton amendment that I do not like, there is more to be gained from it than to be lost; and for that reason I intend to vote for it, recognizing that it has in it certain features which we wish it did not contain.

I can not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN]. It puts the heads of the departments, in my judgment, in a position in which it would be cowardly on our part to place them. It proposes to turn over to them authority to do a thing and then cripples them in the main field in which they would have to operate.

In the case of the Post Office Department salaries are understood and admitted to represent 90 per cent of its expenditures, and to say that we are compelling the department to reduce 5 per cent on the sum total appropriated or authorized but that the Postmaster General must not touch the great field where the reduction will have to come, is not an honest position for us to take. I see what is going to happen if the Costigan amendment shall be adopted.

Senators will go to the head of the department and demand that certain things be not done, although the Postmaster General is authorized to have them done, and it will be said: "It was stated on the Senate floor that you could do this without doing that; it was the intention of Congress you should do this and not do that." There will be terrific pressure exerted, not only by Senators but by the friends of the employees. When this amendment begins to take effect there will be terrific pressure from the very sources where the authority was given, against the one on whom the authority operates, not to do what he was authorized and compelled to do. That is the situation that is coming; and we will find that under the compulsion of the cut the heads of the departments will be besieged by all the friends of the individual on whom the law operates not to do that thing because it was not intended, and it was openly stated that it was not intended.

Let us be fair about this matter. When I vote for the Bratton amendment, I know that it means cuts in salaries; and I am not going to try to let anybody believe that the people who are going to be operated upon by this law are not going to feel the effects of it. There must be the application of this amendment, in certain departments, upon the personnel.

I am assuming that the head of each department will act in the spirit of the statement of the Senator from New Mexico and endeavor equitably, to the best of his ability, to secure governmental efficiency upon an economic basis. I must assume that the head of the department will do that. As I stated, I regret to have to give him that discretion; but I do not see what else we can do unless we confess that we can not make any reduction, and I do not want to confess that. Therefore I shall vote for the Bratton amendment. Then I certainly shall vote against the Costigan amendment, which in operation will nullify the Bratton amendment in a degree, if it is to be approved.

So, Senators, hard as it is for us all to do, we are simply compelled to proceed on the basis of reducing these appropriations to the best of our ability consistent with efficiency in service and on an economic basis.

It is a hard task, one that I wish we could avoid, but really it seems to me there is no choice left. I shall vote for the Bratton amendment in the hope that something in the way of savings can be effected without undue hurt. I shall also vote, when it comes to that particular part of the bill to give to the President authority in the matter of consolidation and transfer; but when I do that, I do not propose to embarrass the President and the department head by going down and saying to him, "Do not remove this man. He is my friend. He is my appointee. I did not intend for you to do that when I voted for this amendment. I do not want you to remove people from Ohio. They are efficient. They are needed."

When I vote for this amendment, I vote with my eyes open, knowing that these changes must be effected; and I am going to be man enough not to find fault with the department for effecting the thing that I authorized it to do. I make that statement because I happen to know the pressure that will go down to the departments after we put this burden upon them.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. Because of what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] stated just now, I desire to say a word.

I am glad he feels as he does about title 4 of this bill. In that section of the bill we are going further than the Congress has ever gone before, except in war times. We are justified in doing so. The conditions that face this country are just as bad as they could possibly be if we were at war with the world. We are at war with unemployment and distress and sickness and human misery. If there ever was a time when we were authorized by conditions to take such action as this, we are in that time to-day.

Mr. President, I have confidence that the Executive will carry out the declaration of policy and the plans proposed in title 4. If I had any doubt about it I should scan more carefully the measures which are now pending before us. But I know that the President will have ample authority under title 4 to do all those things that are necessary to be done, and without impairing seriously the necessary functions of government.

Mr. President, for myself I am unwilling to go further in the matter of reductions and furloughs and dismissals until somebody in executive authority has studied the question more closely, with all the needs of the Government under consideration at the same time, and a decision has been rendered after such a study.

I appreciate what has been done by the Senators who have been members of the Economy Committee. They have devoted time and energy and worry to the solution of a problem. But when it comes to dealing with human beings, when it comes to the question of placing more unemployed in the ranks of that growing army of unemployed, when it comes to a material reduction in the standard of living of the employees of this Government, I do not want action taken until the Chief Executive has made a study of the subject and has said to the Congress and to the country that those changes must be made.

It is because I feel that way about the matter and because I have implicit confidence in Mr. Roosevelt that I take the position I do. I know the manner of man he is as well as anybody in this Chamber could possibly know. I know that he will face courageously, and with kindness of heart as well, all the problems placed upon him by the almost dictatorial powers proposed by this bill. When he comes to us and says that we must make reductions in numbers of employees or in salaries, I shall be satisfied to follow his lead; but until that time I am unwilling to go further than we have gone.

From the letters I have had from employees of the Government in my State I know what these enforced furloughs have done. I know the suffering we have already caused; and I am quite unwilling to have further action along that line taken by the Congress until the President elect himself has had an opportunity to study the question.

Therefore, Mr. President, I intend to vote for the Costigan amendment and to vote against the Bratton amendment as modified, as I hope it will be, at least to the extent of the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said that it is a condition that confronts us, not a theory.

I would amend that in one particular: It is an empty Treasury, it is a famished Treasury, it is famished taxpayers that confront us—not a theory. It is a tragedy. I speak figuratively now, but these words may come true. It is a tragedy that confronts us, not a theory.

In so far as the Bratton amendment contemplates or would result in dismissals, I should regret such a consequence. I do not favor dismissals from the employment of the Government. I do not desire to recruit the army of unemployed; but in so far as the Bratton amendment proposes to reduce the salaries of Federal employees along with other expenditures, I feel bound to favor the proposal. I would rather cut down pay than to cut down pay rolls. If we do not cut down the one we may be compelled to cut down or cut out both. I do not see how Senators can resist a proposal so obviously just and so self-evidently necessary.

I think I will offer an amendment to the pending amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico: "Provided, That the salary of no Federal employee shall be reduced without his consent in writing." [Laughter.] I do not think we ought to rely merely upon the spoken word. That might be misleading. Whenever a Federal employee, in writing—perhaps it might be well to require it to be verified—will petition Congress to reduce his salary, then Senators might well win the favor of such employee by complying with such petition. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator now is not speaking in behalf of the paper and ink manufacturers of this country; is he?

Mr. GORE. I do not know, Mr. President; but if we could put a tax on red ink we could meet the deficit in the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] has placed in the RECORD a letter from the president of the National Association of Federal Employees protesting against a cut in Federal salaries. I was astonished that this high official of this organization should oppose the reduction of Federal salaries.

The Senator from Colorado placed in the RECORD a letter from the National Federation of Post Office Clerks protesting against a cut in their pay. Just what the Senator's motive was I do not know. He is a man of eminent ability, and seldom in this body does he elaborate the obvious.

Imagine an organization of Federal employees protesting a reduction in their own pay! The Constitution of the United States committed the keeping of the sword to the executive department. It committed the keeping of the purse to the legislative department. Under the Constitution we levy taxes and ordain the expenditures of this Government; but, sir, we have abdicated that high constitutional power. We have surrendered it, it would seem, to employees' associations. We obey their behest instead of serving the interests, the overpowering necessities, of the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. President, I think that every human being who is on the Federal pay roll to-day ought to rejoice in his good fortune. Those employees have good places, they have good pay, and, up to date, secure pay. They have a life tenure. They have retirement pay. They have, as they ought to have, comfortable working conditions, and if any human being in the service of the United States to-day is displeased either with his place or his pay, he has the right to resign. Any human being in the employment of the United States to-day who complains of his place or his pay ought to be removed from the position which he now fails to fill.

Mr. President, there are a million hungry men and women in this country who would sacrifice years of their lives to hold these places, and to receive one-half the compensation. Let these people resign. Let the forgotten man have but a chance, and 16 to 1 for every place will make application, and I doubt not will fill these places with high efficiency, uncomplaining about the rate of their pay.

Some one has said the Federal employees now spend one-half of their time discussing whether or not they can get a raise in their pay, and the other half discussing whether or not if they can not obtain an increase, it will reduce their morale. As suggested by the Senator from Utah a few moments ago, the cost of living in this country has declined in the last four years 22 per cent, retail prices have declined 22 per cent, commodity prices—the more is the tragedy—have declined 50, 60, 70, even 80 per cent. Farmers are selling their hogs at 3 cents a pound, selling their cotton at 5 cents a pound, selling their corn at 10 cents a bushel. We have here a Treasury running behind $5,000,000 a day. In order to balance the Budget, we are asked to levy a sales tax on these farmers, and make them pay taxes out of the wretched proceeds of their products to pay the unreduced salaries enjoyed by the favorites and the pet children of this Republic.

Senators may not comprehend how widespread and how deep-seated is the sentiment in this country in favor of retrenchment, not, if I may use the phrase, mere lip service to economy. We will have to cut down expenses, or will have to raise taxes. We may have to do both. We will increase taxes. We will heap up the burden on the bended backs of the American taxpayer, and make him pay through the nose; yet Federal employees' associations communicate with Senators protesting against bearing their share in the reduction of public expenditures.

Mr. President, I will vote to protect the right of these people to resign, protect them in their constitutional right to resign if they are dissatisfied with their pay, but I think they ought to rejoice that they are on the pay roll, and I think it would be a tribute to their patriotic devotion if they would consent without protest to this necessary reduction in the interest of necessary retrenchment, and, sooner or later, unavoidable economy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have supported the so-called Bratton amendment, and I intend to support it when a vote is taken to-day. It is a definite and absolute way of reducing expenses. The debate, however, has pointed out some possible objections and consequences which lead me to support the Costigan amendment, because I believe it perfects the Bratton amendment.

The debate has raised a serious issue, as to whether or not the department heads would have authority, under the Bratton amendment, to reduce salaries. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] says that, in his opinion, there would be no such authority in any department head, and that salaries or wages could not be reduced without a specific act of the Congress. The Senator from Colorado insists, and other Senators insist, that under the Bratton amendment it would be possible to reduce salaries and wages.

If that is so—and there is a doubt about it—one thing is certain, that department heads would have the authority to reduce wages beyond the point to which we have reduced our own compensation. We have reduced our own salaries 10 per cent, and I am not going to vote for a reduction in wages of any employee of this Government which would amount to more than 10 per cent until we reduce our own salaries further. Therefore, in view of the doubt raised, first, as to whether or not the Bratton amendment would justify a department head in reducing wages, and, secondly, if it is construed to give that authority, the possibility of a department head reducing wages beyond the reduction we have made in our own salaries, I intend to support the Costigan amendment to the Bratton amendment.

Mr. President, a year ago it was proposed in this Chamber that we levy these reductions on a graduated scale, beginning at 5 per cent and reaching 15 per cent. The proposal was defeated in this Chamber because 15 per cent would apply to the Members of the Congress. Senators were willing to go as high as 10 per cent, they were willing to have a flat reduction of 10 per cent, but beyond that, because it would reach the pay of the Members of the Congress, this body refused to go. Now, it is proposed, if the contention of the Senator from Colorado is true, in an indirect and subtle way to permit department heads to reduce salaries, and to reduce them, not merely 10 per cent but 15 per cent or 20 per cent or more, if they see fit. I am assuming now that the contention of the Senator from Colorado is correct.

In the matter of reducing salaries, Mr. President, I suggest that we do it in the open, that we call the roll. I will go as far as anybody, but we must begin with our own salaries, and we must reduce our own a little more than those of the employees who are receiving a scant $2,000 or $1,000, or less.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. We were told this morning in the Committee on Appropriations by a representative of the State Department that officers of the Foreign Service at the present time have had their pay reduced not less than 25 per cent, and some of them as high as 33 per cent. The lowest-paid officers in the Foreign Service of the United States Government have had their incomes for the past year reduced 25 per cent.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What act of Congress brought about that reduction?

Mr. BINGHAM. It was pursuant to the economy act.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. When?

Mr. BINGHAM. Passed last year.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Where is the language in the act that justifies a reduction of 25 per cent in the salaries of the employees of the State Department?

Mr. BINGHAM. In the first place, they get a definite reduction in their pay; in the second place, they get a very great reduction in post allowances; in the third place, they must pay an income tax on their salaries, which they did not pay before. All of these combined result in a reduction of 25 per cent in the compensation of the lowest-paid officers of the Foreign Service.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thought there were some explanation other than the fact that we had passed any act in the Congress reducing their salaries more than 10 per cent. It is true that we have reduced the allowances heretofore granted to them. But, if I may say to the Senator publicly what I said to the Senator from Montana when he made a statement about the number of employees of the State Department being reduced, if we do make such reductions, we will not begin to go to the extent to which almost every other government in the world has gone in the way of reducing the number of employees in their foreign services, or to which every other government in the world has gone in the way of reducing salaries. Some of the representatives of some of the foreign countries in Washington have informed me that the reductions in their allowances and salaries have amounted to as much as 40 per cent of what they have been in normal times.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The only point I was trying to make was that the reduction in Senators' salaries amounted to 10 per cent, the reduction in the salaries and allowances of Government clerks in Washington at the present time totals 8⅓ per cent, whereas for persons employed in our Foreign Service the reduction amounts to not less than 25 per cent.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I thought I made it clear that I understood the contention of the Senator from Colorado to be that if the Bratton amendment were adopted it would be possible for a department head not only to increase the amount of the reduction in wages and salaries from 8⅓ per cent but to go up to 15 or 20 per cent if he saw fit to. Is that the contention the Senator from Colorado has been making?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is, Mr. President; and I rise to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that it is my understanding that the Senator from New Mexico last night practically took the same position.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not follow the Senator to that extent. I had a colloquy with the Senator from New Mexico last night, and his reply to my questions seemed to indicate that he did not think that his amendment would permit a department head to reduce wages beyond the point authorized directly by act of Congress last year.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BRATTON. I said that was my opinion. I said I was not certain about it. Others in this Chamber differ with me. But that is my opinion. I said that in my opinion the 5 per cent could be saved without going into the personnel. I am at a loss to understand why the Senator from Colorado still undertakes to state my position as reflected in my own language of last evening.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In justification for what the Senator stated——

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts merely to say that I so understood his remarks of last evening.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Let me read from yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at page 3478, as follows:

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I inquire of the Senator whether any of this saving will come through reduction of wages?

Mr. BRATTON. If the amendment which the Senator from Colorado intends to offer is adopted, none of it will come from reduction of wages. Part of it may come from dismissals from service, but not from reductions.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is possible for this sum of money to be saved to the Public Treasury without any reduction of wages?

Mr. BRATTON. I think so. I have not the slightest doubt about it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thought that during the colloquy between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New Mexico when he offered his amendment a few days ago the Senator from New Mexico stated that wages could not be reduced without a specific act of Congress. Am I correctly informed as to that colloquy?

Mr. BRATTON. I expressed that view, but I am not entirely certain about it. This is a later act, and it might be construed as a modification of earlier acts. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from South Carolina has said repeatedly that it can not be done.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator from South Carolina is of that opinion, and several other Senators whose opinion is entitled to great respect believe that.

Anyway, there is some doubt about the authority bestowed. My position is this: Let us reduce salaries, but let us reduce our own first, and let us reduce our own somewhat more than we reduce the salaries of the employees in the smaller salaries on the Federal pay rolls. Because there is a doubt about this power, and in view of the colloquies that have taken place here, I am not going to vote to give department heads general authority to reduce salaries. I should like to know how many men on this side of the Chamber would be voting to give that authority if the new administration on the 4th of March was going to be Republican.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. COSTIGAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will yield in just a moment. I would not vote to give that authority to new department heads if the new administration were going to be Republican, and I am not going to vote to give it to department heads who will be Democrats, though naturally I have more confidence in their judgment and discretion than I have in Republicans. However, the principle for which I contend is that it is bad policy; that this is a power that ought not to be intrusted to department heads. It is contrary to the whole policy of our Government, under which we in our appropriation bills specifically name and designate salaries and wages. We do this even with our own clerks. We fix the amount they may receive and how many clerks we shall have. Now, it is proposed to nullify all that and let the department heads use their discretion in fixing wages—for the power to reduce is the power to establish wages.

I yield now to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I feel inclined to agree with the Senator from Massachusetts, but there is one thing I can not understand. These reductions, it seems to me, ought to be uniform. How is it our people in the Foreign Service are reduced 25 or 30 per cent, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] states? How does that come about when other reductions are only 10 per cent or 8⅓ per cent? How is it worked out that reductions in the Foreign Service are so excessive?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me to reply to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is because we have done it in an underhanded manner without realizing that we have taken away from them that much. We allowed them for rent, heat, and light. We have taken away their allowances for various other things, and then we have placed an income tax on them which we did not place on them before. So, everything considered, we have reduced their salaries and allowances by about 25 per cent, while the clerks in Washington have not had their salaries decreased more than 8⅓ or 10 per cent.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator is following the example set by Congress last year in the case of State Department employees by continuing an underhanded way of reducing wages of other employees. This proposal would permit a department head to reduce wages, and that would be doing it in the dark and without us knowing anything about it, just as the Senator from Connecticut states was done last year in the State Department through indirect methods.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to consume more than 15 minutes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the Senator permit me to make one statement in my own time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has already exhausted his time.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not my understanding that I have exhausted my time on the bill. When I concluded I was speaking on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has spoken once on the bill, and under the unanimous-consent agreement he may not speak more than once.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield to the Senator from Colorado if he will not take more than two minutes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

In support of what I said to the Senator from Massachusetts about the position of the Senator from New Mexico I wish to read the following statement of the Senator from New Mexico, appearing on page 3478 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Monday, February 6:

> The amendment expressly provides, in the concluding sentence, that such reductions—
> "shall be made in a manner calculated to bring about the greatest economy in expenditures consistent with the efficiency of the service."
> If the head of a department should determine that that could be done best by reducing the scale of wages, I am not so certain but that such interpretation could be sustained, because this being the later act would perhaps modify early legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I expressed a few days ago my views on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] when it was offered at another place in the bill, and I have no hope that anything I could say at this time would change anyone's vote. I hesitate to occupy as much as 15 minutes of the time of the Senate, and I would not do so except for the fact that I have reached a solemn conclusion that no good is coming out of this session anyway between now and the 4th of March, and I suppose therefore we have a perfect right to talk, because that may be the least harmful thing that may come out of the balance of the session.

In the outset I want to say that I am not frightened by the declaration or the suggestion that as the first item in our economy program we ought to vote to reduce our own salaries. One reason why I am not frightened by any such threat or suggestion is that when this matter was up a year ago I voted on a roll call to reduce our own salaries 25 per cent. Not only that, but in another body, when I was a Member of that body, I voted against increasing the salaries of Members of Congress from $7,500 to $10,000. But, Mr. President, if all of our salaries were wiped out entirely and we were compelled to serve the public for nothing the saving would not pay the interest on the public debt one day out of the 365 days in the year. I mention that only to emphasize the fact that we are not going to balance the Budget by any reduction in salaries here or anywhere else.

But there is on the part of some of us, it seems to me, a complete loss of perspective. We have had a new expression coined in recent weeks and months and that is described as a state of mind known as tax consciousness. We had a friendly controversy here the other day about who is and who is not a Democrat. I am of the opinion that Democracy is a state of mind and everyone lives in his own state. I think that the same thing is true of economy. We have reached the point where I am very much reminded of the little quatrain where the daughter rushes in to her mother and asks if she may go to swim.

> "Mother, may I go out to swim?"
> "Yes, my darling daughter.
> Hang your clothes on a hickory limb,
> But don't go near the water!"

[Laughter.]

We have all got our clothes on a hickory limb. If we do not know it, I think everyone else in the United States does. But we are not willing to go near the water! [Laughter.]

This question of tax consciousness is not an American phenomenon. It is a world-wide situation. A year or two ago there was an attack threatened against the House of Lords in England because of a proposal to raise taxes on the English people. In all the cities throughout Germany there have been protests against increased taxes and against increased expenses. The struggle between the farmers and the tax collectors in at least six nations in eastern Europe has well-nigh brought on in some of them open revolt and revolution. In all the nations of South America where there has been a revolution—and I do not like to use that word because of its implications; but there have been in South America revolutions which ran out of the country its President, who in some cases sought refuge on a warship and in other cases in other nations. Those revolutions were not political; they were economic. They were brought about by a desire on the part of the people to better their economic condition in the hope that a new administration might not only bring about improvements in the economic life, but also might bring about a reduction in expenses that are reflected in taxes.

A year ago in the city of Philadelphia the people marched on the city hall in protest against an increase of 35½ cents tax on every $100 worth of property in that city. The people of New York made an unavailing protest last year against the $631,000,000 annual budget of that city. This year they have been more successful, and that very situation threatens to bring about a very interesting contest in the municipality of New York in the coming election to decide who may control the destinies of that city.

It may not be worth much to restate the increases in government expenses in this country. It has been done frequently. But in order that I may put in the RECORD what I am talking about I wish to recite a few figures.

I remember something about conditions in the country in 1890 and 1891, when I was a boy in knee trousers in a country school in Kentucky. I remember that my father sold his wheat crop for 35 cents a bushel, but it did not require very much money then to support the family. In that year, 1890, the entire output of the American people for government expenses, National, State, county, and city, was only $855,000,000. By 1913, 23 years later, it had mounted to $4,919,000,000. Ten years later, in 1923, it had mounted to $9,920,000,000. In 1932, only nine years later, it had mounted to the enormous sum of $15,090,000,000. So that to-day, Mr. President, with a total national income of only $40,000,000,000, which has been reduced in three years from $85,000,000,000 down to $40,000,000,000, we are expending $15,000,000,000 to pay for government in the United States of America.

Men may have their peculiar theories about what is the matter with this country and what is the matter with the world, but the heaviest loads that bear down upon the backs of the people and upon our economic system, threatening the very stability of government itself, are debts and taxes. In the United States to-day the farmers owe a total of over $12,225,000,000. The railroads of the United States to-day owe more than $12,700,000,000. Public agencies, Federal, State, and local governments, owe to-day more than $30,000,000,000. Private corporations to-day owe a total of $74,660,000,000. Individuals owe a total of over $6,000,000,000. So there to-day is a total debt, Federal, State, county, municipal, agricultural, railroad, private corporation, and individual, of more than $154,000,000,000. On that $154,000,000,000 of indebtedness there is an annual interest charge of $8,600,000,000. In other words, Mr. President, out of a total annual income of $40,000,000,000 our governmental expenses and our annual interest charges amount to more than $23,000,000,000. More than one-half of all the money the American people are making to-day goes to pay for government and interest on what they owe.

We have been for weeks holding hearings in the appropriate committee of the Senate, seeking to devise some way by which there may be a voluntary or other scaling down of the debts of our people so that they may have more money and longer time to dig themselves out of the ditch in which they find themselves; and yet we debate here as if it were a fundamental, vital question, involving the stability of our institutions and the life of civilization itself, whether we shall reduce, 5 per cent, the expenses of Government departments.

I have no desire to see any Federal employee's salary reduced; there is nothing malicious in the vote that I am going to cast; but I feel that I owe a duty to somebody else in this country as well as to those who are employed by the Federal Government. I can not lose sight to-day of the hundreds of thousands of American farmers who are about to lose their homes under foreclosure; I can not lose sight of the fact that there are hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of farmers to-day who can not pay their taxes, who are not making enough money not only to pay the interest on their debts or to reduce their debts but who can not even preserve their homes from the sheriff or the tax-gatherer, and who to-day are confronted with the probability, if not the certainty, of having their homes sold from over their heads, unless Congress, by some emergency measure passed between now and the 4th of March, shall make provision for a kind of moratorium to preserve the homes of the American people. I can not forget the millions of laboring men in this Nation upon whose labor rests the support of all our institutions, and the 12,000,000 who have no work at all.

I can not forget the millions of small business and professional men in this land whose business and whose income have disappeared, and I can not forget the millions of depositors whose life savings have been swept away in this great catastrophe. All of them would rejoice to-day if only 5 per cent had been taken from the value of their incomes.

I like the spirit manifested by the new Governor of Indiana, who, within three weeks after his inauguration, called both houses of the Indiana Legislature together and in a joint caucus bound them to a proposal, suggested by him, to take 168 bureaus in the government of Indiana and combine them into eight departments under his control. They have done that, the bill for that purpose having been signed by the governor and being now the law of the State of Indiana. Yet we quibble here, we take up days, talking about whether a Cabinet member or a department chief shall be authorized to bring about economies in his department that will at least result in saving 5 per cent to the tax-ridden, downtrodden, distressed taxpayers of the United States.

I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and am enthusiastically for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Couzens | Kendrick | Schuyler |
| Austin | Dale | Keyes | Sheppard |
| Bailey | Davis | La Follette | Shipstead |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] a question. The amendment now pending, as I understand, is identical with the amendment which was offered by him a few days ago at the time I raised the same question I am now about to raise.

As I understand, the effect of this amendment would be in making any reduction in expenditures provided for in this section to prevent wage cuts, other reduced compensation, or furloughs, and the amendment would apply regardless of the amount of wage or salary a given employee was drawing.

In so far as this amendment would protect the small wage earner or the employee who is drawing a small salary, I would be thoroughly in favor of it; but would the Senator be willing to accept an amendment—I can not offer to amend the amendment because a further amendment would be in the third degree—to the effect that the prohibition against wage cuts or salary reductions shall apply only to employees who are not paid in excess of, say, $1,500?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I fear that the figure suggested by the Senator may be low.

Mr. BORAH. It may be low, but——

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the Senator, in return, whether there is a definite line of demarcation between wages and salaries which the Senator from Idaho has in mind?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not have that in mind. What I had in mind was the amount which an employee is drawing, whether in wages or salary. It seems to me that we might, under the extraordinary circumstances confronting us, be willing to put a limit beyond which wages and salaries might be reduced 5 per cent; but I do not want to go so low as actually to interfere with the living possibilities of an employee who is drawing a small amount.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Idaho that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] the other day attempted to put a limitation of $2,000 on wage reductions, and the Senate rejected his amendment? I fear to encumber the amendment with any such definite proposal.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this amendment, it seems to me, will have some votes against it on the ground that a salary may not be cut although it may be as high as $5,000 or $6,000. Of course, I can not offer an amendment because of the degree; but I wish the Senator might see his way clear to give us an opportunity to vote on a limitation of $1,800, so that no salaries below that amount could be cut.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I should like to do anything within my power to accommodate the Senator; but I fear that a definite figure might result in the defeat of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

Mr. COSTIGAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. I do not know how he would vote if present; but if I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MOSES (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. He is absent, and I can not obtain a transfer. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. Not being able to secure a transfer, in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I have been requested to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]; and

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] on official business of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 30, as follows:

So Mr. COSTIGAN'S amendment to Mr. BRATTON'S amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, as amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers the following amendment:

On page 1, line 2, strike out the words "and directed," and insert:

And, except in the case of the War Department and Navy Department, is directed—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to leave in effect the authority to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make the 5 per cent reduction in their departments, but to take away from those two departments the compulsion which otherwise would rest upon them to make the cut.

I can explain, I think, in a moment, where that necessity arises.

The appropriations for the military activities of the War Department have been cut down more than 20 per cent under similar appropriations two years ago. Those cuts have been made in every place in which the department itself, or the Director of the Budget or the Appropriations Committee of the House or the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, has been able to invent a possible saving.

At the present time in the Army appropriation bill, which stands upon the calendar awaiting action, the appropriations that are carried for the pay of the Army and the pay of the National Guard and the pay of the West Point cadets aggregate $147,000,000, out of a total appropriation for the military activities of about $275,000,000; that is to say, about 55 per cent.

It is hard to talk down a Democratic caucus, Mr. President.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I will say publicly what I said privately to the Senator from New Mexico—that the Senator's amendment should be amended by inserting "except everybody."

Mr. REED. That would be ideal, Mr. President.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. I am going to vote that way myself when the amendment is offered.

Mr. GORE. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, out of the total appropriation for the military activities of the Government, 55 per cent is made up of those three items.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. GLENN. Just for information, what pay do the West Point cadets receive?

Mr. REED. My recollection is that it is $50 a month, but I am not sure. That is what it used to be—about five or six hundred dollars a year. I am not sure of the exact amount.

Those three items constitute 55 per cent of the military appropriations. Obviously, if a 5 per cent cut on the whole is to be made, the burden of the whole 5 per cent must fall on the remaining 45 per cent, because all of these salaries and pay rates are statutory and can not be reduced; and if they could be reduced it would be wicked to make the reduction. We have already reduced the officers' pay. The enlisted men receive such a tiny pay in money that it would be sheer cruelty, and utterly unwise, to make any further reduction against them.

Obviously, any sane Secretary of War will have to throw the burden of the whole 5 per cent reduction on the 45 per cent of the appropriation which does not deal with the pay of those three elements of the services. That is to say, we are requiring a cut of one-ninth in the appropriations for clothing and subsistence and barracks and quarters and ammunition and ordnance supplies where those items have already been cut down to the very bone.

Now, armies can function in bare feet. The best armies this country ever saw were those of Sherman and Lee in 1865; and about half of each army was walking barefoot and in rags. I do not believe, however, that the American people to-day, even in the present condition of Government expenses, want to see our Regular Army and our National Guard reduced to that pinch of poverty.

The present appropriations allow the issue of only one uniform per man per year, and it can not be cut down much below that. Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me to be wholly reasonable to allow these two departments to make this reduction, but not to compel them to do it, if the efficiency and morale of our two services are not to suffer.

No man knows when we will have to call upon the Navy to serve as our first line of defense. Any thinking man who reads his newspapers thoroughly to-day is far from tranquil in his mind as to the possible need for that Navy, and to cut them down by the proposed action below the point of their utmost efficiency would seem to me to be wholly unwise.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I do not know as much about the situation at the Military Academy at West Point as about the situation at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. There are hundreds of young men at Annapolis whom we are educating free of cost, for whom we will have no commissions when they graduate. This year I think we will be able to commission less than a third of those who will graduate. It is my judgment that the United States Government should not single out for higher education, either in the Military Academy or the Naval Academy, or any other academy, any group of young men. I inquire if that is not an item where there could be a reduction of expenses by reducing the number of students in the academies?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I speak with better knowledge of West Point than of Annapolis, because my contacts are the reverse of those of the Senator from Massachusetts. The number of students both at West Point and at Annapolis, I think, has been reduced in the last few years. The naval conference of 1922 was expected to result in a reduction of the number of cadets at Annapolis.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is my impression the reduction has been very slight.

Mr. REED. My impression is that whereas there used to be four cadets for every Member of Congress, we now have but three, and the plan is to reduce the number to two. I am sorry I mentioned the cadets at all, because their appropriation forms a very small part of the appropriation involved. The total appropriation for the pay of cadets at West Point is less than $590,000. That is trivial compared with the pay of the Regular Army, which is about $128,000,000, and the pay of the National Guard, which aggregates about $18,000,000. So that I really need not have mentioned the cadets at all.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, one way to secure what the Senator is trying to accomplish would be to vote down the Bratton amendment.

Mr. REED. That is true. But for fear the Bratton amendment would be agreed to, I have offered this amendment, to make sure that the cut, if made, will not be made where it would injuriously affect the efficiency of our military services.

Finally, Mr. President, this matter will be wholly in the hands of the new Democratic administration, which will undoubtedly work in full accord with the Senator from New Mexico, and with a vast majority of the next Senate and the next House of Representatives. If those Democratic gentleman, in their zeal for economy—and they have promised the country economy beyond the bounds of possibility, in my judgment—if in their zeal for economy they can save 5 per cent from the military services, the Bratton amendment, as amended, I hope, by my suggested change, will give full authority to the incoming Cabinet officers to make the reductions, because the effect of my amendment would be to authorize the cut, but not to compel it; in other words, to allow them to do it if they can, but not to force them to do it against the best interests of the country.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I think I ought to make a short statement in regard to the Navy. Japan has built 100 per cent of what she was authorized to build under the London treaty, Great Britain has built 87 per cent, and the United States has built less than 60 per cent. I fully concur with the Senator from Pennsylvania that we ought to make the proposed action an authorization and not a direction. Complications might arise which would make it necessary for us to use our Army or our Navy in some disturbed condition in the world, and I think that, with the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico ought to be agreed to.

Mr. President, I think the defense of our country is an obligation the Federal Government has made to the States. It is a constitutional obligation. It is an obligation we can not shirk. It was understood when the Federal Constitution was adopted that the Federal Government alone would be looked to for Federal defense. It is the duty of the General Government to see that every State is safe from naval attack or military invasion. Consequently I think the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania should prevail.

The incoming administration will be devoted to economy, and it does seem to me that an authorization along the line suggested would be almost equal to a direction. It has been said that the word "authorized" is almost a mandate, unless the thing authorized is an impossibility, and I do believe that, in the disturbed conditions now existing in the world, the exception proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania ought to be made, especially when we are now party to a conference where we are trying to get a reduction, under which we would not build up any more. I remember that as a result of the Washington conference $179,000,000 worth of our ships, on which we had spent vast sums of money, were sunk or rendered unavailable as warships; Great Britain destroyed about $2,000,000 worth, Japan about $11,000,000 worth, and we have been trying at the Geneva conference to get those countries to make the same sacrifice we made at the Washington conference.

Up to this time, Mr. President, we have not been successful, but those who were present at the conference were hopeful. I do think that at this time we should make the exception proposed and leave it to the incoming President to determine whether our line of defense shall be reduced comparatively or left as it is, as the circumstances might determine.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would like to have the opinion of the Senator as to whether or not the 5 per cent saving could not be effected by a cessation in the building of residences, quarters, and so forth, for the Army?

Mr. SWANSON. I think that all the building the Army and the Navy expect has taken place. I understand the appropriation bills contain no provisions for building. If there are such provisions, and the work is unnecessary, the provisions ought to be excluded.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am seeking information.

Mr. SWANSON. The naval appropriation bill has not yet come to the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would not want to vote for anything that would impair the efficiency of the Army or the Navy at present; nevertheless, if there are those things which are in the nature of luxuries, or something that would afford more convenience than they now have, which might absorb the 5 per cent, I would be in favor of doing away with the luxuries, as other people are doing away with them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Army appropriation bill, now on the calendar, not only does not authorize any additional building of barracks or quarters, but it revokes and repeals the outstanding appropriations for building recreation halls, gymnasiums, post exchanges, and buildings of that sort at various Army posts. We not only do not authorize any more of it, but we have cut out from appropriations authorized in former bills at every point possible. There is no room for making any cut in that item.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the annual appropriation bills, as estimated by the Bureau of the Budget, exclusive of permanent appropriations of about $1,400,000,000, amount to substantially $3,000,000,000. The amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] would apply to that $3,000,000,000. Five per cent of $3,000,000,000 would be $150,000,000. Owing to the fact that the amendment leaves out certain Treasury appropriations for building, I think the figures now indicate that the amendment would effect a saving of $146,000,000.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a statement at that point?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Army bill, as reported to the Senate this year, all by itself carries $105,000,000 less than the Army bill last year carried. I submit to the Senate that we have been loyal in our efforts to make reductions.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, included in this $3,000,000,000 are substantially $840,000,000 for the Veterans' Bureau, which, under existing law, we have to pay. Therefore no cut could come out of that.

Also included in the $3,000,000,000 are about $600,000,000, as given to us by the Bureau of the Budget, of obligations which the Government has to meet, which can not be reduced. That leaves a little over half of the $3,000,000,000 on which this amendment must have its effect; that is to say, instead of being a 5 per cent cut in all of the appropriations, it is substantially a 10 per cent cut.

That means that certain of the departments where there are no Government obligations existing would have a 5 per cent cut. Other departments where there are obligations existing would have a 10 per cent cut, or might have a 15 or 20 per cent cut.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the case of the Veterans' Bureau. Our appropriations for the Veterans' Bureau, according to the estimates, are $940,000,000. Of these $940,000,000 there are obligations amounting to $830,000,000 which we have to meet under existing law. But, under the amendment of the Senator, there would be a 5 per cent reduction in the entire Veterans' Bureau appropriation. All of this cut would have to come out of the running expenses of the Veterans' Bureau; and when I say "running expenses," I mean the administrative expenditures, the expenditures for medical aid, for hospitals, and for domiciliary purposes, such as the soldiers' homes.

The cut, under the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, would be nearly $50,000,000; that is to say, we are to make a cut of almost 50 per cent in the items for hospitalization, medical treatment, and general administration.

Mr. President, obviously that is not a fair proposition. Obviously we could not do anything that would be more injurious to the veterans' appropriations than just that. I do not think the Senator from New Mexico wants to see anything of that sort happen. I do not think the Veterans' Bureau could possibly carry on with that cut that would be obligatory under the Senator's amendment. I am going to suggest as a modification of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania that he exclude also the Veterans' Bureau, along with the Army and the Navy, and in perfecting his amendment I ask that he include those words.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think we had better settle the questions one at a time. I would rather have them voted on one at a time.

Mr. BORAH. Why not include them all and just quit?

Mr. HALE. I am not in favor of the amendment, if that is what the Senator from Idaho means. I think it is in the highest degree unwise.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has spoken about the effect of the amendment on the Army. I know more about the Navy than I do about the Army, and I would like to say a few words about the effect of this amendment on the Navy.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator approve of an emergency officer who is retired with pay of $218 a month, in addition drawing $600 from the Federal Government by virtue of his connection with the National Guard, and in addition to that drawing a salary as a State official, and practicing his profession as well? Does the Senator think there should be no retrenchment there?

Mr. HALE. I do not at all approve of that, Mr. President, but if we are going to take care of that situation we ought to legislate. We are not going to legislate, as the Senator knows.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will yield, we will never legislate until fixing on a sum of money forces us to legislate. I am of the opinion that nobody, no committee, and certainly not the Senate, is going into this abuse of emergency officers' retirement pay until we cut down the money appropriated and are forced to make the reduction.

Mr. HALE. That can not be done on this bill and the Senator knows it. I do not think the Senator wants to cut down on hospitalization.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I do not. Now, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. HALE. I yield for a question, but I should like to proceed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator will concede that no legislation touching these abuses is likely to come to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I think that is quite true.

Mr. President, so far as the Navy is concerned, the most desirable thing in the eyes of every naval officer in the country is to keep up the personnel of the Navy and to keep up the ships of the Navy. Every effort of the Navy is expended to bring about this result. Last year we had to cut down very materially in the expenses of the Navy Department. This year we have had to cut down a great deal more. The Budget estimates are $30,000,000 less than the estimates submitted by the department. In all probability the House will cut down the Budget estimate when the bill, which has not yet reached them, comes before them.

Mr. President, every possible cut has been made in the Navy, with a view to keeping up the number of enlisted men and keeping up the ships of the Navy. No further cuts can be made without absolutely impairing the efficiency of the Navy. We have reached the limit in that regard. What kind of a Navy have we now? At the close of the World War we had a Navy which, if we had rounded it out, would have been able to meet all of the navies of the world combined. But gradually, by treaty agreement and by not building up our Navy, we have lost that position. We are now the second Navy in the world and fast becoming the third. Also, my friends, the two lesser treaty powers, France and Italy, are rapidly gaining on us. Before long we may find ourselves in a third or fourth or fifth position. I submit to the Senate that world conditions do not warrant us in getting into any such situation so far as our first line of defense is concerned. But that is where we are getting. Any cuts that are made in the Navy will mean that the Navy will have to cut down in personnel or will have to cut down in the ships that we keep in commission or that we are building.

With the appropriations that we have now we are not able to keep our full Navy in commission. We are not able to keep up the force that it is estimated we need to hold our position in the world. We can provide only 85 per cent of the crews for the ships that we keep in commission and we can keep in commission only 80 per cent of the ships that we ought to keep in commission. The rest are put on a basis of part commission and are not immediately available in case of trouble.

The prime requisite of the Navy is that it be able to strike, and to strike instantly when it is needed. This we can not do under present existing circumstances. If we cut the Navy down further another $15,000,000 we are going to find ourselves just so much worse off in the times that are to come. I hope very much that the amendment of the Senator will not prevail.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator from Maine where he thinks we ought to cut? The Senator from Maine, of course, is an expert on naval affairs, and when anybody proposes a cut in the Navy he holds up his hands in horror. Where ought we to cut? Let the Senator from Maine tell us.

Mr. HALE. By legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Tell us some legislation now.

Mr. HALE. In all probability we ought to cut down the veterans a certain amount. We ought to cut down a number of other activities.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator knows we are not going to do that.

Mr. HALE. I know we are not, and therefore there is no point in slashing the appropriation bills and impairing the efficiency of the Government when we are not succeeding in what we ought to do. We are not going to balance our Budget by any such proceeding as that. If the Senator wants to know what I think we ought to do, I think we ought to pass the appropriation bills substantially as they passed the House of Representatives. Then, when the Democratic Party comes into power it can reorganize the bureaus and offices of the Government and can cut down expenditures if it is found possible to do so. If we do that, we can get the appropriation bills through in this session of Congress and can give the Democrats a clear field in the extra session.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am not surprised at the Senator from Maine. He proposes to let somebody else do it. He would let the next administration do it. The next administration must cut expenditures, and if the next administration does not cut them we are going to be in about as bad a fix as the Senator and his party were in the elections last year, because the people of the United States are demanding that these expenditures be reduced.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator and his party will get them reduced.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am what we call a big-Navy man. I have always voted for a big Navy. But I do not believe the world and the country are in any such condition as the Senator from Maine pictures and that we are going to get whipped somewhere by somebody or somehow unless we go on building new ships and carrying on the great expenditures in behalf of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to proceed, if the Senator please.

Mr. HALE. I thought I had the floor, but I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maine had expired and the Chair has recognized the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Maine for his proposal to yield to me. I take his wish for the act.

Mr. President, I have always voted for the biggest Navy possible. I believe the United States ought to have a Navy equal to that of any nation on earth, not because I want war, but because I believe it is the only way to prevent war. We have gone through two or three processes of disarmament and each time we disarm we find that we have disarmed, but the other nations do not disarm. After junking a great many battleships, then the Senator from Maine and others come before the Senate and want us to build back our Navy to the treaty basis. Ultimately we may have to do that.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not a fact that the United States is spending more money on its Navy right now than any other nation in the world?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure that is true, although I have not the figures available. The Senator from Maine does not deny it and I assume therefore it is true.

Mr. HALE. I do not deny it because I can not go into the details at this time. I do not say anything about it because it is very complicated and too much of a question to go into in the time available to me now.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. REED. There are two factors that explain it, and they can be stated very shortly. In the first place, our rates of pay for our sailors are materially higher, almost double those of any other power on earth.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I know it.

Mr. REED. In the second place, the only comparable Government with ours is the British; and in that Government they have no expenses whatever for the air force, because, having a separate air force, they conceal that expense or subtract it from their navy budget.

Mr. CONNALLY. All the Senator from Pennsylvania says is true, but that does not change the statement of the Senator from Missouri that we are spending more money to-day on our Navy than any other great nation on earth is spending on its navy. Why can not we in these times reduce some of the expenses of our Navy? What power is threatening the United States? Can we not stop and get our breath for a few minutes before we go on loading onto the back of the people more and more money for armament? The Senator from Pennsylvania has just pointed out that we are paying our naval officers——

Mr. REED. I said our enlisted men.

Mr. CONNALLY. Our enlisted men. I am satisfied the Senator from Pennsylvania would make that suggestion. The officers of the Navy never get too much. The enlisted men do get too much.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I have been fighting in this session to prevent any cut in the pay of these same enlisted men. They do not get enough.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says our enlisted men in the Navy get more than the enlisted men of any navy on earth, and yet he is fighting any cut in their pay.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. If I have sufficient time.

Mr. REED. I will gladly give the Senator some of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has five minutes remaining.

Mr. CONNALLY. I give the Senator one minute of my time.

Mr. REED. Take the French Navy, for instance. Their men enlist in the navy to avoid compulsory military service in the army. They are paid about 5 cents a day. Would the Senator recommend that for the United States?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no. The Senator does not recognize that we have no draft laws here in times of peace. The Senator from Pennsylvania, though, by asking the question can not avoid the responsibility for answering my question in his own mind. If we are spending more money for the Navy to-day than any other great power, with no threat from abroad, with no danger from abroad, the taxpayers of America are entitled to some of the reductions in naval and military expenditures of the Government.

Senators seems to be worrying about the poor enlisted men in the Navy and in the Army. I am thinking of some enlisted men down in my State and in your State who have not a good Government place to sleep at night, who do not get a pay check from the Government on the first of every month, but who are out of jobs, and who are hungry and who are unsheltered. I am thinking of others who are perhaps not in quite that plight, but there are people whose incomes are shriveled, whose resources have almost disappeared through this gigantic depression, but who are still being required to pay burdensome and onerous taxes.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], of course, means to put more taxes on them, because he says we must balance the Budget. The result is we will keep up these Navy expenditures, and then we will turn around and pass some other kind of a tax bill, and go down and search out the last hole in the pockets of these people for more money to balance the Budget.

The Budget balancing is all on one end. We have got to start balancing the Budget right now by cutting every dollar that can be spared. Let some of the rest of the services bear a part of the burden. Let them make some of the sacrifices. We ought in this session to economize to the uttermost. In the next Congress, unless our administration does better than the administration of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and better than the administration of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the country is going to condemn our administration. We must reorganize the departments. We must cut and slash expenses. But whenever we undertake to cut and slash expenditures and we touch the Navy, the Senator from Maine will be here holding up his hands in horror; and, when we cut the Army, the Senator from Pennsylvania will rush onto the floor of the Senate with alarm in his face and terror in his voice with exclamations that we are destroying our national defense.

We have got to defend this country from somebody besides foreign governments. We have got to defend this country from want and suffering and misery. We have got to defend the taxpayers of this country a part of the time. The taxpayers have been defending the country through the Army and the Navy for a long time. We have got to put up some breastworks and some fortifications in behalf of the people of the country who are bearing the burdens of government. If we go on down the line, the gentlemen at the head of the respective departments will be found saying, "You must not cut here and you must not cut there."

It reminds me of the preacher who went to a community and began to preach against drinking whisky. One of the deacons called him off to one side and said, "Brother, you must not talk about those that drink whisky. Brother Jones is one of our deacons and he likes a little liquor on the side." Then he went to preaching against horse racing. He was called aside again and told not to preach against horse racing. He was told that "Brother Smith likes to go to horse races and he contributes liberally to the church, so you must not talk about horse racing." Then he began to talk about card playing and was told that Sister Brown was quite a card player, and so he had to stop talking about card playing. Finally another brother came to him, after he had denounced some other practice to which he objected, and said, "You must not talk about that." He replied, "Well, what can I talk about, then? I can not talk about liquor and gambling and cards and horse racing; who must I denounce?" He said, "Well, suppose you denounce the Jews; there ain't any of them here."

So, Mr. President, every chairman of a committee wants to cut expenditures, but he wants the cut to be made in some other department, in some other division of the Government. "Do not touch my child. This is mine. The Army is mine. The Navy is mine. The Department of Agriculture is mine. Do not cut mine." I want this Congress to cut everywhere that cutting can be done without destroying the absolutely necessary vital services of the Government, and I hope that the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico will be adopted, and we shall tell the administrative heads of the Government that expenditures must be reduced. They know where the cuts can be made. If they do not, they have got no business holding their jobs. They know where economies can be put into effect. If they do not know, they have had four years of idleness and inattention to their duties, and let us tell them where to apply these cuts.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator is talking about the present department heads who have had four years of experience. They will be out of office long before the appropriations provided by this Congress shall become available.

Mr. CONNALLY. And we shall have others in their places who will know how to put the reductions into effect during the next four years. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. We should be glad to have the Senator tell us who they are going to be.

Mr. CONNALLY. They will not be selections of the Senator from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] But, in all kindness, let me say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that his administration has been in office for four years; they have not been able to economize and they have not economized; they have not cut down, and whoever the Democrats put into power can not make conditions as bad as they have been in that respect during the last four years.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. Just for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know that the Army appropriation bill reported yesterday carries $105,000,000 less than last year's Army bill. Does not the Senator call that a saving?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do call that a saving, but most of that is in the nonmilitary activities of the department, is it not?

Mr. REED. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the biggest item of saving?

Mr. REED. All the Army housing is cut out, and there are reductions all along the line.

Mr. CONNALLY. I asked the Senator what was the biggest item of saving.

Mr. REED. The biggest single item is in rivers and harbors.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, to be sure; that is just what I knew. I said that the biggest saving was made in the nonmilitary activities. When I pin the Senator down he admits that it is in river and harbor items where the saving is made. Exactly. And I am informed that the Senate committee which the Senator from Pennsylvania controls raised the House figures in that regard.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. If my memory serves me correctly, it was only a year or so ago, when the Army bill was before the Senate, that it was said that it was impossible to cut it, but the Senator from Pennsylvania says it is now cut by $105,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. When?

Mr. GLENN. I say the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. REED] has just said that the Army appropriation bill carries $105,000,000 less than the bill of last year. My recollection is that when the last Army appropriation bill was under consideration it was said very emphatically that it could not be cut at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Illinois simply corroborates and confirms the conclusion I have already reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas on the pending amendment has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry. Have I not some time on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may be recognized on the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I merely wish to use five minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can not save his time. He is permitted to speak only once on the bill and once on an amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I reserve my right to speak on the bill later.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, this attack in which the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Maine join is no surprise to any one; it was contemplated from the start. Every time it is sought to affect a service by reducing its cost those who champion the particular service urge economy somewhere else. The 5 per cent cut applied to the Navy is slightly more than $15,000,000; the 5 per cent cut applied to the War Department is slightly more than $17,000,000, or about $32,000,000 in all.

The Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Maine would have the country believe that that difference is the difference between safety and danger. They would have the country believe that a $15,000,000 cut in the appropriations for the Navy and a $17,000,000 cut in the appropriations for the Army would endanger the entire Nation and undermine self defense, and military preparedness. Mr. President, everybody knows that if an emergency should arise, such as the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Maine suggest, the nominal sum involved in the reductions in the two departments could be provided in a deficiency bill in two hours' time. Yet they will hold that up as a controlling reason why the Senate should refrain from touching the appropriations for the two departments involved.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think if that amount were added to a deficiency bill it could be used at once, to remedy immediately some lack in the national defense? If he does, he is very wide of the mark.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, Mr. President, in the judgment of the Senator from Maine anyone is wide of the mark whenever he suggests any reduction in the appropriations for the Navy. The Senator is sincere in that and no one criticizes him, but I have not any doubt at all that a 5 per cent cut in the naval appropriation bill would not endanger the Government. I would shrink from endangering the Government as quickly as would the Senator from Maine, and he would do so as quickly as I would; but the suggestion that a $15,000,000 cut in a $300,000,000 bill would undermine national safety and security is wholly untenable. Again and again, whenever retrenchment in expenditures is suggested, those who are particularly interested and enthusiastic about a given service argue repeatedly that we must economize, but not do it here.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield further to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BRATTON. Just a moment. The Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Maine suggest that this retrenchment should not be accomplished now but should wait until the incoming administration shall assume power; let it retrench. The solicitude of the two Senators for the incoming administration will challenge the attention of every Member of the Senate.

Mr. President, I entertain no doubt that a nominal cut of $15,000,000 in one case and $17,000,000 in the other can be borne without any sacrifice or danger to the two branches of the armed forces of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in view of the question I propounded to the Senator from Pennsylvania a few moments ago, I have been making some inquiry about the situation with respect to the midshipmen at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. I find that there are in the graduating class 435 midshipmen and that under existing law only about 200 of them will be commissioned. That means that we have for four years been educating 200 or more midshipmen at the Naval Academy who will not be given commissions in the naval service. As the expense of educating each one of these young men is $15,000 for the four years it means that we have expended $3,000,000 upon these 200 young men who will not be inducted into the naval service.

Of the class of young men who will graduate in June of this year each of them has received each year out of the Public Treasury a salary of $780. Therefore, 200 or more of them, in addition to being boarded and schooled at the expense of the Federal Government, have been paid $780 a year, making an aggregate of $624,000.

I submit these figures as indicating that there appears to be some opportunity for retrenchment in reducing the number of midshipmen at least at the Naval Academy, and also in reducing the number of officers assigned there and the number of civilian professors with paid salaries who are instructing these young men.

As I said before, I know nothing about the situation at the Military Academy at West Point, but it is not a very good picture to present to the American public of our efficiency or the efficiency of the Navy Department when we continue to burden the taxpayers of the Nation with this particular expense.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will yield in a moment.

If we are going into the business of providing higher education for our young men, well and good. As a member of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy a few years ago, I remember that a motion was actually made—and almost carried—that the Naval Academy be expanded to its full capacity and that we be permitted to send young men there to be educated at public expense, though they were never going to enter or become a part of the naval service. That is what we are doing without declaring so.

What right have we to use public funds for the higher education of any man unless he is to become a part of the naval or military forces of the United States? If we make a departure from that policy, then we have opened the floodgates, and every young man in every State everywhere has a right to demand four years of education at the expense of the Federal Treasury, involving $780 annual pay and a cost for his four years of education of $15,000.

As I said before, I do not know the situation at the Military Academy at West Point. Perhaps the situation is different there; but it does seem to me that here is a field for investigation and inquiry into whether or not we shall be able to save some funds by reducing the number of students at these institutions in view of the fact that they can not be commissioned.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. The Navy Department is not responsible for the number of appointees who are sent to the academy. It is Congress that is responsible. Congress gives each Senator and each Representatives the privilege of sending so many appointees there. I think the Navy Department have recommended that the number be reduced, saying that they have more officers than they can give places to; but Congress refuses to reduce the number.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I used the word "we"; and the Senator knows that in the Committee on Naval Affairs I actually moved that we reduce the number, and have advocated and talked in the committee as I have here.

Mr. SWANSON. So far as that is concerned, that could not be done until Congress changed the law. Each Senator has so many appointments. Every Representative has so many appointments. It takes so much money to take care of them; it takes so many professors; and the law ought to be changed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Then I will withdraw any insinuation that the Republican Navy Department is in any way responsible, and I will make the accusation that the Congress itself has been negligent and derelict in its duty to the public in maintaining upon its pay rolls and giving free education to young men whose services are not needed by the Government. Whatever justification could be urged in the past for these expenditures, present conditions no longer justify them.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, last year, when proposals were made to reduce the various appropriation bills, there was a great deal of sentiment for reduction, and they were reduced. When it came to the War and the Navy appropriations, however, great objection was raised against reducing those appropriations; and the same thing is true this year.

I note by the report of the Military Affairs Committee on this year's bill that they increased the House appropriation bill by $1,660,630. It seems to me that if there is any place in the appropriations of the United States Government that should be cut down, where there is a chance to make a real saving, it is in the War and Navy Departments.

It was stated on the floor of the Senate a few minutes ago that we were appropriating more money for our Navy than any other country in peace times on the face of the globe. That is true. We are also appropriating more money for the War Department in peace times than any other nation on the face of the globe. We claim that we are trying to promote peace and bring about disarmament, and yet we are appropriating more money than any other nation on earth for war and navy purposes.

It seems to me that this amendment of the Senator from New Mexico should apply to the War and Navy Departments if it is going to apply to any department; and I hope the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

Mr. BRATTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. May the amendment be stated, please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has suggested the absence of a quorum.

Mr. REED. May we not have the quorum call before the amendment is stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Bankhead | Bingham | Borah |
| Austin | Barbour | Black | Bratton |
| Bailey | Barkley | Blaine | Brookhart |

| | | | |

| Couzens | Hayden | Pittman | Walcott |
| Cutting | Hebert | Reed | Walsh, Mass. |
| Dale | Hull | Reynolds | Walsh, Mont. |
| Davis | Johnson | Robinson, Ark. | Watson |
| Dickinson | Kendrick | Robinson, Ind. | Wheeler |
| Dill | Keyes | Schall | White |
| Fess | La Follette | Schuyler | |
| Fletcher | Lewis | Sheppard | |
| Frazier | Logan | Shipstead | |

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], on official business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] offers the following amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]:

On page 1, line 2, strike out the words "and directed," and insert:

and, except in the case of the War Department and the Navy Department, is directed—

So that, if amended, the amendment will read:

The head of each executive department and independent establishment is authorized and, except in the case of the War Department and the Navy Department, is directed to make such reductions in the expenditures—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). On this question I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. He being absent, and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The result was announced—Yeas 34, nays 47, as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Hale | Metcalf | Swanson |
| Bailey | Hastings | Moses | Thomas, Idaho |
| Barbour | Hayden | Oddie | Townsend |
| Bingham | Hebert | Pittman | Wagner |
| Copeland | Johnson | Reed | Walcott |
| Davis | Kendrick | Robinson, Ind. | Watson |
| Fletcher | Keyes | Schall | White |
| Goldsborough | Lewis | Schuyler | |
| Grammer | Logan | Smith | |

NAYS—47

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Byrnes | Dickinson | Hull |
| Bankhead | Capper | Dill | La Follette |
| Barkley | Clark | Fess | McGill |
| Blaine | Connally | Frazier | McKellar |
| Borah | Coolidge | George | McNary |
| Bratton | Costigan | Glass | Neely |
| Brookhart | Couzens | Glenn | Norris |
| Bulkley | Cutting | Gore | Nye |

NOT VOTING—15

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Black | Hatfield | Long | Stephens |
| Broussard | Howell | Norbeck | Thomas, Okla. |
| Caraway | Kean | Russell | Trammell |
| Carey | King | Shortridge | |

So Mr. REED's amendment to Mr. BRATTON's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] as amended.

Mr. BRATTON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and vote "yea."

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. I do not know how that Senator would vote if present. If I were voting, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Repeating my previous announcement respecting my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. HOWELL's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] on official business of the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day, and be included with each roll call.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 33, as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Connally | Harrison | Sheppard |
| Bailey | Coolidge | Hastings | Smith |
| Bankhead | Cutting | Hebert | Swanson |
| Barbour | Dickinson | Hull | Thomas, Idaho |

| Borah | Fletcher | Logan | Vandenberg |
| Bratton | Frazier | McKellar | Wagner |
| Bulkley | George | Norris | Walsh, Mass. |
| Bulow | Glass | Nye | Walsh, Mont. |
| Byrnes | Glenn | Patterson | White |
| Capper | Goldsborough | Pittman | |
| Clark | Gore | Robinson, Ark. | |

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Grammer | Moses | Smoot |
| Bingham | Hale | Neely | Steiwer |
| Blaine | Hayden | Oddie | Townsend |
| Brookhart | Johnson | Reed | Walcott |
| Copeland | Keyes | Reynolds | Watson |
| Costigan | La Follette | Robinson, Ind. | Wheeler |
| Couzens | McGill | Schall | |

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Broussard | Howell | Long | Shortridge |
| Caraway | Kean | Norbeck | Stephens |
| Carey | King | Russell | Thomas, Okla. |
| Hatfield | | | |

So Mr. BRATTON's amendment, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

On page 82, after line 21, to insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. —. The head of each executive department and independent establishment is authorized and directed to make such reductions in the expenditures from the appropriations made by the regular annual appropriations act for the several purposes of his department or establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934 (except, in the case of the Treasury Department, appropriations for acquisition of sites for and construction of public buildings and the appropriation for addition to the cumulative sinking fund pursuant to section 308 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932), as will in the aggregate equal at least 5 per cent of the total amount so appropriated for his department or establishment for such year (excluding, in the case of the Treasury Department, the appropriations specified above). Such reductions shall be made in a manner calculated to bring about the greatest economy in expenditures consistent with the efficiency of the service. In making any reductions in expenditures provided for in this section no wage cuts, other reduced compensations, or furloughs shall be ordered."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk now report the amendment on page 69, lines 20 to 24, and lines 1 to 3, on page 70.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, after line 19, the committee proposes to insert the following:

(1) Section 101 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The rate of compensation of each officer and employee to whom subsection (a) or (b) applies shall be reduced by 1⅔ per cent."

And section 101 (c) is amended by striking out "subsections (a) and (b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (a), (b), and (d)."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, we have estimated that this provision will save $17,832,000. Since the Costigan amendment to the Bratton amendment was agreed to, and the Bratton amendment as amended was agreed to, no additional pay cut is provided. In fact, any additional pay cut is forbidden under the Costigan amendment. Therefore the committee feels that this amendment should be agreed to, increasing the pay cut from 8⅓ per cent to 10 per cent. If it should be agreed to, it would mean that all salaries from the Government of $12,000 and under would be cut at the rate of 10 per cent, although if it is agreed to, there will be another section providing a straight pay cut. This applies only to those who now have the furlough.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut to state once more the effect of the proposed amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. The effect of the proposed amendment, as I stated the other day, would be in lieu of the President's suggestion in his Budget message that, in addition to the furlough, there be a pay cut of 11 per cent. The committee unanimously recommended an additional pay cut of 1⅔ per cent.

The argument against this amendment the other day, advanced by the Senator from Colorado, if I remember correctly, was that unless his amendment were agreed to, and the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico were agreed to, the total cut might add up to some 17 per cent. But since the amendment of the Senator from Colorado has been agreed to, and no additional pay cuts are provided, this would only mean an additional pay cut of 1⅔ per cent. Nevertheless, the saving would be about $17,800,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote. If I were allowed to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRATTON. Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I vote "yea."

Mr. GLENN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. Therefore, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am informed that my general pair the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote as I am about to vote, and I, therefore, am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] on official business of the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day and be included with each roll call.

Mr. FESS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 44.

REMOVAL OF SERGEANT AT ARMS DAVID S. BARRY

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on behalf of and under instructions from the Committee on the Judiciary, I rise to submit a privileged report.

The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the matter which the Senate referred to them regarding what action, if any, should be taken upon the case of the Sergeant at Arms for the writing of an article published in the February issue of the New Outlook. After due consideration the committee have directed me to report to the Senate that we recommend to the Senate the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 352), as follows:

Resolved, That David S. Barry be, and he is hereby, removed from the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I move the adoption of the resolution. I believe upon this motion we ought to have the yeas and nays, and therefore I ask for them.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, is the resolution open to discussion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. LOGAN. Then if I have that privilege, I desire to say a few words upon it.

Probably no one will agree with me about this matter, but I do not know that that makes any difference. In the first place, I doubt that the Senate has any right to adopt the proceeding or take the steps which it has taken. I do not know where the Senate gets the authority to do this. It is true I have not made an investigation of the matter. I have not had time to do so.

Down in my State if some organization should proceed in the way we are proceeding here we would call it mob law. It is a very sacred right that a man has to be heard when he is charged with a crime or when he is charged with a violation of any law, whether it amounts to a crime or not.

Here is a man with a lifetime of honorable service behind him. It appears to be admitted that he has no black mark against his character. We are preparing, almost without discussion, almost without a hearing, to enter a death sentence, as it were, against him, because it is better, probably, to take the life of a man than to take his good name.

I am frank to confess that after having read the article I do not place the construction upon it that has been placed upon it by many of the Senators. He was tried, it is true, without any charge being made against him; in fact, no charge has ever been made against him yet. There has been no orderly procedure of any kind. It seems to me that if he had transgressed the rules of the Senate or if he had done anything which subjected him to be dealt with by the Senate and if the Senate had the power to deal with him, the first thing would have been to prepare and submit charges.

But that was not done. The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] came into the Chamber and read a paragraph from an article and then Mr. Barry was sent for and put on trial without an opportunity to think, without an opportunity to employ counsel until after he was in here. Then it was said, "If you want to get somebody to advise you, of course, you may do so." But what chance did he have, an old man with 96 angry Senators lined up against him?

It seems to me that if we expected to proceed against him, probably we should have proceeded by impeachment. It is the general rule of law, as I understand it, that where a man is elected to office for a fixed time the power that elects him has no right, unless it is specifically given by law, to remove him at will. I do not know whether the law gives the Senate the right to remove one of its officers at will or not. I do know the Constitution gives no such right. I know we have the right to proceed against our own Members and, if two-thirds concur, we may expel a Member. But there is no such authority in the Constitution to proceed against an officer of the Senate; at least, if there is, I do not know anything about it.

Frankly speaking, every citizen, however humble he may be, and although he may have been an employee of this great body, has the right to be heard and generally, before the appointing power may remove him, unless there be specific power in the law, a court must determine that he has violated some law; a court must determine that there are reasons for his removal.

Here we sit as a jury, a jury that has been offended. In the civil courts or in the criminal courts of this Nation I undertake to say that none of us would be qualified to sit on the jury to hear the charges. But we are sitting to try the man that we say has libeled us or slandered us in some way. He has not libeled me. He did not mean me.

I want it thoroughly understood that I do not believe if I should place the construction on the language that some Senators have placed on it that I would say what I am saying, but I do not believe that Mr. Barry meant to charge that any Member of the Senate or any Member of the House or any Member of the present Congress was corrupt. I do not think that the language which he used is susceptible of that construction. It is true we brought him here before the Senate and cross-examined him. It reminds me somewhat of a hare with the hounds after him—dozens of hounds and one poor little innocent hare. Of course, he did not know what to say. But we have read the article. Let me call attention to it, if I may briefly, and then tell the Senate what I think about it and what I think is a reasonable construction of all that Mr. Barry has said.

I am glad that I do not think my reputation so frail as to be damaged because some one makes a suggestion such as is found in this article. Let us examine it just for a moment. Here is a man trying to defend the Congress of the United States against the very charges that are in the minds of the public everywhere, because, I regret to say, that the public seems now to believe that all public officials are crooked. It is an unfortunate thing; it is a sign of the decay of our Republic.

Here is a man who knows what public opinion is; who knows that men and women from one end of this country to the other are saying that the Congress of the United States is corrupt. We receive letters almost every day from our constituents, some of whom probably we do not know, in which they suggest that all public officials, from the President down to the humblest officer of the United States, are susceptible to improper influences. Any man knows that to be a more or less widespread sentiment, unless, perchance, he has been in the Senate so long that he has forgotten what the public thinks.

Now, what did Mr. Barry say?

> Contrary, perhaps, to the popular belief, there are not many crooks in Congress; that is, out-and-out grafters, or those who are willing to be such. There are not many Senators or Representatives who sell their vote for money, and it is pretty well known who those few are; but there are many demagogues—

Do we really believe that Mr. Barry when he wrote that had in mind the Members of the present Congress of the United States? I do not. He was looking at Congressmen as a class, from the beginning of this Government down to the present time, looking at them as they passed before his vision. It was true he was writing in the present tense, but if you have not forgotten, Mr. President, under the old rules of rhetoric which you learned when you went to school in the old days, that is permissible. The vision rises before him of a long list of Congressmen, and he says contrary to popular opinion, they are a very few—"not many," he says—Representatives or Senators who sell their votes for money. He says "a few." If we go back in the history of our Nation I dare say that we will find that his statement is literally true, if he will look at it in that way. I think in the old days that men have been expelled from the Congress because they sold their votes for money. I am not sure about it; I have not looked up anything; I had little thought of saying anything; but it arouses all the indignation that I have when I see the greatest body in the world carried off its feet because they say, perchance, some clerk or sergeant at arms has libeled its Members. I remember back in the old days the Crédit Mobilier scandal. It seems to me that some were convicted and removed from office, and that others resigned.

I suppose from time to time in all legislative bodies, from the days of the old Roman Senate down to the present, that there have been occasionally men who sold their votes. I do not believe that there is any such man in this body; I do not believe there is any such man in this Congress, and I do not believe that Mr. Barry had any intention of saying there were; but I dare say that there are none of us, Mr. President, who would be willing to say that there is no such man among the 531. We may say that we do not know that there is any such man, and that we do not believe there is any such man, but if we consider the past and judge the present by the things that have happened in the past, we would hesitate before we would underwrite the statement that there are no such men. I do not think there are, and I am glad that I do not think so, but I would not remove a man from office in his old age when he has done nothing more than to call the attention of the American public to the fact that there are not many corrupt men in Congress, when the public thinks all of them are corrupt. That is the gist of it all.

If you say, Mr. President, he referred to this Congress, what are you going to do with the remainder of the article, because I believe it is a rule announced by the courts—and it is a safe rule—that one can not pick out a certain sentence from its context and judge the whole by that particular sentence; it is necessary to take the whole paper. Immediately after what I have quoted, he goes right at once into a discussion of demagogues and demagoguery.

He says:

But there are many demagogues of the kind—

In this he is writing in the present tense—that will vote for legislation solely because they think it will help their political and social fortunes.

Then what does he do? He goes back and refers to the amendment for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people. Did this Congress pass on that amendment? No. We had just as well say that he was referring to this Congress when he said there were demagogues that voted to submit that amendment. I do not think he was. I favored that amendment and would have voted for it if the opportunity had been afforded.

Then he refers to the woman's suffrage amendment and the eighteenth amendment, writing in the present tense about all of them, and saying there were demagogues who voted for them. We very well know, however, that he was not referring to the present Congress. Neither do I believe he was referring to the present Congress when he said there were not many who sold their votes.

It is difficult to get a group of 531 men elected by all classes of people and to have all of them entirely above suspicion. Jesus Christ attempted to select 12 disciples. After a very thorough examination and after having spent two years with them, he selected 12, but he found 1 in that number—and he was the best business man in the group and was elected treasurer of the little band—who turned out to be a man who was willing to accept a bribe.

According to the view of some Senators Mr. Barry was referring to the present Senate; but even assuming that he was referring to the present Senate, do you think, Mr. President, that we ought to disgrace him and whip him out of the Senate with whips of scorpions because he said that there are not many Members of the Congress who would sell their votes or because he held the opinion that among 531 perchance there might be one who would sell his vote for money, or there might be two? Senators may take action of that kind if they want to; they have the power—I take it for granted that they are going to do it—but I want to proclaim here and now, in the RECORD so that everyone may know, that I can not indorse their action in removing him because of the article which he has written; and, although I may stand alone, I shall vote "no" when the vote is taken on the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, to begin with, all the Senators heard the testimony of Mr. Barry taken in open Senate last Friday. The Senate at that time voted to refer the matter to the Judiciary Committee and that in the meantime Mr. Barry should stand suspended from office. The Judiciary Committee again heard Mr. Barry testify. On his own request he came before the committee and testified yesterday and to-day. Two witnesses were called after he had finished because of references he had made to those gentlemen in defense of what he had said. Let me say that he was heard at length. He was not refused permission to make any statement he saw fit; he used his own time before the committee. There was no such thing as urgency. Never once has Mr. Barry, or anyone in his behalf, asked for further time, notwithstanding the Senator from Kentucky says that this matter was rushed through. From the time he plead guilty to the charges——

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. He plead guilty, as I understand, to having written the article, but did he plead guilty to the construction which the Judiciary Committee have placed upon his language?

Mr. NORRIS. No; he plead guilty to having written the article; and now the Judiciary Committee—as, I take it, the Senate did last Friday—has put its own construction upon the article, and I think the only construction that can be put on it, although in saying that I have to disagree with the eminent Senator from Kentucky, who seems to put a different construction on it. I want to say further that the construction he is trying to place on it now, that Mr. Barry had reference to some past conduct, is not the construction that Mr. Barry himself placed upon the article.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. At no time either in his testimony here or before the Judiciary Committee did Mr. Barry for himself ever claim that kind of a construction. He referred in all his testimony to the present existing Congress. So that it seems to me that it is rather far-fetched for somebody else now to try to put a construction on these words that, in the first place, they will not bear, and, in the second place, a construction that Mr. Barry himself has never put upon them. I now yield further to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. Is it not true that Mr. Barry last Friday tried to explain that he meant something else, but Senators would not allow it? And is it not true that the Senator said he was guilty, that he had plead guilty, and would not listen to any explanation that Mr. Barry might offer?

Mr. NORRIS. No; we did listen to every explanation that he had to make. He had unlimited time; he has never for a moment protested that he has not had all the time he wanted, and no one suggested a limitation. He did say in the Senate, and he said before the committee, that he thought he was defending the Senate. That is a construction that in my judgment and in the judgment of the committee—in fact, I think, in the judgment of every fair, unbiased mind—the language will not sustain.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment; I myself want to say a few words.

The construction the Senator would now place upon the article, that Mr. Barry was defending the Senate, is not borne out by the article itself. The Senator himself says, in giving a construction to a part of the article, that we ought to consider all the article. Do that in this case, and from beginning to end we find that it is a condemnation of Congress; there is not one single word of defense. In the very next sentence, after the one quoted in which he charged some of the Senators sold their votes for money, he said:

There are not many Senators or Representatives who sell their votes for money, and it is pretty well known who those few are; but there are many demagogues of the kind that will vote for legislation solely because they think that it will help their political and social fortunes.

And then he goes on to use this language:

This is what passed the constitutional amendment providing for the popular election of Senators, it is what passed the amendment giving suffrage to women, it is what passed the prohibition amendment, and it is what has made possible the almost successful attempt to hang the bonus on the American taxpayers.

That is, demagogues. Is that a defense of the Senate? Can we give any construction of that kind by reading the balance of the article? All the way through it is critical.

I concede that Mr. Barry had a right to criticize the Senate. I am not finding fault because he did that; but in the first sentence he says there are some of us who are crooks, that we sell our votes for money, and he says those few are well known.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. We gave him an opportunity here and he had another opportunity before the Judiciary Committee to tell who they were. He could have cleared his skirts completely if he had named the Senators and investigation had shown that they were selling their votes for money. That is one of the things the Judiciary Committee and the Senate wanted him to tell; but he not only did not tell it, but he said flatly that he had no evidence of anyone selling his vote, either in the Senate or in the House.

Mr. Barry is different from an outsider, Senators. I can conceive of a newspaper making the same charge and our not paying any attention to it. He, however, is an employee of the Senate, elected by the Senate by ballot, by roll-call vote, to serve the Senate as its Sergeant at Arms. He has access to the floor of the Senate, the same as a Senator. When such an officer, one of the highest officers of the Senate, said to the world, "There are crooks in Congress; they sell their votes for money, but there are not very many of them; the balance of them are just demagogues," it would be a stretch of reason and logic to say that such language was a defense of the Senate or the House. Even though the writer said it was, that does not make it so.

Here we have, then, an officer of the Senate. The question is raised by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] whether we have a right to remove him from office. I think our right is so evident that I am not going to go into any detail to discuss it. We elected him. We have the right to remove him, with reason if we want to, or without reason if we choose. We have the supreme right to remove him. In this case we went to the precaution—which, to my mind, was unnecessary after he had, in effect, plead guilty—of referring the matter to the Judiciary Committee; and when it was referred to the Judiciary Committee, Mr. Barry was notified when we were going to meet and asked if he wanted to appear before the committee. He said he did. He appeared, was sworn, and presented a carefully compiled and written statement in which he went over practically the same ground that he did when he was before the Senate on last Friday. Then he was questioned by the members of the committee, and at no place did he deny that he wrote the words that we complained of. At no place did he claim that any change was made.

You know, there was some intimation of that kind here. Senators said that perhaps the language was changed; but at the direction of the committee Mr. Barry secured the copy that he retained when he wrote the article, and the copy was identical with the printed article as far as these words were concerned. The publishing company had taken out two or three paragraphs at the beginning of the article; and when you read the record taken before the committee, you will find just what they were, where they were placed. As is conceded even by Mr. Barry himself, they in no way modified or changed the meaning of the words that were left in the article. So he is admitting that they were printed just word for word as he wrote them; and incidentally, he got $250 for doing it. That, I think, is proper to take into consideration.

The question raised by the Senator from Kentucky is, Have we any right to remove Mr. Barry? I think it is so self-evident that we have that I am not even going to answer it. We have the right to remove any officer of the Senate that we elect. If we have not, then the Senate has no authority on earth to purge itself of any improper or dishonorable employee.

What position would we be in if we did not take notice of this? Then it would be heralded all over the country, "Why, here is a man who by his very office is entitled to go into the secret sessions of the Senate. He is entitled to the privilege of the floor of the Senate. He is its principal officer. He says the Senators are crooks, and they do not do anything about it. They have confessed that they are crooks." Would not that be the logic of it, and would not that be heralded from one end of the country to the other?

So in self-defense, in defense of its honor and its integrity, it seems to me the Senate can do no less than to remove from office such an unworthy employee.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, it seems to me this is a matter of such importance that a little of the time of the Senate may be devoted to a discussion of it, when so much time has been wasted at this session in the discussion of things of less importance.

I have not been present in the Senate for the past two or three days, and was not here when the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate came before this honorable body. It may be that I am not as thoroughly familiar with this situation as I should be in order to discuss it fully and intelligently before this body, but there are some things which appeal to me and which I desire to present rather briefly.

I do not challenge the right of the Senate to remove any of its officers or employees. I do not make that point. It may be well taken, but I shall not press it. But as I look about the circumstances and the conditions under which this article was written, and the time in which it was written, I see this Capitol and those in it not in the ordinary, usual routine of affairs in the body and in the country and in the Capital of the Nation; but I find those here, employees and Members and officers of the Senate, in an unusual and extraordinary situation and in an unusual and extraordinary frame of mind; not in a normal but in an abnormal frame of mind.

It has been stated to me by veterans in this body that in all their long and useful years of service they have never experienced a time so critical, so full of trial, so full of stress, so full of strain as the present session. It was largely true at the last session of the Congress, but it has been a growing condition and a growing strain. I feel that that abnormal situation is not confined to the Members of the Senate but that it reaches all who are intimately connected with this body.

So I see this organization and all its officials and all its employees under severe strain, perhaps not normal; and I see everywhere a spirit of criticism, not only among the officials of the body and its employees but in the public press, in the newspapers, in the magazines, in written and published books, and in the spoken word in person, and on the air throughout the country. Everywhere, for months and months and months, there has been a growing spirit of criticism, of abuse, of exaggeration, of vituperation, of condemnation; and if we are ourselves to condemn and convict all who criticize the Members of this body, there will not be many people left in the United States unscathed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GLENN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator draw a distinction between those who are employees of the Senate and outsiders?

Mr. GLENN. I draw a distinction; yes. I think it is a more serious offense in a way. I think the officials of this body owe it a duty, of course, and I think there has been a violation of that duty here; but I am seeking, if I may, to draw a picture of some of the circumstances surrounding it.

Mr. Barry is not alone in this thing which he has done. Everywhere we see it, from the press gallery and elsewhere. What do we see in the newspapers every day when we pick them up? What is it? Condemnation, abuse, attacks.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GLENN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In that connection, will the Senator allow me to read just one paragraph from a great newspaper and from a very distinguished correspondent?

Mr. GLENN. I shall gladly yield.

Mr. FESS. Speaking of this general attitude of the country and in Washington, he says:

> They undoubtedly account for the ferocity with which some of them—

Meaning the Senators—

> joined in the attempt to tear the aged and unfortunate Mr. David Barry limb from limb on Friday, and will be satisfied with nothing short of his heart's blood to-morrow.

Mr. GLENN. What paper is the Senator reading from?

Mr. FESS. I could hardly call that an irresponsible utterance, because it is from a very responsible paper. It is from the Baltimore Sun, and it is from one of the distinguished writers of the Sun; but it is an expression of what the Senator is now stating, and that is the stuff that is being read all over the country.

Mr. GLENN. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GLENN. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator from Illinois think, or can the Senator from Ohio think, that because outsiders are making charges that the Senator himself admits to be untrue, we should follow along in that disreputable path and forgive falsehoods stated to the public on the part of our own employees?

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, to be frank with the Senator from Nebraska, I can not distinguish very materially between attacking a Member of a body of this kind, as has been done in the present instance, and the privilege which is exercised almost every day in committee rooms of the Senate of the United States, when a witness is called there, of browbeating him, accusing him, attacking him as he sits there, called in response to a subpœna, perhaps, or summons of the Senate, without counsel, without advice, frequently, I take it, without much excuse or much basis for the attacks made upon that helpless witness. I do not distinguish in my mind, perhaps through lack of acuteness, between the attacks made upon this body and the attacks made in this body on the floor, day after day, by Members of this body, distinguished Members of this body—making no personal reference, now, to any individual Senator, for I have none in mind—attacking, abusing, condemning, blackening people's names and reputations, knowing that the next morning upon the front pages of the responsible newspapers of this country the charges, unsustained, will be broadcast to the world.

What is the difference in the character, in the thought, in the mind, in the thinking process between this man and us men, using the word "us" in the plural, because I am not seeking to point out or indicate anyone in particular—who make those baseless attacks upon responsible men in the United States? We all know it is done here every day.

We here, ah, we, the mighty Members of the Senate, sometimes, I think, make those charges to the press, to the galleries, to the world, knowing we have thrown about us the mantle of immunity from prosecution, yes, criminal prosecution, or from responding in civil damages to those who may be grievously wronged by our baseless charges. What is the difference between us and this man we will send out into the world in his old age condemned? He has no mantle of immunity to throw about his shoulders. We have. We can do those things, and we do do those things.

Yes, Mr. President; it is an age of criticism, it is an age of abuse, it is an age of condemnation, and, strange as it may seem, it has always been true that those who are most prone to charge and condemn and damn others are the first to cry out when the slightest charge is made, made by any construction, to be cast against their stainless characters.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to remind the Senator that the rules of the Senate do not permit us to charge each other with misconduct even if we know it exists.

Mr. GLENN. But we can charge anybody else except ourselves.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true.

Mr. GLENN. We seem to be careful about each other. We protect each other by the rule, but everyone else in the United States we can attack, we can condemn, we can abuse, free from any possibility of response.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is giving an illustration now showing that his statement is not correct. He is making a charge now that Senators are wrongfully, without reason and falsely, charging great men who come before the committees, and shielding ourselves, so that the Senator is violating the very rule now to which the Senator from Michigan has called his attention.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GLENN. I believe I would be able to substantiate the charge that witnesses before committees have been browbeaten and attacked most viciously, and I do not believe many members of important committees will deny that that has been done.

Mr. COUZENS and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. GLENN. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I want to substantiate what the Senator from Illinois has said about the treatment of witnesses in committees. When the Senator from Illinois made his statement, in connection with which I called attention to the individual rules of the Senate, I might have remarked that the rules of the Senate do not apply to the Senate as a body, but rather to individuals, and the Senator from Nebraska does not cover the field by his statement just made.

Mr. GLENN. I thank the Senator from Michigan. I know the Senator from Michigan does not make his statement loosely. He is chairman of an important committee, one of the most important committees of this body, and is a member of other most important committees, and knows whereof he speaks.

I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator a moment ago to say that Members of this body have been guilty, and are frequently guilty, of making charges similar to those made by the Sergeant at Arms in his article, but that we hide behind the cloak of immunity. Does the Senator think that if a Member of this body should on this floor, or outside of this Chamber, say that there are some Members who sell their votes for money and that they are well known, such a Senator would escape being called either before the Senate, or a committee of it, to tell who those Members were or to submit some proof of his charge?

Mr. GLENN. I tried to make it clear a moment ago that we look after each other here in this body.

[Demonstrations of laughter among the occupants of the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must be no demonstrations in the galleries.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I have said this is an age of criticism and condemnation. Everywhere the best sellers are books making attacks upon everyone in official life in Washington, published here, widely read. I do not approve of them. Responsible and leading newspapers of the country often do not give publicity to the great constructive work which is done here—and much great constructive work is done, we all know; a thing I say without boasting, because I take credit for none of it. But I do know men in this body who have lived their lives in public service, studiously, diligently at work in the interest of their country, who never see their names in the headlines. Let some one attack another, however, make a charge against somebody, investigate somebody, and the great newspapers of the land, conservative newspapers, if you please, will blazen it all over the headlines everywhere. I suppose they give their readers what their readers want, so I do not condemn the press for that.

Mr. President, this man is not alone in this thing. It is reasonable to believe that the spirit of which I have spoken might reach him in this time. It is reasonable to believe that he might have lost his head and done this thing unthoughtedly. He should have known better. He should have known, from the selfish aspect alone, that it was unwise; but he evidently did it without sober, careful thinking.

Mr. President, I do not want to bring politics into this matter, but in every great presidential campaign every great candidate of every great party for the last 100 years has been viciously attacked, and we in the Senate have not been free from being participants in that abuse. That applies to the other side of this Chamber as well as to this, and to this side as well as to the other.

The great Cleveland was maligned, abused, condemned, attacked. The great Wilson was abused as almost no one else in the history of the Nation has been abused. One man after the other has had that experience, until in the last campaign the President of the United States was systematically, thoroughly abused, condemned, criticized, destroyed, in the minds of the people, nothing as affecting the individual, but something as tearing down the greatest office in this country, or in the world.

Talk about destroying respect for the Senate of the United States; we are soon, perhaps, to oust this man for doing a thing because it is said it tends to lower and degrade this body in the public mind, and yet a few months ago, up and down this land everywhere, went on this condemnation, this criticism, this abuse of the Presidency of the United States, the President being accused as a grafter, accused as a swindler, accused as one thing and the other thing, systematically and thoroughly and for hire.

Mr. President, I hope and I trust that as the incoming administration draws to its close, no matter what its record may be, the people of the United States will look back and ponder and reflect upon the fact that the man holding the position of President holds the most exalted position in the world, and that they who seek to tear him down seek to tear down and destroy the very fabric of our Government.

Mr. CUTTING and Mr. WHITE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GLENN. I yield first to my colleague and neighbor who sits by my side.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator is speaking of criticism made in the campaign just closed concerning the President of the United States. If those criticisms had been made by one of the President's personal secretaries, or one of his employees, how long does the Senator think that secretary or employee would have remained in the discharge of his duties?

Mr. GLENN. Well, about as long as he will remain anyway.

Mr. President, who else was in this nefarious transaction? Was this man alone? Why is it we hear only about Mr. Barry? At the head of this magazine, this publication in which this thing appeared, was another man, not a neophyte, not a new man in public life or in political life, or in dealing with Members of the Senate or with Members of Congress, but one of the great men of the country. The $250 this man was paid, which is spoken of, came from the coffers of the magazine edited by the late candidate for the Presidency of the United States, the Hon. Alfred E. Smith, four times Governor of the imperial State of New York.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me now?

Mr. GLENN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I find myself in the unhappy situation of being obliged to vote upon the pending resolution without ever having seen in its entirety the article complained of, or without ever having opportunity to read a report of the hearings held Saturday and this morning. I wonder whether the Senator from Illinois has any information as to how many other Senators who are about to cast their votes are in the same predicament?

Mr. GLENN. I should judge about 95; I am not sure; I have no information about it. I should not say that, however, Mr. President. I do not know. I assume, of course, that the members of the Committee on the Judiciary read the article and carefully considered it. I do not know how many others did.

Mr. President, the article was published in a magazine edited by the man four times governor of the greatest State in the Union. I think that man is a good man; I think he is a great man; I think he is one of the great men of this country, of whom there are but few. I stand by that declaration. I believe I could almost prove it in a court of record. [Laughter.]

He is one of the great men. He published this thing. It may be said that he did not see it. He is assumed to have seen it, and in any libel suit for which the writer of the article, Mr. Barry, would be responsible this man, former Governor Smith, would likewise be responsible. Why did he not stop this thing when it came to him, he and his managing editor? They are the ones who had it written. Is he a wicked, mean man who would destroy the Senate of the United States and destroy our form of government—former Governor Smith? I think not. Oh, no; not at all; and I predict that it will be a long day before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States send for Alfred E. Smith to come before the bar of the Senate. I wish they would do so before we act upon this resolution. They will never send for him to come here. Why not? They have the power. They have the authority. They have the right. I am not sure but what he might welcome the invitation. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT (rapping for order). There must be no demonstrations in the galleries. If there are any more demonstrations, the present occupant of the chair will order the galleries cleared.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I believe one of the cardinal principles of our American form of government is that there shall be no undue discrimination, that all men are created free and equal, and so forth. Let me call attention to the fact that we are violating the Constitution. We are not treating other people as we treat ourselves. We are now, it seems, about to oust this man after long years of service because he said some words or wrote some words which reflect upon us. He did not do a great deal to us; but it seems, now that nobody believes what he said, that we are going to oust him from his office for doing it. That is the way we treat people who reflect on us or do anything wrong to us.

There is another employee of the Senate, another officer of the Senate, who not long ago made an attack, too. He was under stress and strain and perhaps his mind was not at rest and not serene, as this man's mind may not have been. Some one said something about him and that some one was around here, too. He knew the Members of the Senate, too. He spends his time here, too. He did not sit on this floor. Oh, no, he was not one who sat upon this floor, a Member of the Senate. He sat up yonder with the young men and young women in the press gallery, and when he said something this man started after him with a young cannon and pursued him and looked for him in order to wipe out that disgrace.

The matter came before this body—an assault or attempted assault with a deadly weapon, not with words, not with idle, empty words—oh, no, but something more germane to the issue. When it was determined that this officer of the Senate was guilty of attacking one up there in the Press Gallery, what did we do with him? Why, we did nothing. It was all right then. He was under strain and under stress. Besides, he had not attacked a Member of the Senate, but only a member of the press gallery, so we excused him. Why treat him any differently from the way we are going to treat this man, Barry? We encouraged him, it is suggested to me. Some people think if he had been successful in his quest, we would have pinned upon him a senatorial badge of honor. [Laughter.]

Of course, this man, Mr. Barry, has acted foolishly. He has acted without thought. He has said an unwise thing. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asks what position will we be in now if we do not oust him; a pertinent inquiry. It is a pertinent inquiry. May I state, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, what position I think we will be in here in the Senate if we do not oust this man. I think the people of the United States will say, "Well, he has admitted on the floor, first, that he did not intend the obvious meaning of his words; secondly, that in all his time in the Senate he knows of no man in either the Senate or the House who has accepted a bribe. Therefore, he clears all from any intended meaning of the words. All are freed from any charge by this man. He has not apologized." I credit him for that. It must have been a rather strange, unusual spectacle the other day to have this old man, with the winters of 73 years ageing his shoulders and whitening his hair, to come before this body alone, without counsel, without much notice, I take it, and stand here as a man, not begging, nor crawling, nor apologizing.

I think the people will say "There is nothing in the story. The man did write the article. He says so himself. He was foolish. He did the thing that was not the right thing. He has said now that he knows nothing to substantiate the supposed charges."

I think we will be in a better position before the country in this time, when this man in the next three weeks is to leave his office, if we remember his age, if we remember his years, his white hairs, his long honorable service in this body, his spotless life and reputation for more than 73 years, and if we say to him "You have done a foolish thing. We will not likewise be foolish. We will not vote to dismiss you from your office."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I regret very much the nature of the report made by the Judiciary Committee. In view of the testimony given us the other day in the Senate by the Sergeant at Arms before he became confused by clever cross-examination, against which he was not protected by judge or counsel, in view of the testimony which he read to the Judiciary Committee yesterday, which unfortunately is not printed, but which I have here in the form of the stenographic report; in view of one or two other items, namely, the fact that the beginning of his article as he wrote it was eliminated by the publisher without his knowledge—a fact which places in my mind a different construction upon the published article—I shall vote against the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. President, some of the Senators here present were not present the other day when the Sergeant at Arms was quickly haled before the bar of the Senate and questioned. He did not speak very loud. That is not strange. When a man has been an employee of the Senate during a large part of his life, either as a page or as an official in the press gallery, representing a distinguished newspaper, or as Sergeant at Arms, never having before said more than a word or two in announcing the arrival of dignitaries, and is called before the bar of the Senate and faced by Senators whom he respects, before the body for whom he has worked for so many years, it is not strange that he was not able to make a very favorable impression. That is not surprising, Mr. President. But I would like to read what he did say when he first came before the Senate.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] said:

Mr. Barry, did you write the article in the New Outlook published this month?

Sergeant at Arms BARRY. I did.

Mr. WATSON. In that article did you say, "There are not many Senators or Representatives who sell their vote for money, and it is pretty well known who those few are"?

Sergeant at Arms BARRY. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. WATSON. Who are those Senators and Representatives who you know have sold their votes for money?

Now, listen!

Sergeant at Arms BARRY. I have not the slightest idea. I had no Senator in mind, and I do not know that there is such a Senator.

Mr. WATSON. What, then, Mr. Barry, did you mean by that language?

Sergeant at Arms BARRY. My idea in writing that—

That particular language, may I say to the Senator from Nebraska, and not the particular article, but my idea in writing that particular language—

was to defend the Senate——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me correct the Senator. Is he reading or is he interpolating his own language?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am interpolating my interpretation of it and I will now read his language exactly as it occurred.

Mr. WATSON. What, then, Mr. Barry, did you mean by that language?

Sergeant at Arms BARRY. My idea in writing that was to defend the Senate from the popular belief that there are crooks and grafters here. I have for 30 years taken that view. I have written a great many times and said a great many times that there are no crooks in Congress; that it is a mistaken popular belief, but it is the general belief; and I meant by that, of course, that if there were a few men here who did take money for their votes they would be very well known to their colleagues. I meant nothing further than that and my motive was entirely in the way of defense of the Senate.

Those were the words which he used when he was called before the bar of the Senate to explain what he meant. Those were the frank, simple statements of a man called hurriedly before the bar and asked what he meant. Afterwards, it is true, under skillful cross-examination by members of the bar, some of the most able members of the bar in the United States, he changed his views. He was confused. He said things which he did not mean and which contradicted what he said first when he made his simple statement.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. DALE. The Senator speaks of the time when he was "cross-examined." There is no lawyer who can tell when he was examined and when he was cross-examined during that time. It is impossible for one to say when he was under direct examination and when he was under cross-examination.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is quite true. What I intended to imply was that when he came before the Senate his first simple words were somewhat in amazement that his words, which he had never seen in proof, appeared to mean something that he did not mean to say and would not have allowed to be printed had he known that that was what he did say. A little bit later, under the fire of questioning from various parts of the floor by skillful cross-examiners, he became confused and changed his statement and did not make a very favorable impression. That is what I meant by "cross-examination."

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. DALE. I think perhaps the Senator misconstrued my purpose in saying what I did. It was in no sense a criticism of the Senator from Connecticut or what he was saying. I think the procedure that was carried on here was positively ridiculous.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think it was worse than that. I think the procedure was a disgrace to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. DALE. When he was examined or cross-examined, whatever one may wish to call it, he was caused to incriminate himself against the very first rule of evidence; he was caused to give out confidential communications that no judge would have permitted, in fact, that no ordinary justice of the peace would have permitted.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator.

Now, Mr. President, in his appearance before the Judiciary Committee Mr. Barry said:

I desire, Mr. Chairman, to make a statement which I have written out.

I will read that statement. I think it should go into the RECORD. I now quote from Mr. Barry's statement without omission.

I have served the Senate nearly 14 years. In that time I have made every effort to uphold its dignity and its honor, and I would not willingly have done anything to impugn its honor.

I have at many times in my career as a newspaper correspondent written publicly and professed my sincere belief that Congress, as a body, is composed of honest men, and a fair reading of the entire text of the article in question would show that my purpose was to proclaim the integrity of the Congress as a whole.

Many years ago I published in the New England Magazine an article entitled "The Loyalty of the Senate," in an attempt to reply to a series of articles written by the late David Graham Phillips. The title of his articles was The Treason of the Senate, and at that time they caused a sensational discussion of the very subject now before the Senate. I was at that time, as I was in the New Outlook article, endeavoring to represent it as the true situation that the isolated case of misconduct of individuals in office offered no basis for the loose public condemnation of the Senate we so often hear.

If it is an offense to have said what I said in my article, then not alone am I guilty, for on the 10th of May, 1932, Senator CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, speaking on the subject of the opposition of certain bankers to the proposed legislation in regard to branch banking, said:

"They hired a skillful and persuasive professional lobbyist and paid him a salary to come here to Washington—worse than that, they hired some Congressmen to my positive documentary knowledge—to oppose even that small measure of branch banking."

Continuing Mr. Barry's statement:

I would also respectfully call attention to the letter of Senator NYE to the late Senator Caraway, published in the printed hearings of the Nye committee investigating campaign expenditures involving an individual Senator.

Within the past few days a Senator has said in the Senate that a certain measure would be enacted because the interests were behind it, and it is a matter of frequent comment that the Halls of Congress are filled with groups of lobbyists, and the lobbyist for special interests has always had a sinister name. It may be, from all that is recited above, a fair inference that there were some men subject at least to influence, and my inference was based on a general knowledge of conditions surrounding Congress and not on any concrete cases such as that spoken of by Senator GLASS. Moreover, I employed my inference to dispute a popular impression that Congress is filled with grafters.

But certain Senators have apparently arrived at the conclusion that my words carry a meaning I never intended, and if the interpretation is to be placed upon them that they constitute an attack upon the integrity of the Senate I would unquestionably, as an elected officer of the body, owe the Senate an apology, which on that basis I would unhesitatingly tender.

I have served the Senate, as I have heretofore stated, nearly 14 years. In less than a month my successor, in ordinary course, would have been named, and I expected to serve until then. I do not believe that it would have been proper for me as an elected officer of the Senate to have published an article reflecting upon the integrity of the Senate. That would be impropriety, regardless of fact or evidence. But I do not feel that I have so acted as to the Senate.

Quite to the contrary, I have affirmed the integrity of the Senate against the too-widespread popular belief in the prevalence of corruption. I have declared dishonesty in the individual, to which I think I have clearly shown it was reasonable for me to allude, to be exceptional, and even relatively without influence.

May I interpolate to say, Mr. President, that those words "even relatively without influence" are, to my mind, very illuminating, for when Mr. Barry appeared before the Senate and said that he meant nothing further than that if they took money for votes, they would be well known to their colleagues, he was in another method expressing exactly the belief which he expressed in his statement to the committee.

I continue the quotation:

I spoke of demagoguery. If that constitutes an impropriety, I would gladly offer an apology as an officer of the Senate, but the charge appears to be that I have assailed the integrity of the Senate.

Were I guilty of that I would not only apologize; I would resign. Indeed, I would have resigned and made the charge afterward. But, believing that I have not made any such attack, that I have said no more—indeed far less—than Senators GLASS and NYE and others, I can only in good conscience await the judgment of the Senate.

I shall only quote one more paragraph from his testimony before the committee where Senator BRATTON referred to the opening paragraph of his article, which was omitted by the publishers without Mr. Barry's knowledge and which would have placed a different interpretation on his entire article, one which would have been in accordance with his desire to protect the Senate by merely in part quoting from one of its own Members. Senator BRATTON asked—

Can you give us the substance of the opening paragraph of the article as you wrote it, which was omitted?

Mr. BARRY. It began with a quotation from a statement that Senator BULKLEY made last fall in a campaign speech in which he said that if there are not good men in the Congress—something to this effect; I am not quoting it word for word—that Congress was made up of the class of people that the people sent here; and if they did not have the kind of people here that they ought to have, it was their own fault.

Senator BRATTON. That was deleted from the article?

Mr. BARRY. Yes; it was left out.

Mr. President, I submit that the punishment proposed for Mr. Barry is far more serious and severe than is justified in view of his explanation of what he intended to do. It is true that his words were utterly foolish and that they had an implication which he said he did not intend to convey. There is one thing, however, in his examination before the Senate that deserves also to be noted.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he has the transcript of the evidence taken this morning before the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that that transcript has not as yet been received from the stenographers.

Mr. NORRIS. I have sent for it, and I think we will have it in a few minutes.

Mr. HEBERT. If the Senator will permit me further, I make this observation because Mr. Barry in his appearance before the committee this morning brought with him the original manuscript of his article, which included the paragraphs that were omitted from the article as published; and, if my memory serves me correctly, there was as much as a page and a half of it. I assume the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has that original manuscript in the files of the committee?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut permit me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have sent to the Judiciary Committee room to see whether the transcript has been returned typed. At the last inquiry I made it had not yet been returned from the stenographers.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me again, I had reference to the original article as prepared by Mr. Barry——

Mr. NORRIS. The stenographers took that with them.

Mr. HEBERT. Which I suppose had been left in the files of the committee.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. Would it not be more regular and fitting not to insist that this matter be acted upon until that transcript at least shall be available so that we may know what occurred?

Mr. NORRIS. Personally, I do not think so. It is in the power of the Senate, of course, to put the matter off until the 3d of March, if they want to. We will have it all printed by that time.

Mr. GLENN. Does not the Senator think it would be in more regular order to defer action until we have the transcript of the testimony of this morning?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is asking me the question. I do not think the Judiciary Committee ought to have taken any evidence. I think the Senate—and I said so at the time—ought to have acted immediately after the Sergeant at Arms was heard here in the Senate.

Mr. GLENN. But having taken testimony, does not the Senator think the Members of the Senate should have it?

Mr. NORRIS. They can have it if they want to. Of course, it is within the power of the Senate to take such action as it pleases. The fact that the transcript is not available now is not my fault, and it is not my fault that I submitted this report at 4 o'clock to-day. That is due to the action of the Senate. The Senate prescribed that that should be done. We have only obeyed the Senate. If we had not obeyed it, we would have had the Senator from Illinois jumping all over us because we did not follow the instructions of the Senate. If the Senate wants to put it off until the 4th of March, that is within its province, of course.

Mr. GLENN. Would the Senator favor putting it off until we can have an opportunity of seeing and reading the transcript?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not want to put it off.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Nebraska takes that position. It seems to me when we are asked to vote upon the preemptory dismissal of a man who for many years has been a faithful employee of the Senate, and, at the age of 73 years, has at the most committed an indiscretion, due in part to the fact that he himself never had an opportunity to read the article in print or even in proof, that the matter deserves no such great haste that we may not even have his testimony and examination by the committee printed and on the desk of each Senator.

That in itself seems to me, Mr. President, constitutes a most unusual situation and is not worthy of the Senate of the United States.

But, Mr. President, there is one other matter that I should like to quote from the testimony taken the other day in the open Senate where the Senator from Nebraska addressed the Sergeant at Arms and said:

> The Senator from Indiana did not read the portions following what he read to you. I had better read all of it, so as to get the sense.

Then he quoted from the article as follows:

> There are not many Senators or Representatives who sell their votes for money, and it is pretty well known who those few are; but there are many demagogues of the kind that will vote for legislation solely because they think that it will help their political and social fortunes.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, the Senator from Nebraska followed that up by this—just a moment, may I finish the quotation?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I continue the quotation:

> And then you follow that by this language:
> This is what passed the constitutional amendment providing for the popular election of Senators, it is what passed the amendment giving suffrage to women, it is what passed the prohibition amendment, and it is what has made possible the almost successful attempt to hang the bonus on the American taxpayers.

Then the Senator from Nebraska asked this question:

> Is it true, in your judgment, that there are demagogues in the House and Senate, and it is because of the votes of those demogogues that these amendments have been submitted to the people.
> Sergeant at Arms BARRY. I most certainly do.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator, after he has read that language, believe the statement of the Sergeant at Arms when he said, "I was making a defense of the Senate"? Does he think that is a defense of the Senate? Does he think anybody could construe it into being a defense of the Senate or the other House?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President; but when he made that statement he explained what he said was his idea in writing it in response to a question of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. However, I may say that I believe the Senator from Nebraska is quite right in his latter statement. Mr. Barry said that the entire article was a defense of the Senate in his statement before the committee. Mr. President, that part of the article can hardly be construed as a defense of the Senate, however true it may be. The trouble is, Mr. President, when the Sergeant at Arms was questioned as to whether he believed that there were demagogues in the House and the Senate he said, "I most certainly do." That is the real charge against him. His article was entitled "Over the Hill to Demagoguery." That is the trouble with the Sergeant at Arms; he has called attention to one of our weaknesses in that sometimes we do vote in a way to secure votes for ourselves. I make no claim that I am any more free from that than anyone else, but when he wrote that Members of the Congress vote because they think it will help their political and social fortunes he told the truth about a great many of us.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. Does the Senator think, even granting the truth of what he is saying, that it is any part of the duty of the Sergeant at Arms to pillory us before the public?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly not, Mr. President. I do not excuse his article. I think it was in extremely bad taste. I think it shows the evidence of advancing years that a man in the employ of the Senate would say such a thing. Certainly no young man would venture to criticize the body that employed him. If he did, he would expect to be dismissed at once. Certainly it is not evidence of loyalty. It is evidence of extremely bad taste.

But, Mr. President, here is the Senate of the United States, 96 Senators representing a great Nation that we are pleased to think is the greatest nation on the face of the earth, with 122,000,000 people. The action that is proposed reminds me of a scene that I once saw on one of my travels, when a beloved Airedale of mine was trotting along a path in the Andes Mountains, minding his own business, going about his way; and a small dog rushed out of the bushes and barked at him, and, in canine language, called him every name in the calendar, including some words I can not use on the floor, and the Airedale paid no attention whatsoever.

The small dog nipped at his legs, and the Airedale—and I was proud of him for it—went on his way and paid no attention, until the little dog got tired of yapping and nipping at him. But a little later on we came to a fence, and through a door in the fence three dogs came out, each one of them as big as the Airedale. Immediately the Airedale put up his back and fought all three dogs at once, and I was proud of him; but when the little dog barked at him he did nothing.

We have been barked at by a little dog. To be sure, he is our dog; but is that any reason why we should kick him out? Is that any reason why we should get excited about it and think that our dignity has been assailed?

Mr. President, here is a man who has faithfully served the Senate for many years. He is 73 years old. He has committed an indiscretion. He has shown extremely bad judgment. He has said that which he says himself he did not mean to say, and we propose to put a blot on his character and expel him from the service of the Senate in his last days here.

Mr. President, I can not vote for any such motion.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the rules of the Senate do not provide any method of procedure for the dismissal of one of its employees other than that which has been suggested in the case of the Sergeant at Arms, we ought immediately to have a meeting of the Rules Committee and find some way by which we can dispose of an employee without this sort of a showing to the country.

I think the Senate was acting hastily and ill-advisedly. I think the impression on the country has been bad. I have not seen a single, solitary editorial comment on this whole procedure that favored the conduct of the Senate.

I was not impressed with the thought that we ought to bring this man in here before 96 Senators, where the Senate was acting as the judge, the prosecuting attorney, and the jury, and have him tried here. Instead of suggesting to me the type of procedure that the Senator from Connecticut has referred to, it made me think of these pictures of the wonderful fox hunt, where they are all going home with 20 or 30 fine hounds following along, with 25 or 30 men on horses, and 1 little fox is held up by the tail as the result of the great fox hunt, in which we can spend days and days in this country.

As a matter of fact, I should like to see Barry dismissed from service, and I think he should be dismissed, but I am going to vote against this resolution because of the procedure of the Senate in trying to bring about the dismissal. If we have no other way by which we can dismiss an employee, we have a Rules Committee that ought to find a way by which this can be brought about, without the disgraceful procedure we are going through here.

Mr. DALE and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that when this question came before the Senate the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] suggested that the matter be laid before the Rules Committee, and he was called down so furiously that no further attempt was made to do that.

If the Senator will pardon me just one minute, I want to say for myself that I take the same position he does. I think something should be done with Mr. Barry, but under these circumstances I can not bring myself to vote for this kind of a procedure.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. If one of the Senator's employees in his office should write a letter or publish a statement to the effect that the Senator himself was a crook, or a grafter, or was selling his vote for money, would he call the Rules Committee of the Senate together to determine what ought to be done with the employee?

Mr. DICKINSON. I certainly would not; but I will tell the Senator further what I would not do; I would not come over to the floor of the Senate and advertise to the world that one of my employees had said I was dishonest.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the trouble about that is that it had been advertised to the world before anything happened here.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no, it had not! I want to say that I read the press just about as carefully as anybody in the Senate, and I had absolutely no knowledge of this matter until the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] rose on the floor and asked for recognition; and I am of the impression that the occupant of the chair at that time, who is now in the chair, had no knowledge whatsoever of that procedure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair may say so, the Senator from Iowa is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Iowa will yield further, that may be explained because of the fact that this occurred only a day or two after the beginning of this month, which was the month of the current publication of the magazine, and it was only brought to the attention of the Senate when the magazine was found out in the reading room on the very day when it was mentioned in the Senate. Whatever advertising was started about this whole situation was started by the Sergeant at Arms when he put his article in the magazine and received pay for it.

Did any Senator know about that in advance? Did any of us know that such an article was to appear? Did the Sergeant at Arms consult any Senator about whether or not he ought to publish that article? Of course not. We knew it first when we saw the magazine.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the Senator is attempting to drag me to the point of defending Barry, I will say that I am not defending him. I think it was an indiscretion, but there was not a word of testimony given by him anywhere that showed that he had any intent of injuring the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator that this body made a holy show of itself last Friday, and it is doing it again to-day; but the Senator need not feel that we would have satisfied the editorial writers by any other course of action. If we had done nothing about this matter, they would have denounced that as a confession of guilt. If we had referred it to a committee, they would have denounced that as an effort to smother it. Whatever we did was wrong in their eyes. Whatever we would do would be wrong.

If the Senator hopes for newspaper approval, I assure him that he has a long wait.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me reply to the Senator that it is the fault of the Senate, and not the fault of Barry, that the Senate is in ill repute with the editorial group of the United States.

Let me read to you from the New York Herald Tribune an editorial headed "Worse than corrupt":

> The spectacle of the Senate of the United States solemnly resenting the charge that it is corrupt is a tragic comic episode in the history of the Nation.

The last paragraph is as follows:

> The Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, Mr. David S. Barry, was wrong because he misstated the facts and understated the truth. He should doubtless be thrown out of his job on the first count.

Then it goes on with expressions critical of the Senate:

> On the second, the Senate should go into mourning for the evil days upon which it has fallen, days of disgrace and dishonor, of a menace far more dangerous to the welfare of the Nation than any occasional buying of Senators by dollars honestly earned.

My theory is simply that this whole procedure is ill advised. We should have found a way by which we could have referred this matter to some committee with the right to dispose of it—perhaps to a patronage committee. I would not care what committee it was; but I am going to vote against this resolution, not because I do not think Barry should be dismissed, but because I am against this sort of procedure on the floor of the United States Senate; and the sooner we come to the conclusion that we must do things here in an orderly way without this display, without being apparently so obsessed as to the desire to crucify somebody, the sooner I believe we will regain the confidence of the people of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, without attempting to criticize the Senator or to suggest that there might not be some better way of dealing with this matter, I want to call his attention to the fact that what he suggested as a method of doing it would be done secretly; and if that had occurred, these beloved newspapers that the Senator is talking about probably would have torn us into shreds in less than 24 hours. Does the Senator favor a secret method of disposing of a charge when we are called crooks? Does he want to have it handled secretly?

Mr. DICKINSON. Are there any proceedings of any committee of the Senate of the United States that are secret?

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator wants to find a way to handle this matter without getting any publicity.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; I do not.

Mr. NORRIS. How are we going to do it?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would simply refer it to a committee with power to act; and I would not have a parade here of oratory for hours and hour and hours, with important business waiting, in order to dispose of an incidental matter of this kind.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may be right; but, after all, he is laying himself open to the charge and laying the Senate open to the charge, that we are afraid to meet these charges in the open, and that we are punishing those of our employees who call us crooks by operating in secret.

Mr. DICKINSON. Now, let me reply to that.

The Senate seems to be obsessed with the fact that if we come out here and make a great display of ourselves, and have a lot of oratory, and have the public press open to every word that is said, we are doing away with the thought that we are attempting to do a thing secretly.

I want to suggest that there is not a committee proceeding in the Senate that is secret. In most of them a report of the proceedings is taken by a stenographer and is a public record. This could have been made a public record, and it could have been done without any of this display, and the newspapers could have made such comments as they wanted to, and the Senate would have been much better off, and the country would have been much better satisfied.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Did I understand the Senator to state that from his study of the facts, and after consulting his conscience, he had reached the conclusion that he would vote for the dismissal of Mr. Barry?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; I am going to vote against this resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understood the Senator to say that he was going to vote against this resolution because he did not agree to the procedure, but I understood him to say also that he thought Mr. Barry ought to be dismissed. Did I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. DICKINSON. I say that he ought either to be dismissed or he should resign. I think if this matter were referred to a committee he would resign.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator from Massachusetts is not going to be able to drag me into a place where he thinks I will be embarrassed in the vote I am casting, because there is a method of reaching this matter, and it can be found; and if the Senate has not the ability to find it——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I hope the Senator will not get angry. I want to ask him again, Did he or did he not, in the presence of his colleagues a few minutes ago, state that he had reached the conclusion that Mr. Barry ought to be dismissed, but that he did not like this procedure?

Mr. DICKINSON. I said he should be dismissed. As a matter of indiscretion, he should be dismissed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Very well. Then I ask the Senator, if he has reached that conclusion upon his own investigation, does he not think it possible that 95 of his colleagues may have reached the same conclusion?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have not talked with a single, solitary Senator as to his conclusion. It is a matter of no particular concern to me. I am just convinced that we ought to find another way of bringing about the dismissal of an employee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator suggest the other way?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have suggested the other way.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What shall we do now? What motion will the Senator make?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would refer this matter back to the Judiciary Committee with power to act and do what they want to do, or I would refer it to the Rules Committee, or to a patronage committee, or some other committee. The Senate referred it to the Judiciary Committee the other day with instructions to report back here at 4 o'clock on Tuesday. It was a shameful thing, and now it is paraded again before the country.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So as to avoid a record here, the Senator would refer it to the Judiciary Committee to do what they pleased?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that I do not try to escape any record votes. He has never seen me running out of the door. I will not run out of the door on this vote. I will vote "no," just as I have suggested.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, it seems to me that the course of the debate has taken us rather away from the very simple facts involved. Mr. Barry, an employee of the Senate, wrote an article for the New Outlook which not merely stated that a few Senators and Representatives sold their votes but went on to say—

> There are many demagogues of the kind that will vote for legislation solely because they think that it will help their political and social fortunes.

Mr. President, that charge, to my mind, is quite as serious a one as the original charge made.

> This is what passed the constitutional amendment providing for the popular election of Senators; it is what passed the amendment giving suffrage to women; it is what passed the prohibition amendment; and it is what has made possible the almost successful attempt to hang the bonus on the American taxpayers.

Mr. President, I may mention in passing the fact that it was the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] who was in charge of the constitutional amendment providing for the popular election of Senators; that it was the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] who was in charge of the prohibition amendment; and that a large majority of the Senate, including many who are still Members, voted for the bonus when it came up in 1924.

Mr. Barry mentions no names at that particular point, but he goes back into the past to show to whom he refers as demagogues. He starts with Peffer and Simpson, of Kansas; Allen, of Nebraska; Butler, of South Carolina, "and before them Weaver, of Iowa." He goes on, while speaking of demagogues, to say:

> It is not so many years ago that the elder La Follette embodied something of the ideas of these men by proposing that Congress have the right to veto the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Barry goes on to say that—> the reference to the court was taken seriously enough to cause President Hoover to rap Mr. Roosevelt over the knuckles in his campaign speeches for even referring to it.

In the next section of his article Mr. Barry states:

> Congress, it can not be denied, is becoming more and more careless of the letter of the Constitution; and more than once in recent sessions of Congress the spirit, if not the precise letter, of this charter has been side-stepped in an effort to enact some legislation plainly violative of the Constitution itself.

The Senate, in other words, is not merely charged with selling its votes, or voting in such a way as will help the political and social fortunes of Senators, but with actual violation of the Constitution.

Mr. Barry goes on to say:

> There are in Congress to-day—

May I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] to the fact that he is obviously speaking about the present Congress.

> There are in Congress to-day, and will be, undoubtedly, for many years to come, a powerful and influential group of business men and conservatives, but the great mass of the Senators and Representatives will be inexperienced men voted into office by the radical elements of the electorate which are eager for any kind of a change which promises to lift them out of the depression; and the efforts of the conservatives in both parties to hold these wild ones down to sane and sensible legislation of such a kind that may be depended upon to give all classes the kind of relief that will be wholesome and beneficial to them must of necessity be unremitting.

So the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate is calling on the minority of sane, conservative Senators to keep the radical majority in check.

Mr. President, I shall not quote the article at any length. It is all along the same line. It goes on at one point to show that the reason why President Hoover was unable to carry through his policies was owing to the large number of progressives, or insurgent Senators, who were able at any time to upset the plans by cooperating with the Democratic minority.

He goes on to discuss the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] and the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS]. Mr. COUZENS's action in criticizing the Republican leader, Mr. WATSON, of Indiana, he claims had perhaps no counterpart in legislative annals.

Mr. President, I can not conceive of anything more improper than the action of an employee of this body in taking part in any partisan propaganda for the benefit of any element in this body, or in the denunciation of any individuals in this body or of the body as a whole. It seems to me that is so elementary that there is no use standing on this floor to discuss the question any further.

Whatever procedure might have been taken has nothing to do with the merits of the resolution which we are now called upon to vote for or against. To my way of thinking, it is improper for an employee of the Senate to write any kind of an article discussing the Senate as a body or Senators as individuals, but certainly one which from beginning to end is critical, denunciatory, and defamatory, is a thing which the Senate can not possibly pass without notice. We can not ignore it because it is before us, and we now by our votes have either to justify the actions of this Senate employee or to condemn them in the only logical way in which such action can be condemned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not propose to enter into any defense of the Sergeant at Arms for this indiscretion. I said the other day, and meant it then, that in my judgment his indiscretion was very grave. I think he has made a grievous mistake, certainly from the standpoint of propriety and ethical conduct on the part of an employee toward his employer. But I did not think then, I do not believe now, that that conduct warranted peremptory dismissal from the position he holds. Because I felt that way, I proposed a substitute in the Committee on the Judiciary this morning for the resolution which has been reported, which would have permitted Mr. Barry to resign.

Mr. President, the point was made that he might not resign. I certainly do not desire to violate any confidence, because I wish to treat my colleagues on the committee as I should desire to be treated myself in a like situation, but I think I violate no confidence when I make the statement that that suggestion was tendered.

Mr. President, I do not believe Mr. Barry should be forced out. I do not believe he should be dismissed summarily. Certainly he has had the example of criticizing set before him here in this body time and again. Innuendoes have been hurled back and forth across the aisle when politics was concerned. And where there was no partisan motive, undoubtedly inferences have been made by Senators on this floor to the effect at least that some Senators had been influenced by powerful interests.

I think now of statements connected with the so-called Power Trust; I think of the various tariff discussions. Not infrequently suggestions have been made by Members of this body to the effect that certain legislation could not be enacted because "out yonder are powerful lobbyists," the "interests," which would not permit that legislation to take form and become the law of the land.

Whenever a Senator says that "powerful interests are out here to prevent legislation in this body," by inference, at any rate, that Senator means that "these powerful interests out here" influence Members of this body. Such charges are made almost every day during the consideration of such matters as tariff bills. The Sergeant at Arms had Members' example for any statements he might desire to make in that connection.

Mr. President, doubtless he has been led astray by such suggestions. What his purpose was I do not know, but I have been able to convince myself that there was no malice in this man's heart against the Senate—either against it as a body or against individual Members.

Whatever the effect of his utterance might have been, I am convinced in my own mind that there never was any criminal intent on his part, or any intention of libeling the Senate, and while he took a bad way to express himself and doubtless used unfortunate phraseology, I am willing to take him at his word that he meant really to defend the Senate as a body.

I do not agree with Mr. Barry, I find, Mr. President, from what has been read here from the article which he is alleged to have written and which he admits having written. I have never read the article. But I note in listening to those who have read excerpts from it that he inveighs against the direct election of Senators. I am for that system, and because I am for it Mr. Barry would doubtless classify me as a demagogue. He also attacks the eighteenth amendment. I favor the eighteenth amendment, and therefore I suppose I am in the category of demagogues because I favor that amendment. Finally, Mr. Barry attacks vehemently the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates of the veterans of the World War, commonly called the bonus. I favor the immediate payment of the bonus, and so I assume Mr. Barry would there again include me in the list of demagogues.

That troubles me not at all, Mr. President. I recognize that Mr. Barry has a right to his views as much as I have to mine, and I have no objection whatever to his expressing his views as I insist on being permitted to express mine, only I have a much better opportunity to express my views than has Mr. Barry. I am a Member of the United States Senate and can stand on this floor and defend my views and myself if attacked. Mr. Barry has no such right.

Mr. Barry is called before the Senate. It is a tragic situation, Mr. President. Here is a timid little man, 74 years old, who, so far as I know, has rendered such service throughout these many years that his conduct has never before been called into question. If I am correctly informed, he was even a page boy here in his early youth. Now to drag this man here before crowded galleries, before 96 Members of this body, each individual of which is clothed with enormous power, and which body collectively as a part of the sovereignty we call the Government of the United States is ten thousand times more powerful than the Members are individually, and have him stand there before everybody without any preparation at all, it seems to me is utterly tragic.

But I shall not discuss that. I gave voice to my views on that subject when the spectacle was in process of performance a few days ago. I said then, and I have had no occasion to change my mind on the subject, that the Members of this powerful body were about to act as a mob, to tear to pieces a man 73 or 74 years old, for what? For doing what everybody seems to be doing throughout the country.

Mr. President, all those occupying positions of authority to-day are under attack by the American people who are suffering great hardships. They are discontented and very unhappy. Naturally, they wonder that no alleviation comes for their misery from the agencies of Government. So Members of this body and those in official authority to-day are not only attacked from one end of the country to the other, but they are actually abused. I made the statement to-day to some of my colleagues on the committee, and I think it is not far wrong, that if the American people had the power this moment suddenly to vote whether or not those of us in authority should continue or be discharged and dismissed, they would probably discharge all the Members of this body immediately by their votes.

Then I submit, is it fair and just to drag this man here, who is utterly in our power, and, because he has spoken his mind, because he stated what he believes to be true, what he has heard on all sides, to send him out of here at his advanced age disgraced forever?

Mr. President, I think it is far better to be lenient, to temper justice with mercy, and to have some regard for this man's future even though there may not be many years left to him. I think he has committed a grievous error. I think perhaps he should be reprimanded for it—censured doubtless, but not discharged in disgrace. I understand that a substitute of that kind will be offered. If no one else offers it, I shall offer it myself and move as a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate of the United States reprimand and censure the Sergeant at Arms for this indiscretion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Couzens | Johnson | Robinson, Ind. |
| Austin | Cutting | Kean | Russell |
| Bailey | Dale | Kendrick | Schall |

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, remarkable as the performance of the Sergeant at Arms in writing the offending article may have been, still more remarkable are the arguments of some Senators who have submitted remarks on the subject this afternoon. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] solemnly tells the Senate that he thinks the Sergeant at Arms should be discharged, but he will not vote to discharge him because he wants to discharge him some other way. If a Senator had risen on this floor and had charged another Senator with writing this article, as the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate wrote it, and the Senator so charged had been challenged on the floor as the Sergeant at Arms was challenged, and he had answered the interrogations as the Sergeant at Arms answered them, and the matter had been referred to the Judiciary Committee or to the Rules Committee, and they had come back here and made this recommendation, what would the Senate do? It would vote to expel the Senator. The Senator from Iowa says:

> He ought to be discharged, but I will not vote to discharge him because you have got to discharge him some other way.

Now, what other way is there to discharge him, except to discharge him?

The junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] begins his defense of the Sergeant at Arms by saying that he committed an indiscretion, and he winds up his address by saying that he believes that the Sergeant at Arms was really trying to defend the Senate. He thinks he was really defending the Senate! He believes he was innocent, and yet, because of that, he wants to discharge him, but he does not want to discharge him all at once. He does not want to discharge him "summarily," he says. I suppose he wants to discharge him by degrees—not discharge him "summarily"; just discharge part of him to-day, and part to-morrow, and about the 4th of March, when he is going to go off the pay roll anyway, let him slip off the pay roll.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not know that the Senator is addressing his remarks to me, but he is looking right at me. If he is referring to me, let me say that I do not want to discharge him at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. What did the Senator mean, then, by saying that he did not believe he ought to be discharged summarily?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not believe he ought to be discharged at all. That is what I meant by summarily.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, I see. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. CONNALLY. What does the Senator propose to do about it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I propose at most to reprimand him for his indiscretion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Reprimand him! Before I would vote merely to reprimand him for libeling the Senate, according to his own admission, I would vote to give him a bouquet or a medal of honor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would not go that far.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator would not go that far.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think the Sergeant at Arms has been indiscreet and deserves perhaps to be rebuked by the Senate, but certainly not to be discharged and dismissed in disgrace.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I think perhaps I may compose this matter so that we may proceed with the appropriation bill. How would it do just to tap him on the wrist? [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Oklahoma suggests tapping him on the wrist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas will suspend until the galleries are in order. If the galleries can not maintain order they will be cleared.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, that is exactly what the Senator from Indiana proposes to do—to tap him on the wrist. He proposes to call him down to the bar of the Senate and say, "Now, Mr. Sergeant at Arms, it is true that you said there were only a few crooks in the Senate, and, therefore, we will just tap you in proportion to the number of crooks you said were here, and we will only give you three taps or four taps on your wrist." [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE. "And without breaking the crystal on your wrist watch." [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. And without breaking the crystal, as the Senator from Oklahoma suggests, on his wrist watch.

Mr. President, one Senator suggests that Mr. Barry be permitted to resign. For what? If he has done nothing, if he has simply defended the Senate, if he was acting through purity of motives and fine spirit and was trying to help the Senate, what does the Senator want to make him resign for? We ought to keep such an able defender, such a splendid champion of the Senate. The Senator from Indiana says do not drag him down across the Senate floor here and pillory him at the bar of the Senate.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield in a moment. Let me remind the Senator from Indiana that the Sergeant at Arms first dragged the name of the Senate before the whole people of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That was not first done by the Sergeant at Arms. That was done long before the Sergeant at Arms wrote the article.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; and the Senator from Indiana a little while ago in his remarks said that the Senate and the House of Representatives were being so villified and so abused throughout this country that if to-morrow the people of the country should vote they would probably retire all of us. Will not the Senate aggravate that situation if, in the presence of an admitted libel by a man who is an officer of this body, who is supposed to have knowledge and opportunity of observation—if, in the face of that kind of a libel, the Senate, with its liver turning white, refuses to drive him from the doors of the Senate? I propound that interrogatory to the Senator. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator refers to a libel, which ought to be punishable by the courts. Does the Senator think we ought to stop after the present procedure as to the Sergeant at Arms? Would it not be better, if we are going this far, to include action on the part of the magazine which printed the libel? I am asking this in no sense of criticism but in the sense of the duty which the Senate owes to itself. If we are fighting for our dignity and to maintain it, why do we not go to the extent of taking action which will amount to something?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that the only way to do a thing is to start at the beginning. When we shall have disposed of the Sergeant at Arms as an officer of the Senate there will be plenty of opportunity and time then to take up other matters. We are dealing now only with the question that is before us, and I do not propose to have my trend of what I hope is thought disturbed by incursions into some other field as to what we may do under some other circumstances. The issue before the Senate is not the trial of Mr. Barry. We are not trying him for a crime or an offense. Senators try to obfuscate the Senate with all their remarks about trial by jury, Anglo-Saxon institutions, and interrogations before grand juries. We are simply dealing with a case of an employee, a man on the pay roll of the Senate, who has libeled the Senate, and who has admitted the libel. It is simply a question of discharging him from that employment, just as if one of us had an unfaithful servant who raided his pantry or stole his wife's jewelry, he would not keep him in his employment until the grand jury indicted him and tried him and convicted him of theft; he would discharge him the moment he found out he had been unfaithful, and then he would let the court take care of the crime or the offense against the commonwealth.

The Senate is making itself ridiculous when Senators stand upon the floor of the Senate and admit that the Senate has been libeled, that it has been slandered, that its name has been dragged in the dust, and then, instead of simply dismissing an unfaithful and falsely testifying witness against the Senate, seek to continue him in its employ. If the Senate wants to make this matter more ridiculous before the country, it can do so by continuing Mr. Barry as Sergeant at Arms. The Senator from Indiana says that the Senate and the Congress are now in disrepute. If the Senate retains on its roll Mr. Barry one hour longer after it shall have taken a vote on this resolution, it will accentuate that disrepute and that bad odor from one ocean to the other, and the Senator from Indiana ought to know it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I take just the other view.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I go quite to the other extreme, and say that if the Senate deliberately discharges an employee for having spoken his mind, it will tend to inflame the country still further against the Senate; it would have a far better effect if the Senate should show itself to be thoroughly just and fair in dealing with an employee who probably talked a little too much.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me inquire for a moment, what does the country know about this affair? The country knows that Mr. Barry wrote an article in which he said that only a few Senators and Representatives in Congress sold their votes for money. The country knows that he was haled before the Senate, and that he admitted that he wrote the article, but that he had no proof upon which to base the charge. Then, if we retain him, what will the country say? The country will say, "That old fellow Barry told them the truth up there, and those white-livered Senators did not have the nerve to fire him; they were afraid that he would tell something on them." That is what they will say. They may not talk that way in Indiana, but they talk that way in many parts of the Republic when they are suspicious, and the Senator from Indiana says that the country is now suspicious. How much more suspicious will the country be when we retain in the employ of the Senate a self-convicted and self-confessed libeler and slanderer of the Senate's integrity. If there be criminals in the Senate, let Mr. Barry name them. If there be criminals in the other branch of Congress, let Mr. Barry name them. Open up the inquisition.

The only way the Senate will ever maintain its dignity is by bringing those who lie about it, those who slander it, those who traduce it, before the bar of the Senate or of a committee room, making them disgorge the facts, if they have them, and prosecuting those who are guilty, if there be such guilty ones in this body or in the other body, in the courts. Then, and then only, will the Senate maintain its dignity and vindicate its honor and its integrity before the country. I am not afraid to let the witnesses come and point out the Senators or point out the Representatives in Congress and, if there be accusations, remit those accusations to the courts; but the time has come in this Republic, and especially in the Senate, when we have either got to chart a course and pursue it or be branded as cravens and cowards; and that is what the Senate will nearly approach in this case, if it evades or avoids the real issues in this case and says, as does the Senator from Iowa, "He only accused a few Senators of being crooks and bribe takers; he really ought to be discharged, but I am not in favor of discharging him in this way; I want to discharge him some other way." And the other way he did not point out. "Instead of kicking him out that door there, I want to kick him out this door."

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield in just a moment; I want to complete my thought so that the Senator may answer it. The position of the Senator from Iowa is that "the resolution says we are going to kick him out the east door; I am in favor of kicking him out, but he ought to be kicked out the west door, and therefore I will not vote to kick him out of either door." I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest to the Senator that he was not listening to my statement. I did suggest a method by which Mr. Barry could be disposed of, by proper reference to a committee with power to act, without any of this bravado of the famous Senator from Texas, who waves the flag and proclaims the honesty of the United States Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. O Mr. President, I always listen when the Senator from Iowa speaks; we all listen when the Senator from Iowa takes the floor. We do not always understand, but we listen. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, let me analyze now what the Senator from Iowa suggests. He would have the Senate avoid its responsibilities; he would delegate the authority to act in this case to some committee; he would have that committee act in secret. The accusation against the Senate is made in the public prints; the Associated Press and the other press services have heralded it throughout the United States; but the idea of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence from the corn section is that we take the Sergeant at Arms down in some little cubby-hole in a secret committee and whisper to him, "Now you are fired." [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that I made a statement. Undoubtedly the Senator was not listening or he paid no attention to what I said. I suggested that Senate committee proceedings are of record; they are published; the proceedings are taken down by stenographers and the findings of the committee become known to the country and to the world. I said that in my remarks.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me analyze this new edition of the legal code from Iowa. The Senator now says that he would commit it to a committee. The Senate did that on last Friday. The Senate sent this whole case to the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from Iowa is not a member of that committee, it is true, but we sent it to a committee composed of lawyers, and the committee reported back unanimously, I understand, that the Sergeant at Arms ought to be discharged. What kind of a committee does the Senator want to send this matter to—the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Documents? [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. I suggested that we send the matter to a proper committee with power to act. The Senate sent it to a committee with power to report in here at 4 o'clock on Tuesday to let the Senator from Texas exercise his lungs in making a speech.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right. Now, let us see whether the Senator's proposition will hold water.

He wants to send the matter to a committee with authority to act. The Senate sent it to a committee, the Judiciary Committee, and the Judiciary Committee unanimously acted. It said that Mr. Barry ought to be discharged. Now, all in the world the Senate has to do is to stand by what it did when it referred the matter to the committee and approve the committee's action. The Senate has done exactly what the Senator from Iowa says he now wants done; and when it gets back here the Senator from Iowa is going out of the other door, abandoning the matter!

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. DICKINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Sergeant at Arms is an elective officer of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. He is elected in open session by the votes of Senators.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senate had referred this case to a committee with power to act, they would have had to report back to the Senate what they had done, and we would have been called upon to approve or disapprove of what they had done, which is exactly what we are called on to do now.

Mr. CONNALLY. Absolutely; of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if they had fired the Sergeant at Arms in their capacity as a committee—which they probably could not have done, in view of the fact that he is an elective officer—we still would have had to pass on it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why, to be sure. The Senator from Kentucky states the fact; but the chances are——

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment. The chances are, however, that had we done that the Senator from Iowa would be on the floor saying, "The Senate must act on this matter. I think this man ought to be fired, but I do not propose to let any one little committee fire him. We must have it out in the open on the floor of the Senate." The tactics of the Senator from Iowa are not unlike those of many attorneys who practice at the bar and defend criminals.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is perfectly within the power of the Senate to refer this matter to the Rules Committee, or to some other committee, with power to act, with no requirement to report back here. Then the Senator from Texas could not make a speech on it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator vote to let the Judiciary Committee dispose of it?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will vote for that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then why does not the Senator vote to approve what the committee has done?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no!

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. DICKINSON. What the Senator from Texas is doing is this: He wants to get the matter here on the floor of the Senate, where he can parade it to the Senate. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All Senators will suspend. The present occupant of the Chair has heretofore cleared the galleries. If the occupants of the galleries can not observe the rules of the Senate the galleries will be cleared again.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I rather suspect that the reason why the Senator from Iowa wants this matter sent to a secret committee, and heard behind closed doors, is so that the Sergeant at Arms then will not know who voted against him and who voted for him, and he will not "get in bad" with the politicians and the organizations.

Mr. President, I have said more than I intended to say, and probably more than I should have said. What is the Senate presented with? Not a trial of Warren Hastings for his conduct in India. We have not Andrew Johnson before us to impeach him for high crimes and misdemeanors. We are simply confronted with a little simple issue of whether or not we want to keep in the employ of the Senate a man who, in the public prints and before the bar of the Senate, has admitted that he has traduced and libeled the Senate, and that he is not in possession of one particle of evidence to sustain the malicious and unfounded charges which he has made.

If he has committed any offense that is cognizable in the courts, that matter is for the courts and not for the Senate. I do not want to pursue this case and try to bring him here and try him for a crime; but I, as one Senator, am unwilling that there shall remain in the employ of the Senate—and he can only remain in the employ of the Senate by the approval of the Senate; by the agreement of the Senate that he shall remain—I am not willing to continue in the employ of the Senate for one hour or for one-half hour a man who admittedly has taken advantage of those who trusted him, who has drawn emoluments as a matter of grant and gift from the Senate, who has enjoyed the confidences and associations here with Senators, and then, for the sake of money—for the sake of money!—libels the Senate. I say "for the sake of money," because everybody knows that he could not have sold his article if he had not had some sensational statement of that kind in it.

He bartered for gold a libel on the Senate of the United States; and I, for one, believe that those who are abusing and libeling the Senate, when they accuse Members of either body of being bribe takers or crooks, ought to be brought before this bar, or ought to be sent before the grand jury. Let them be pilloried; let them be caused to disgorge their information; and if there be any crooks in this body, if there be any bribe takers here or in the other body, the country demands, the honor of the Senate demands, and our own sense of self-respect and honesty and integrity demands, that they be forced to name them, and that those who may be guilty be sent to the courts for trial.

The time has come in this country for the Senate of the United States to assert its own dignity and its own integrity. The Senator from Indiana says that nobody else will or can.

Mr. GLENN obtained the floor.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I offer as a substitute for the pending resolution and move its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] offers the following substitute:

Whereas David S. Barry, when Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, caused to be published in the New Outlook, a magazine of general circulation, an article which reflects upon the integrity of Members of both Houses of the Congress;

Whereas upon a hearing the said Barry admits he does not have in his possession any facts substantiating such statements made in said article;

Whereas the said article impugns the honor of the Members of Congress;

Resolved, That such conduct upon the part of an employee of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, condemned; and the fact that Mr. Barry has in the Senate and before the committee repeatedly disavowed any intention of reflecting upon the honor of the Congress makes any further punishment unnecessary.

Further resolved, That said David S. Barry be, and he is hereby, reinstated as Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas and nays are demanded. Is the demand sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before we vote on this substitute I want to say just a few words, some of them in rebuttal, in reply to some of the arguments that have been made during the course of this discussion.

First, what is before us?

The Sergeant at Arms admittedly charged some Members of the Senate with selling their votes for money. It is admitted that he has no evidence of any such Member of the Senate or of the House. He claims that he wrote the article in defense of the Senate; but, as I said before, if Senators will read the article from beginning to end, they will find that it is a condemnation. As far as some of the other criticisms are concerned, like the one where we were called demagogues, I am passing it over. I am only suggesting it to controvert the claim that the Sergeant at Arms was writing this article in defense of the Senate. There is not one word of defense, not one word except of censure, from beginning to end.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] argues that Mr. Barry was defending the Senate. The Senator from Indiana over here [Mr. ROBINSON], a member of the Judiciary Committee—who, by the way, this morning voted for the resolution that I offered in the committee—says, "Why, there is nothing to this excepting that Mr. Barry is repeating the general story that is going on all over the country." He does not even claim that it is a defense of the Senate, as the Senator from Kentucky and the author of the article claim. He says we should not pay any attention to it because Mr. Barry is saying what a great many other people are saying.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from Nebraska mean to say that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] voted in the committee with the Senator from Nebraska for this resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. The vote in the committee for the report of this resolution was unanimous.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]?

Mr. NORRIS. That is who I mean.

Mr. CONNALLY. The same Senator who made a speech a while ago?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the same Senator. That Senator, there in the committee, as he said on the floor, voted for a substitute which he offered. That motion was defeated; and then the roll call was had in the Judiciary Committee, and every member present voted "yea" in favor of the report which I have made, which is the pending resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. When we voted on the resolution, it was to report it out and get it before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is as far as I went, and as far as I ever go. That is as far as I ever go on a report out of a committee.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I always reserve the right to vote on any bill that comes before this body, or any measure that comes before it, as my conscience dictates.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with the Senator. He evidently has experienced a change of heart since this morning.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; I have experienced no change of heart in the slightest degree.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator voted in the Judiciary Committee in favor of a motion made directing the chairman to report to the Senate the resolution which I have reported.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, that is exactly correct, and that is frequently done, to get it on the floor, Senators reserving the right always to vote the way they choose on the resolution when it comes on the floor for discussion. I did that with the Philippine bill. There were many amendments to that bill which I could not agree to, though I voted to report it out of committee, but when the measure came down here I voted my judgment on the amendments. That is the same thing that I think every Senator does in committee; he reserves the right to vote as he chooses.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think that is the same thing, although I am not complaining. The Senator has a right to do it. I take it for granted, from the remarks the Senator has made, that something has come over the spirit of his dreams between this forenoon and this afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No, Mr. President. If the Senator will remember what I said here last Friday, and in the committee room to-day, he will find that my conduct has been completely consistent in everything I have done and in everything I have said.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember what the Senator said; and it seems to me he is about in the same situation as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], who thinks this man has committed an offense for which he ought to be removed, but he is going to vote against his removal because, as he says, we have not gone at the matter in the right way. Yet from the time we began until this report came here in the Senate, never once did the Senator from Iowa raise his great, eloquent voice in opposition to the procedure which the Senate was taking.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I voted against the Senator's motion to dismiss this man summarily at that time. I voted for the substitute.

Mr. NORRIS. All right. I have not disputed that; but the Senator now is saying, "This man ought to be removed, but I am not going to vote to remove him." Why, of course; the Senator is stubborn. He can go on and do that just as he pleases; but he says, "I am not going to vote to remove him, although I believe he ought to be removed, because I do not like the procedure." What I said—and the RECORD will bear me out—is that from the beginning up to the present discussion this afternoon the Senator from Iowa never raised his voice in objecting to the procedure that has been taken.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest to the Senator that I have not been in the Senate very long, and I did not know that it was necessary for every Member of the Senate to make a 2-hour speech before an incidental matter of this kind could be disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not either, nor does anyone else; but the Senator has been in Congress long enough, and he has been in the Senate long enough, to know that I tell the truth when I say that during all the course of these proceedings he never objected. When the matter was referred to the committee, the Senator voted for it. The Senator voted to refer it to the committee. Now he says it never ought to have gone there——

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. That it ought to have gone to a committee with full instructions to go into it. Why did not the Senator object then? Why did he not then offer an amendment giving the committee full authority to go into it?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would have been glad to do that if I had been handling the matter, and I think that would have been the judicious course.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was not handling it, and probably is not handling it now, not even his own vote.

Mr. DICKINSON. I shall offer a substitute, if this one is not carried, which will show that I have a mind of my own, and I do not need to consult with a lot of Senators before I cast my vote.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator has a substitute which will show that he has a mind of his own, let him offer it; I would like to see it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that I have a mind of my own, and I do not need to confer with the Senator from Nebraska before I exercise it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will suspend. May the Chair intimate that Rule XIX seems to be perilously near infraction?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no, Mr. President; we have gotten to the condition in the Senate now when the man who calls us crooks, when the man who says we sell our votes for money, is to be lauded up to the skies as a great hero. We are going to give him a bouquet, we are going to reinstate him, we are going to apologize for ever saying or even thinking that a man who says that we are criminals and sell our official votes for cash should be removed from office. We are going to apologize for ever thinking of such a thing as discharging that employee of the Senate.

The discharge of this man is the only action we are to take. That is all we are called upon to do. That is all we are considering. We have a hired man who has said that we were crooks, who has said that there were some of us who sold our votes for cash, and then when he is called upon to name those who did that, though he said they were well known, he states he does not know anything about it, that he has no such evidence.

Mr. President, the question is, Shall we keep him in our employ? There is no criminal case here. There is a resolution pending in the Committee on the Judiciary to refer the entire matter to the district attorney under the statute to see whether there should be a prosecution. And that reminds me of what the Senator from Illinois so ably and so eloquently stated about my not calling Governor Smith to the witness stand or not calling some owner of the Outlook to the witness stand.

Let me say to the Senator that before the Committee on the Judiciary there is now pending a resolution, offered by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], which would go into that very thing. I want to say, for the benefit of the Senator from Illinois, that this man Barry, while under oath, was asked whether he ever had a talk with Mr. Smith, whether he ever had a letter from him, whether he ever had any communication or conference with him, and he said, "None." The man from the New Outlook he had seen, the man who had written to him, the man with whom he had conferred about this article was the owner of the New Outlook, Mr. Tichenor; I think that is his name.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. That matter the Senate may go into; I have not any objection. But we can not go into it in connection with this matter. We have before us now just the question of what we shall do with an employee of the Senate who has disgraced the Senate in the eyes of the country and in the eyes of the world by calling us crooks and demagogues.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. Does not the Senator know, as an able lawyer and a judge, as he is, that the publisher of the magazine is equally guilty with the writer of the article in the eyes of the law?

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; we will take that——

Mr. GLENN. Is not that the law?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GLENN. Does the Senator from Nebraska not further know, not as a lawyer but as a citizen and a man acquainted with public affairs, that nothing will ever be done with Gov. Alfred Smith in this matter?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe there is anything that can be done with Alfred Smith in this matter, if the Senator wants my answer.

Mr. GLENN. Does not the Senator know that there never will be any bona fide effort to do anything with him?

Mr. NORRIS. I will tell the Senator this: I will vote for a resolution for the appointment of a committee of three, of which the Senator from Illinois shall be chairman, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] shall be a member, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] shall be the other member, giving them authority to investigate, to subpœna witnesses, to call Mr. Smith or anybody else they want to call.

Mr. GLENN. Why not do that all at once, instead of singling out this weak, poor man?

Mr. NORRIS. It is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. GLENN. There is nothing different about it. They were all concerned in the same publication.

Mr. NORRIS. No; they were not all concerned.

Mr. GLENN. You singled out a weak man, who could not defend himself.

Mr. NORRIS. As far as the testimony is concerned, the record shows that nobody ever communicated with Mr. Smith.

Mr. GLENN. Find out about it. It was his duty to know something about it.

Mr. NORRIS. We asked Mr. Barry about it, your saint, the man who said we were crooks, this old, decrepit man we are about to overthrow and tear to pieces and shed his blood all over the Senate floor.

Mr. GLENN. Let us be frank about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators——

Mr. GLENN. It was not because he said somebody was a crook, but because he said there were some demagogues in the Senate. That is the fact about it.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it was because he said we were crooks. After I listened to the Senator from Illinois this afternoon I began to wonder whether Mr. Barry had not told the truth when he spoke about demagogues in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will suspend.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Illinois is a lawyer. He knows that these things are not necessarily connected at all. Let us dispose of this matter.

Mr. GLENN. Let us dispose of this whole thing at once.

Mr. NORRIS. We can not dispose of them at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will take their seats. All Senators will suspend. As Vice President Marshall once said, it is about time for the Chair to take a hand. The rules of the Senate provide that exchanges of the sort that have been going on for the last few minutes may not proceed. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not yield to anyone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator retains the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is one of the best lawyers in the country. He will not deny that himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLENN. Second only to the esteem in which the Senator from Nebraska holds himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. I accept the amendment. If the owner or publisher or editor of the New Outlook is to blame, and the Senator wants to go after any one of them, I will do all I can to give him the authority to do it, and I mean what I say.

Mr. GLENN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. No; let me finish first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. Not now. I want to say to the Senator that I mean it when I say that I am in favor of appointing a committee, of which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] shall himself be chairman, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] shall be another member, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] shall be the third, and give them all the authority they may ask for to go into the matter just as far as they desire.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. It does seem to me that that indicates that the Senator from Nebraska has lost his judicial poise.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps I have, in suggesting the Senator from Illinois as chairman of the committee; I do not know.

Mr. GLENN. The Senator said he would select on that committee three men, all of whom had taken a decided position upon this matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. I want to give the Senator all the rope he wants. I want him to go the full length he desires to go, and I will not put anything in his road.

We have before us the case of Mr. Barry. Is he guilty of making a false charge against Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, or not? If he is guilty, do we want to keep him longer in our employ? There is no criminal charge involved in the resolution. There is nothing provided for but the simple discharge of an employee of the Senate who has admitted that he called us crooks and demagogues without any reason for it whatever.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. If we have any self-respect for ourselves and our colleagues and for the reputation of this body, I do not see how we can say we should give him a chromo instead of punishing him for telling the falsehoods he admits he told without cause. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator believe that if Alfred E. Smith, the gentleman about whom the Senator from Illinois has been speaking, had been the Sergeant at Arms who wrote this article, we would have the advantage of the eloquent defense made by the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no, indeed.

Mr. BLACK. And the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. No; instead of trying to defend him and shield him from just punishment we would have had them outraged at the terrible indignity that had been flung at the United States Senate.

Mr. President, the evidence is uncontradicted; it can not be contradicted, because it is the testimony of Mr. Barry, the saint, the man who never did a wrong, who can slap us in the face, call us thieves, call us demagogues, call us men who are bribed in our official capacity, and still we give him a flower, a bouquet, and say, "Go on your way; you are all right; you are only saying"—as the Senator from Indiana put it—"what other people have said who are not employees of the Senate and over whom we do not have jurisdiction."

This man testified, and I presume he told the truth, that the only person connected with the New Outlook with whom he had any communication or any conference was Mr. Tichenor, whom he said he understood to be the owner of the magazine. There is a resolution pending in the Judiciary Committee now under which whoever else is liable, if anybody, could be reached, and that resolution would probably have been acted on to-day if we had time.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. Does the Senator believe that the Hon. Alfred Smith, in his capacity as editor in chief of that great magazine, does not even look at the articles which are published in it?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know anything about that. I do not know, and I do not care. It does not make any difference to me. I suppose if the owner of the magazine comes to Washington and makes a deal with an officer of the Senate for $250 for an article that is sensational, he can go back and publish it in the magazine without consulting the editor. I have an idea that as owner of the publication he can do what he pleases about it. If anything different from that happened, I do not know anything about it. I am not objecting to any further investigation anybody wants to have made.

Now we are confronted with a substitute which would whitewash the whole matter, which would whitewash this thing, one of the most disgraceful things, it seems to me, that have been heard of since I have been a member of this body. Senators talk about this man being so timid, so embarrassed, when for 14 years he has had the privilege of this floor. He has had all the privileges which go with his office, one of the highest offices in the Senate. Think of such a thing as his being embarrassed in the presence of the Senate. He has been in the presence of the Senate for 14 years.

That is not all, however. The matter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. Barry was not dragged before the committee, as some of the Senators would have us believe. They would try to give the impression that we went out and took him by the back of the neck and the seat of the pants and took him in there. Nothing of that kind happened. In a letter, which Senators may read, which I think will be admitted to be courteous, he was notified that the committee would meet in the room of the Committee on the Judiciary at 10.30 o'clock, and he was asked by the chairman in the letter to go to the office of the Sergeant at Arms so that he could be called in case the committee wanted to hear him further. Then the letter said, "If you want to be called, if you want to testify further, let me know, and I will lay your request before the committee, and it will undoubtedly be granted."

He did make that request of the chairman, it was laid before the committee, and immediately the committee unanimously, without any objection, said, "Why, of course, have him come." We telephoned to the office of the Sergeant at Arms, but could not find him; he was not there. We were told at the Sergeant at Arms' office that he was in the Committee on Rules, presided over by the honorable Senator who now sits in the presiding officer's chair, the President pro tempore of this body. We telephoned there and he came. He explained that he had received my request to go to the office of the Sergeant at Arms, but did not feel like going there because he had been suspended from the office. I have no fault with him on that point.

He went to the Committee on Rules because, after the Senate took the action that we took the other day, the chairman of the Committee on Rules gave him a key to the room of the Committee on Rules, and said, "Make that your headquarters," and so he went to the Committee on Rules, his headquarters. From there he came to the Judiciary Committee.

There was no forcing about it. He made the request himself. Nobody urged him to come. He asked to come. If we had refused to let him come, then the Senators who are kicking us now would have been complaining because this great committee arbitrarily refused to let this poor, weak man come before us when he asked to do so. We granted his request; and to show that he had deliberated on the matter, he read his statement in writing, under oath, the statement the Senator from Connecticut has read here. There was no coercion. He was perfectly free. He prepared it I do not know when, but he was given the opportunity to read his statement without interruption. Then he was questioned about it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that the Sergeant at Arms, when he was sought, was in the Rules Committee room?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not that the committee to which the Senator from Iowa wanted this affair referred?

Mr. NORRIS. The President pro tempore wanted it referred to the Rules Committee the other day, and made the suggestion a couple of times from the chair. Some mention was made to-day in the debate that when that was suggested we protested vigorously against it.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] suggested that the proper course to pursue would be to refer it to a committee and let them act on it, and he mentioned among others the Committee on Rules, I wondered if he anticipated sending it to that committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Another thing I want to say is that at the meeting yesterday morning when Mr. Barry was there, he was accompanied by his lawyer. He was accompanied by his lawyer this morning. At one time in the course of the examination, before he answered he asked permission to consult his lawyer, and this cruel hard-hearted committee did not object. We let him consult with his lawyer, and we suspended operations until he had a whispered conversation with him. When he got through we went on. That is the way he was abused by this hard-hearted committee. That is the way this man's blood was drawn and scattered over the committee room by that kind of a committee. He had his own way. He came there because he wanted to come. He came with his lawyer. He had a prepared statement which he was permitted to read and then, of course, was questioned and never once, except when he referred to his attorney, did he object to a question. Then he asked permission to consult his attorney; he did consult with him, and answered after he had held his consultation.

Under these circumstances it seems to me, as I look at it, if the Senate has any regard for its honor or the honor of its Members, it can not do anything but vote down the proposed substitute and pass through the Senate the resolution reported by the Judiciary Committee.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair may be permitted to state the question first, the Senator from Nebraska offers the following resolution:

Resolved, That David S. Barry be, and is hereby, removed from the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

The Senator from Illinois offers the following resolution as a substitute:

Whereas David S. Barry, when Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, caused to be published in the New Outlook, a magazine of general circulation, an article which reflected upon the integrity of the Members of both Houses of Congress;

Whereas upon a hearing the said Barry admits he does not have in his possession any facts substantiating such statements made in said article;

Whereas the said article tends to impugn the honor of the Members of the Congress:

Resolved, That such conduct upon the part of an employee of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, condemned; and the fact that Mr. Barry has in the Senate and before the committee repeatedly disavowed any intention of reflecting upon the honor of the Congress makes any further punishment unnecessary: Be it further

Resolved, That said David S. Barry be, and he is hereby, reinstated as Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Illinois. Upon this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], I vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. CUTTING'S name was called). I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] is unavoidably absent temporarily from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. MOSES, when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], and vote "yea."

Mr. ODDIE (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW]. If that Senator were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. I am unable to obtain a transfer. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, has the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator. Being unable to obtain a transfer I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. GLENN (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], with whom I have a general pair, is absent and has not voted. Therefore, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] on official business of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 56—as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Dickinson | Hale | Moses |
| Barbour | Fess | Hastings | Townsend |
| Couzens | Goldsborough | Hebert | Walcott |
| Dale | Grammer | Metcalf | |

NAYS—56

| | | | |

| Broussard | Hatfield | Norbeck | Smoot |
| Bulow | Howell | Oddie | Stephens |
| Carey | King | Robinson, Ind. | Swanson |
| Cutting | Lewis | Russell | Thomas, Okla. |
| Davis | | | |

So Mr. GLENN'S substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the resolution proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I offer the following motion in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Iowa moves—

That the pending resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules, with power to reconsider the complaint against Sergeant at Arms David S. Barry, to reinstate, reprimand, or dismiss said official of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Iowa if he will explain the purpose of his motion?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, my purpose is that if the Senate gets into a difficulty of this kind again there should be some precedent established. I do not favor this type of procedure. I thoroughly believe some committee ought to be given jurisdiction of complaints of this kind. It is my understanding that the Rules Committee have charge of the personnel of the Senate. They should have jurisdiction of all matters of this kind, in my judgment. That being the case, I have made this suggestion.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question? I desire to ask if, by proposing the amendment, the Senator intends to imply any reflection upon the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. DICKINSON. Not at all. The Judiciary Committee was instructed to report back to the Senate. They did so in accordance with their judgment, and there is no reflection whatsoever upon them.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the motion be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Iowa moves—

That the pending resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules with power to reconsider the complaint against Sergeant at Arms David S. Barry and reinstate, reprimand, or dismiss said official of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been already ordered upon this question, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair and its transfer, I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Repeating the statement of my pair, as previously announced, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when the name of Mr. MOSES was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. ODDIE (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement I made a few moments ago regarding my pair, I will state that if the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], with whom I am paired, were present he would vote "nay," and if I were permitted to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Again announcing my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). Am I correct in understanding that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has not voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, on account of my general pair with that Senator, I must withdraw my vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Repeating the same announcement made on the last roll call concerning the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], I wish to announce that if present he would vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] is absent on official business of the Senate.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN].

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 58, as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Dale | Goldsborough | Keyes | Walcott |
| Dickinson | Grammer | Moses | White |
| Fess | Hebert | | |

NAYS—58

| Bulow | Howell | Norbeck | Stephens |
| Carey | Kendrick | Oddie | Swanson |
| Cutting | King | Robinson, Ind. | Thomas, Okla. |
| Davis | Lewis | Russell | Tydings |

So Mr. DICKINSON's motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution reported by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Several Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning my pair and its transfer as on the preceding vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. CUTTING's name was called). The junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] is unavoidably temporarily absent from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when the name of Mr. MOSES was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as previously, I vote "nay."

Mr. ODDIE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I am unable to obtain a transfer of my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. Therefore, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] on official business of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—53

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Coolidge | Lewis | Sheppard |
| Austin | Costigan | McGill | Smith |

| Davis | Logan | Shipstead | |
| Fess | Long | Shortridge | |

So the resolution submitted by Mr. NORRIS was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That David S. Barry be, and he is hereby, removed from the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 539)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I inclose herewith a report which the Secretary of State has addressed to me in regard to claims of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States for reimbursement of losses of personal property suffered by them as a result of a cyclone at Point a Pitre, Guadeloupe, French West Indies, on September 12, 1928, and hurricanes at Nassau, Bahama Islands, on September 16, 1928, and on September 25–26, 1929; at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, on September 3, 1930, and at Belize, British Honduras, on September 10, 1931; at Moscow, Russia, in 1918, as a result of the seizure of Government power by the present régime; at Buenaventura, Colombia, on January 26, 1931, as the result of a fire which destroyed the American Consulate, and at Warsaw, Poland, in December, 1920, as a result of theft and breakage of household effects in transit at the time of the advance of the soviet revolutionary army into Poland.

I recommend that an appropriation in the amount suggested by the Secretary of State be authorized in order to relieve these officers and employees of the Government of the burden these losses have occasioned.

HERBERT HOOVER.

(Inclosures: Report of the Secretary of State, with inclosures.)

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 7, 1933.

UNITED STATES GEORGIA BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. FESS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX BILL—AMENDMENT RELATIVE TO THE TARIFF AND DEPRECIATED FOREIGN CURRENCIES

Mr. HATFIELD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14416) to make the Federal gasoline tax effective until June 30, 1934, which was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HATFIELD to the bill (H. R. 14416) to make the Federal gasoline tax effective until June 30, 1934, viz: On page 1, line 16, insert the following:

"That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles when imported directly or indirectly into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the island of Guam) directly or indirectly from any foreign country, if the depreciation in the currency of such country, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, is 5 per cent or more below the standard value of such currency as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931, or similarly depreciated when compared with currency of the United States, these following taxes, which shall be in addition to the duties collected under existing law as amended by section 3 of this act:

"(1) If the amount of the invoice value of the article is ascertained in units of currency of such foreign country, a tax equal to the difference between the invoice value of the article expressed in units of currency of such foreign country and converted to units of currency of the United States at the standard value of the currency of such foreign country as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931; and (b) such amount converted to the currency of the United States at the buying rate of the unit of currency of such foreign country as ascertained under section 522 (c) of the tariff act of 1930.

"(b) If the amount of the invoice value of the article is ascertained in units of currency of any country (including the United States) other than the country of exportation, a tax equal to the difference between (a) such amount expressed in units of currency of the country of exportation at the current rate of exchange for noon of the date of exportation and converted as provided in paragraph (1) to the currency of the United States at the standard value of such unit of currency of the country of exportation as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931, and such amount expressed in units of currency of the country of exportation, and converted as provided in paragraph (1) into the currency of the United States at the buying rate of the unit of currency of the country of exportation as ascertained under section 522 (c) of the tariff act of 1930. In cases, if any, where the Secretary of the Treasury is unable to determine the said buying rate under any of the provisions of said section 522 (c) of the tariff act of 1930, he shall determine such buying rate by the method which he approves as most fair and equitable in the premises and make and proclaim his determination accordingly and such determination and decision shall be final.

"SEC. 2. This act shall not apply to imports of tea, coffee, tin, rubber, fruits not produced in the United States, or to unmanufactured spices not produced in the United States.

"SEC. 3. For the purpose of the assessment and collection of duties under the existing law, the value (whether such value is ascertained in units of currency of the United States or of any other country) of any article provided for in section 1 shall be the value of such article converted to the currency of the United States at the standard value of the unit of currency of the country of exportation as provided for in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 1, as the case may be.

"SEC. 4. Terms used in this act shall have the meaning assigned to such terms in the tariff act of 1930.

"SEC. 5. This act shall be administered as part of the customs laws.

"SEC. 6. This act shall take effect on the day following the date of its enactment and continue in force until June 30, 1934."

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of the adoption by the Senate of the Bratton amendment together with the Costigan amendment to it, I think Senators will realize that in order to clear the parliamentary situation it will be necessary to adopt the motion to reconsider which I made some days ago. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the motion whereby we adopted the Bratton amendment together with the Costigan amendment on the Treasury and Post Office bill may be agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand, that amendment was adopted applying only to the Post Office and Treasury bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. And since that time, in the economy bill, those amendments have been applied to all bills, including the Post Office and Treasury bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the reason why I asked unanimous consent to do it, because I realized that those in favor of it had gained their position on all bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see no objection to the Senator's request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair.) Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] is not on the floor at this moment, but I know it will be agreeable to him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the last amendment applies to all bills, manifestly there is no occasion for retaining the first amendment, which applied only to the bill under consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. Particularly in view of the fact that the general amendment adopted is even more stringent than the one which applied to the Treasury and Post Office bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator's request is for unanimous consent for reconsideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. That we reconsider the vote whereby we adopted the Bratton amendment on the Treasury and Post Office bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNES. I am satisfied that the Senator from New Mexico would have no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question now is on the Bratton amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the request of the Senator from Connecticut relates to the so-called Bratton amendment, to which I offered an amendment which was adopted by the Senate several days ago and does not relate to the action taken by the Senate today?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be the Bratton amendment as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And, to be consistent, the Bratton amendment attached to the present bill—the amendment just reconsidered—should be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. BINGHAM. That clears the parliamentary situation with regard to the Bratton and Costigan amendments on the Treasury and Post Office bill.

Now, Mr. President, if Senators will turn to page 70 of the pending legislation, section 4 places a 10 per cent reduction on all salaries which do not come under the furlough plan. In view of the fact that we have rejected the committee's amendment adding the 1⅔ per cent pay cut to those now made and a pay cut under the furlough plan, the committee recommends that this amendment be rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would necessarily follow, because the 1⅔ per cent has already been rejected.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator wishes to have the amendment rejected?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the next matter that concerns us is on page 74, section 7, which applies the 10 per cent reduction suggested by the committee to all pensions and compensations to veterans and others receiving a pension of more than $1,000. In order to be consistent with the action of the Senate, this amendment must be amended by the committee on page 74, line 17, by inserting, in lieu of "10 per cent," "8⅓ per cent."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut if that particular amendment applies practically exclusively to totally disabled veterans?

Mr. BINGHAM. I regret to say that that observation is correct, and if I believed it would cause any real hardship I should be opposed to it; but, Mr. President, as has been pointed out on the floor repeatedly, the cost of living, the average cost of commodities, of rent, of food, of clothing, has diminished by about 22 per cent during the past two or three years. Therefore the amount allowed to veterans, to those totally disabled, to those who receive in pensions or compensation more than $1,000 a year, will buy more comforts to-day, even with the 8⅓ per cent reduction, than they got three years ago, when that legislation went into effect.

If I believed that any veteran disabled in the war would receive any less comforts of any kind under this amendment than he received three years ago, when the provision was adopted, I should be the first to oppose the amendment, because I have the greatest sympathy with the veterans who are totally disabled and whose benefits would cause them to give a certain amount of their allowances to the Federal Government under this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Connecticut moves to strike out "10" in line 17, on page 74, and insert "8⅓."

Mr. BINGHAM. The committee recommends that, and desires to perfect the amendment accordingly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wanted to get that perfected. I am sure the Senator from Indiana will not object to perfecting the amendment. I know that the Senator is opposed to the entire amendment, but I am sure he will not object to our perfecting it in that regard.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely desired to add, Mr. President, that this amendment was estimated, on the 10 per cent basis, to effect a saving of $8,570,000. By reducing it to 8⅓ per cent it is obvious that it will now yield only about $7,000,000. That may not be exact, but it is in the neighborhood of $7,000,000.

I understand that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] desires to offer a perfecting amendment to which the committee has no objection.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I should like to call up an amendment which is on the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 75, line 13, it is proposed to insert, immediately before the period, a comma and the following:

but shall not include payments out of any retirement, disability, or relief fund made up wholly or in part of contributions of employees.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, if it is the disposition of the Senator from Connecticut to accept the amendment, I have nothing to say on it.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is purely explanatory. The committee never intended to include the payments referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment to the amendment eliminating "10 per cent" and inserting "8⅓ per cent."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill by striking out all of section 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that a negative vote on that section would give the Senator the same result as a motion to strike out, saving one vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I suppose it would; and, if that is the parliamentary ruling, I shall withhold any motion.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I was hoping the Economy Committee could be induced to withdraw the amendment entirely—all of section 7—for the reason that, as has been stated, it applies only to totally disabled veterans.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me? I was not quite correct in making that statement. There are a number of persons who receive pensions who are not totally disabled. The amendment does apply, for instance, to the widows of former Presidents, who now receive $5,000 pensions. It applies to anyone having a pension or compensation from the Government; but, of course, the great mass are those veterans whose disability is so great that they receive more than $83 per month. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has the floor. I rose simply to offer the amendment to strike out the section. Since that is not necessary, I yield the floor to the Senator from New York, with the understanding that I can resume the floor and speak on the amendment a little later.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: I do not wish to take the Senator from Indiana from the floor. I wanted to make an inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. If the motion made by the Senator from Indiana were to prevail, would that also carry with it the amendment made last night by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]? He offered an amendment, and I entered a motion to reconsider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a different section. It would not affect it.

Mr. COPELAND. Is not the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] an amendment to section 7?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. COPELAND. To what section does it apply, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a new section.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, may I say to my friend from Indiana, I yield the floor to him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment really requires no discussion. I can not feel that the Senate would take 8⅓ per cent from these totally disabled veterans who receive $1,000 or more.

I have some figures that I have gotten on the question from the Veterans' Administration that I should like to read to the Senate for the benefit of the RECORD.

On page 74, section 7 provides "rate of pension of each person receiving pension or compensation at a rate in excess of $1,000 per annum is reduced 10 per cent—

That is what it says here. It should be 8⅓ per cent now.

with respect to pensions or compensations accruing for all or any part of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934," and further provides that "such reduction shall not operate to reduce any rate of pension or compensation to less than $1,000 per annum."

This last proviso, providing cuts in pensions and compensation, will have the following effect, I am advised by the Veterans' Administration.

As to those drawing disability compensation—that is, compensation for service-connected disabilities—if the law is enacted, it would apply to 49,941 disabled veterans of the World War and would effect a saving, at their expense, of $5,753,000.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I am informed that it would affect 73,629.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think perhaps the Senator is correct in the total. I was about to get to that and will add some other figures to those already cited.

Of those drawing pensions, 23,460 would be affected and would lose $2,815,000. It would also affect 228 yellow-fever patients who were placed on the rolls after they had submitted to tests and inoculations made in the study of this disease and would cut these beneficiaries $2,800.

The amounts quoted would average for those drawing disability compensation a little more than $115 per year each, for the group drawing pensions a fraction more than $120 per year, and for the yellow-fever patients a fraction more than $122 per year.

Of those affected on the disability-compensation rolls, practically all would of necessity be rated totally and permanently disabled or temporary total rating with at least one dependent. For example, a man rated temporary total would receive $80 per month and not be reduced, but a man so rated, with a wife, would receive $1,080 per year and under the act lose $80 per year. If he had as dependents a wife and one child, he would receive $95 a month, or $1,140 per year, and would lose $114 per year. Those rated totally and permanently disabled receive $1,200 per year and would suffer a reduction of $120 per year.

The enactment of this legislation would affect only those pensioners who have received injuries in line of duty, and in many cases in exceptionally hazardous service, and who now require the regular aid and attendance of another person.

Mr. President, that means, of course, that these totally disabled veterans who would be affected by this proposed legislation are now in a situation where they require the permanent attention of a private nurse, and it seems to me unthinkable that the Senate would attempt to reduce the meager allowance now accorded these totally disabled veterans. It seems to me that would be actually cruel, and because I feel so certain the Senate would not agree to the amendment, I think I shall have nothing further to say on it at this time.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I agree fully with what the Senator from Indiana has just stated in regard to this matter. I feel that our country is too great, that our people are too broad-minded and liberal, to agree to sanction a cut of this kind. It is hard enough for able-bodied, healthy people to have to undergo privations and hardships such as large numbers are compelled to do to-day, but this goes farther than that, and affects disabled men, the men who served our country during the World War. I think we would make a great mistake in not wiping out this whole section.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, it is unthinkable that the Congress of the United States would vote to reduce the stipend which is being contributed to those who served our flag and our country in time of need. It is no less true that the same principle would apply to those who sacrificed themselves so that the whole world might know how to prevent and stamp out the ravages of yellow fever.

It is unthinkable that the Congress of the United States would reduce a pension which has been voted to a hopeless cripple—such as this section would—men who have lost both limbs, or who are deaf, not because of any fault of their own but due to the fact that they sacrificed themselves for what we are, what we represent, and what we enjoy in the way of comfort and happiness at the present time.

Mr. President, I trust that the Senate of the United States will vote unanimously against the adoption of section 7 of House bill 13520.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to section 7.

The section was rejected.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there are two perfecting amendments, one on page 69, line 15, to strike out "102 and 202" and to insert in lieu thereof "102, 202, and 203."

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not understand that.

Mr. BINGHAM. There are just two perfecting amendments on page 69.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perfecting in what way?

Mr. BINGHAM. The first is necessary because the Senate has voted to continue section 203.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. Also on page 78, line 20, to strike out the figure "4" and to insert in lieu thereof the figure "6."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What does the Senator ask to have acted on first?

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask that the amendment I first presented, on page 69, line 15, be submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, line 15, the Senator from Connecticut moves to strike out "102 and 202" and to insert in lieu thereof "102, 202, and 203" so as to read—and, in the case of sections 102, 202, and 203, the figures "1932" shall be read as "1933."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that is unintelligible unless we have the statute before us. Will the Senator explain what the section does that he is inserting?

Mr. BINGHAM. Section 203 of the act which was continued by the committee, in line 8——

Mr. McKELLAR. What is section 203?

Mr. BINGHAM. The section provides:

No appropriation available to any executive department or independent establishment or to the municipal government of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, shall be used to pay the compensation of an incumbent appointed to any civil position under the United States Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia which is vacant on July 1, 1932, or to any such position which may become vacant after such date: Provided, That this inhibition shall not apply (a) to absolutely essential positions the filling of which may be authorized or approved in writing by the President of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. What does that do? I do not know to whom it refers.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am sorry the Senator does not remember that we discussed that in the committee. The House left out section 203, and we decided to put it in, that the President might fill positions, if he decided that it was the proper thing to do. The Senator from Tennessee himself was one of those who felt that the President should have the final say about the filling of positions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Instead of the Budget Director?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the section.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator recalls it to my mind, and I see no objection to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as the Senator read the section, it seemed to me it contained a sweeping general provision, and granted an exception to the President of the United States so far as exercising discretionary authority, to set aside the general prohibition against the filling of positions. Will the Senator explain just what positions there are in the District of Columbia which can not be filled under this section, but as to which he would grant the President power to make exceptions if he does so in writing?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I explained on the floor before, when I took the matter up originally, that the House bill did not continue for the fiscal year 1934 section 203, which prohibited the filling of vacancies. The committee recommended continuing section 203 in force during the past fiscal year. That is all this would do. It was all explained and voted on before, and I am really trying to perfect what we did yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 78, line 24, the Senator from Connecticut moves to strike out "4," and insert in lieu thereof "6," so that it will read:

And if in such action judgment shall be rendered against the United States, or the amount recovered for debt and costs shall be less than the amount so withheld as before provided, the balance shall then be paid over to such plaintiff by such Comptroller General of the United States with 6 per cent interest thereon for the time it has been withheld from the plaintiff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the only committee amendment remaining is title 4, on page 83, relating to the reorganization of the executive departments. Before we take that up, I think there should be a call for a quorum.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I entered a motion yesterday to reconsider the vote by which we adopted the Connally amendment, and I want to say just a word about that, and then take counsel of my colleagues.

It will be recalled that last night the Senator from Texas succeeded in amending the bill so that anybody receiving a pension from the Government, and receiving in civil life a salary of as much as $10,000, should not receive the benefit of his pension. Of course, the notable example, it was stated, was General Harbord.

Mr. President, I am taking a liberty in doing what I am about to do, but I hold in my hand a letter I received from General Harbord dated the 24th of January, which related to another part of the bill, but it is so conclusive a reply to the charge made about his being a tremendously high salaried man that I think it ought to go in the RECORD, and I am sure that General Harbord will forgive me for putting it in the RECORD. I ask that it be printed.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, January 24, 1933.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR COPELAND: I am appealing to you to right in the Senate what I consider a breach of faith and an injustice. An amendment to the War Department appropriation bill was adopted by the House stopping all retired pay to retired officers whose incomes from any source are more than $3,000 per year.

I entered the Army as a private soldier on January 10, 1889, and was promoted to a commission at a time when a part of the compensation offered to induce young Americans to accept commissions was the long-enacted law that on retirement an officer would draw three-fourths of the pay he was receiving at the time of his retirement. This was a pledge by our Government on which the officers of the United States Army have heretofore always believed they could, with confidence, rely.

After 33 years and 11 months of service, during which I rose from private to major general, I was retired upon my own application, and accepted a position in business life, with the approval of the then Secretary of War, Hon. John W. Weeks, and on the urging of his predecessor the Democratic War Secretary under whom I had served during the World War, Hon. Newton D. Baker.

The compensation I have received from the Radio Corporation of America at various times has been stated on the floor of Congress, but never correctly, and never without much exaggeration. Actually it would seem to be my own business and within my rights.

As a member of the American Legion I have been of the opinion that the adjusted-compensation certificates should not be paid before maturity, a fact of which the national officers of the Legion are cognizant, and which does not cost me their respect. Last summer I was asked to become a member of the National Economy League, and did so. I was asked to preside at their organization meeting until their temporary organization was effected, and did so, but am not and never have been an officer of the league nor active in it. I would not apologize for it if I were, nor consider I was without my rights as a retired officer of the Army in such activity.

If it becomes law, this measure will wrong scores of retired officers of all grades, who, by writing or other means, are supplementing their retired pay, or may possibly have inherited some income.

I shall appreciate anything you may do.

Sincerely yours, J. G. HARBORD.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, certainly it is not any of our business, if a man has rendered service, for instance, such as that rendered by General Harbord, what he receives in private salary. He was a private soldier. He enlisted in the Army and rose through the ranks to become a major general, is a man of great capacity, and has been employed by the Radio Corporation of America.

It is stated that General Harbord gets an enormous salary. I happen to know that it is not such an enormous salary, as such executive jobs go. I think the amendment should not have been adopted. I could speak of other men. I could speak of General Bullard or of General Summerall, who is now president of a college. Certainly those men earned their retirement pay, and they are entitled to their retirement pay regardless of what they may be able to earn by writing or by other activities in order to increase their incomes.

It is hardly fair, I assume, in view of the very small attendance and in the absence of the Senator from Texas himself to ask a reconsideration. I am saying what I am in the hope and expectation that when the bill goes to conference the inequity of the proposal and its unfairness will appeal to the conferees and will be dealt with in a just manner.

I notice that the Senator from Texas has just entered the Chamber, but perhaps in spite of that I shall simply permit these remarks to go in the RECORD and let the incident be closed, so far as this particular day is concerned. We have been here so long and it has been a day of such emotional excitement, as well as hard work, that I shall not undertake to have any more decisive action than I have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York withdraw his motion?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I withdraw it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I find we have not adopted all of section 4, on page 69. We have only adopted various figures that were changed a little. In order to complete the situation the whole of it should be adopted at this time. There is nothing in it that has not already been explained and debated from time to time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on adopting section 4, page 69, as amended.

The section as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. On page 87 we have not adopted the clause numbered section 22, beginning in line 16. That should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application thereof to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the section.

The section was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that general authority be granted the clerks to renumber the sections as necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, on page 87 I desire to offer an amendment which has the recommendation of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let it be reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 87, after line 15, insert the following:

SEC. 22. (a) The Court of Claims of the United States is authorized, under such rules as it may prescribe, to impose a fee in an amount not in excess of $10 to be fixed by the court for the filing of any petition in any case instituted after the enactment of this act, and for the hearing of any case before the court, a judge, or a commissioner thereof pending at the time of the enactment of this act.

(b) The court is authorized to charge and collect a fee of 10 cents a folio for preparing and certifying a transcript of the record for the purpose of appeal by the plaintiff and for furnishing certified copies of judgments or other documents in cases in said court: Provided, That not less than $5 shall be charged for each certified copy of findings of fact and opinion of the court to be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States.

(c) The court is also authorized to charge and collect for each certified copy of its findings of fact and opinion a fee of 25 cents for 5 pages or less, 35 cents for those over 5 and not more than 10 pages, 45 cents for those over 10 and not more than 20 pages, and 50 cents for those of more than 20 pages.

(d) The clerk of the Court of Claims shall account to the Attorney General for all such fees, and shall deposit such fees to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States in the same manner as is provided in the case of collections by clerks of district courts as provided by section 9 of the act entitled "An act to fix the salaries of clerks of the United States district courts and to provide for their office expenses, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1919, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 567).

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in explanation, the Court of Claims, we learn, is the only court having no such fee system. All the district courts of the United States are provided with fees for the services described in the amendment. The fees herein described are just about one-half the fees charged by the clerks of courts of the United States. It is estimated that it would mean about $25,000 to $30,000 of revenue annually, if the amendment is adopted.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 71, after line 20, insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the promotion of apprentices shall not be construed to be administrative promotions for the purposes of this section.

It is for the purpose of perfecting the amendment already adopted. It excepts apprentices working in the navy yards and other governmental establishments from the operation of the provision. I think the Senator from Connecticut will agree that it is only fair that the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 71, after line 20, after the word "section," insert the following:

Provided further, That the promotion of apprentices shall not be construed to be administrative promotions for the purposes of this section.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why is that offered?

Mr. BINGHAM. It was considered by the committee and I do not think it should be adopted.

Mr. ODDIE. I understand there are a number of young apprentices in the various navy yards and in similar positions who will be deprived of their just promotions by the amendment already adopted unless this amendment is agreed to. As I understand it, their pay is increased so much per year for the years in which they are acting as apprentices. I do not think it can be the intention of the Congress that they should be penalized in this way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment in the form of a new section at the end of the bill. I have submitted this amendment to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], who is in charge of the bill. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I have transformed it into a new section instead of submitting it as an amendment to section 403.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 87, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, following line 19, insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 410. The President is authorized to require the Civil Service Commission and the Secretary of Labor and any other agency or officer of the Government to cooperate in making a study and preparing a report as to the feasibility of establishing a system for adjusting and determining from time to time the compensation of civil-service employees on the basis of the prevailing retail index or price level, including rents.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have examined the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma, and I am sure the committee has no objection to it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like it to go to conference. Denmark has had this plan in operation for years, and I am advised by the legation that it worked successfully and satisfactorily. I desire to print in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Danish Legation relating to that system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Copenhagen, November 30, 1932.

The Hon. T. P. GORE,
Committee on Finance, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GORE: I acknowldge the receipt of your letter of of October 27, and have taken pleasure in having the following information compiled in answer to your inquiry:

In 1919 Denmark adopted a system for the regulation of the payment of Government employees on the basis of the cost of living. Special provisions to that end were adopted in the civil service law of September 12, 1919. Similar regulations were gradually adopted by a number of the larger Danish communities, and during a labor conflict in 1921–22 the system was also adopted in principle by the labor unions and by the employers' association.

The adoption and exercise of this policy in Denmark after the war has stood its test as a flexible means of adjusting the economic interests of those concerned. It has not only contributed to simplify the wage problem of officials in general but it has also served as a valuable medium of settling labor conflicts in periods when the replacement of values affected the economic interests of the employers or the laborers.

It should be mentioned, however, that the original arrangement, which was instituted by Law No. 489 of September 12, 1919, has been subject to revision several times to meet varying conditions.

The law of 1919 provided for two individual forms of allowances to offset the effect of the high cost of living, namely, the so-called "high-cost-of-living allowance," which was based upon a price index, and a "contingent allowance," which was fixed by the Government.

The object of the former was that of regulating the wages upon basis of the price level, while the object of the latter was that of establishing an economic balance in the social standard of living between the Government employees on the one side and other classes of the population on the other. Theoretically there existed the possibility that, although the price level might be high, the public might be poor, and vice versa. It was, therefore, decided that the regulation of the wages of Government employees should not only depend on the fluctuations of the prices but that other irregularities which might occur should be adjusted through the medium of a contingent allowance.

The high-cost-of-living allowance, which was uniform for all classes with basic wages totaling over 1,800 crowns per annum, amounted to 702 crowns in 1919. It was based upon a price index of 211. On October 1, 1920, the high-cost-of-living allowance reached its climax at 1,134 crowns, where it remained stationary for about one year. The allowance then dropped gradually and was fixed at 378 crowns on October 1, 1926. Meanwhile the contingent allowance was subject to an automatic reduction. In 1927 the whole allowance problem was subject to a revision, and by the new civil service law of March 31, 1931, a new basis was laid down for the regulation of the wages of Government employees. While the large communities have continued to follow the principles embodied in the various Government laws, the labor unions and the Employers' Association abandoned the system in 1927.

Under the new law the high-cost-of-living allowance and the contingent allowance were combined and replaced by the so-called regulation allowance. The following is an analysis of the law of 1931 governing the payment of regulation allowance to Government employees, which is now in force:

Article 89 of the civil service law of March 31, 1931, provides that all Government employees shall be entitled to a nonpension regulation allowance, which will be paid monthly together with the wages.

Article 90 provides that upon direction of the Minister of the Interior the municipalities of Copenhagen, the municipalities of Danish provisional towns, and of 100 country districts shall collect information regarding the retail prices of prime necessities, clothes, fuel, light, and rent. This information shall be collected during the first week of the four quarters, beginning January 1, April 1, July 1, and October 1. The information must be entered by the municipal boards on forms issued by the statistical department and must be returned to the latter before the 15th of each of the four months in question.

Article 90 provides that on basis of the reports, covering the price ruling in January of each year, the statistical department must work out before February 20 of each year a household account (price index) covering the expenses of a standard family (which before the war expended 1,592 crowns for this purpose) for indispensable food, clothes, fuel, light, and rent.

The table below shows the amounts, fixed upon the basis of the wages (basic salary, age allowance, and personal nonpension allowances) which will be paid annually at varying price indexes, in the form of regulation allowance to married men, widowers, widows, to men and women who have been divorced or separated, who keep their own households or have dependents under 18 years, and to unmarried persons who have dependents—who have their own household:

Regulation allowance

|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 2,427–2,842 kroner | 2,323–2,426 kroner | 2,219–2,322 kroner | 2,115–2,218 kroner | 2,011–2,114 kroner | 1,907–2,010 kroner | Under 1,907 kroner |
| | Per cent | Per cent | Per cent | Per cent | Per cent | Per cent | Per cent |
| Below 1,500 crowns | 33 | 27 | 22 | 16 | 11 | 5 | 0 |
| | Kroner | Kroner | Kroner | Kroner | Kroner | Kroner | Kroner |
| 1,500–1,799 crowns | 528 | 444 | 360 | 276 | 180 | 84 | 0 |
| 1,800–2,999 crowns | 564 | 468 | 372 | 276 | 180 | 84 | 0 |
| 3,000–4,499 crowns | 600 | 504 | 408 | 312 | 216 | 108 | 0 |
| 4,500–5,999 crowns | 648 | 540 | 432 | 324 | 216 | 108 | 0 |
| 6,000–7,499 crowns | 696 | 588 | 480 | 372 | 252 | 132 | 0 |
| 7,500–8,999 crowns | 744 | 624 | 504 | 384 | 264 | 132 | 0 |
| 9,000–10,499 crowns | 804 | 672 | 540 | 408 | 276 | 144 | 0 |
| 10,500 crowns and above | 876 | 732 | 588 | 444 | 300 | 156 | 0 |

If the expense figure should advance to Kr. 2843, and for each time it exceeds this figure by Kr. 104, the regulation allowance, appearing in the column covering the expense figure from Kr. 2842 to Kr. 2427, will be increased by amounts, corresponding to the difference between the allowance in question and the identical allowance appearing in the succeeding column. The per cent allowance granted in connection with wages below Kr. 1500 will be increased alternatingly by 5 and 6 per cent.

Government employees, other than those mentioned above, will, provided they are over 40 years of age, obtain a regulation allowance corresponding to two-thirds of the amount stipulated above.

All other Government employees will obtain a regulation allowance, representing one-third of the amount stipulated above.

When married couples, who live together, are both entitled to regulation allowance, each of the two parts will obtain one-half of the highest rate of allowance to which they are entitled.

If either one of two people, who are married and who live together, obtain regulation allowance based upon wages or pension from the State, and the other party obtains a corresponding allowance as an employee of a municipality, or as an employee of a concessioned enterprise, the regulation allowance granted by the Government will be regulated in the same manner as if the other party was a Government employee.

The administration is authorized to demand any information which is necessary for fixing the regulation allowance. In case of refusal, the right of obtaining the allowance is forfeited.

Trusting that this may be of interest and value to you, I am, with kindest regards,

Respectfully yours,

F. W. B. COLEMAN,
American Minister.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, before we come to the final amendment I have a little amendment which I would like to suggest on my own behalf. On page 74, after line 14, insert the following new section:

Section 213 of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is repealed.

This is the amendment which I promised some time ago to make to repeal the section, which forbids the employment of married women whose husbands are engaged in the Government service. The application of section 213 has caused a great deal of hardship. Furthermore, I agree entirely with the report made by the Civil Service Commission that the insertion of this in legislation is contrary to the principles of the civil service act. They recommend the repeal of the section. It provides that persons who are being examined for appointment to the Government service by the Civil Service Commission, no matter what their efficiency, no matter how high their rating, no matter how great their ability, if they have a consort to whom they are legally married and with whom they are living, they may not be considered for appointment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am not opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to insert such a provision, but I think one of our colleagues on the Economy Committee is, and I would like to have it go over until he returns. I take the same view about it that the Senator from Connecticut does.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be placed on its passage. It ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 74, after line 14, insert a new section, as follows:

Section 213 of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is repealed.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is nothing else to be taken up so far as I know except Title IV, and before that is taken up I think we should have a quorum call. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, just a moment before that is done. Will the Senator withhold his suggestion for a moment?

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there were some of us last year who protested vigorously against this unjust provision in the act. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that it has worked out to the disadvantage of the Government. There are several cases which have come to my personal attention where women of particularly desirable qualities and expert knowledge of certain activities of the Government have been lost to the Government by reason of that provision of the law. I hope at a suitable time this matter may be passed upon by the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am in entire accord with what the Senator from New York and the Senator from Connecticut have said about it. I took that position in the committee, but two of our committee members, I believe, were opposed to it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I renew my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Bingham | Byrnes | Copeland |
| Austin | Black | Capper | Costigan |
| Bailey | Blaine | Caraway | Couzens |
| Bankhead | Bratton | Clark | Dale |
| Barbour | Bulkley | Connally | Dickinson |
| Barkley | Bulow | Coolidge | Dill |

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Fess | Hebert | Moses | Sheppard |
| Frazier | Hull | Neely | Steiwer |
| George | Johnson | Norris | Thomas, Idaho |
| Glenn | Kean | Nye | Townsend |
| Goldsborough | Kendrick | Oddie | Trammell |
| Gore | Keyes | Pittman | Vandenberg |
| Grammer | La Follette | Reynolds | Wagner |
| Hale | Lewis | Robinson, Ark. | Walcott |
| Harrison | McGill | Robinson, Ind. | Watson |
| Hastings | McKellar | Russell | White |
| Hatfield | McNary | Schall | |
| Hayden | Metcalf | Schuyler | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment be passed over. The important thing at this time is to take up Title IV, the amendment on page 83, reported by the committee, relative to the organization of the executive departments. I understand the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has an amendment in the nature of a substitute to offer therefor.

Mr. BYRNES. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for Title IV.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by Mr. BYRNES.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment may be dispensed with, so that the Senator from South Carolina may immediately explain it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, before that is done, will the Senator permit me to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate finishes its business to-night it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business this evening it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, Mr. President, I renew my request for unanimous consent to suspend the further reading of the amendment and that the Senator from South Carolina may be recognized to explain the amendment. I make this suggestion in order to save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment proposed by Mr. BYRNES in the nature of a substitute is, on page 83, to strike out all of "Title IV," and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

TITLE IV—REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

DECLARATION OF STANDARD

SEC. 401. In order to further reduce expenditures and increase efficiency in government, the President shall investigate the present organization of all executive and administrative agencies of the Government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary—

(a) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes;

(b) To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and by abolishing such agencies and/or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government;

(c) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort; and

(d) To segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative and executive character.

DEFINITION OF EXECUTIVE AGENCY

SEC. 402. When used in this title the term "executive agency" means any commission, independent establishment, board, bureau, division, service, or office in the executive branch of the Government and, except as provided in section 403, includes the executive departments.

POWER OF PRESIDENT

SEC. 403. Whenever the President, after investigation, shall find and so declare that any regrouping, consolidation, transfer, or abolition of any executive agency or agencies and/or the functions thereof is necessary to accomplish the purpose provided in section 401 of this title, he may by Executive order—

(a) Transfer the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of any other executive agency;

(b) Consolidate the functions vested in any executive agency; or

(c) Abolish the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof; and

(d) Designate and fix the name and functions of any consolidated activity or executive agency and the title, powers, and duties of its executive head; except that the President shall not have authority under this title to abolish or transfer an executive department and/or all the functions thereof.

SEC. 404. The President's order directing any transfer, consolidation, or elimination under the provisions of this title shall also make provision for the transfer or other disposition of the records, property (including office equipment), personnel, and unexpended balances of appropriations affected by such transfer, consolidation, or elimination.

SAVING PROVISIONS

SEC. 405. (a) All orders, rules, regulations, permits, or other privileges made, issued, or granted by or in respect of any executive agency or function transferred or consolidated with any other executive agency or function under the provision of this title, and in effect at the time of the transfer or consolidation, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer or consolidation had not occurred, until modified, superseded, or repealed.

(b) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of any executive agency or other officer of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of any transfer of authority, power, and duties from one officer or executive agency of the Government to another under the provisions of this title, but the court, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such transfer takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, may allow the same to be maintained by or against the head of the executive agency or other officer of the United States to whom the authority, powers, and duties are transferred.

(c) All laws relating to any executive agency or function transferred or consolidated with any other executive agency or function under the provisions of this title shall, in so far as such laws are not inapplicable, remain in full force and effect, and shall be administered by the head of the executive agency to which the transfer is made or with which the consolidation is effected.

WINDING UP AFFAIRS OF AGENCIES

SEC. 406. In the case of the elimination of any executive agency or function the President's order providing for such elimination shall make provision for winding up the affairs of the executive agency eliminated or the affairs of the executive agency with respect to the functions eliminated, as the case may be.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF EXECUTIVE ORDER

SEC. 407. Whenever the President makes an Executive order under the provisions of this title such Executive order shall be submitted to the Congress while in session and shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days after such transmission, unless Congress shall by law provide for an earlier effective date of such Executive order or orders: Provided, That if Congress shall adjourn before the expiration of 60 calendar days from the date of such transmission such Executive order shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days from the opening day of the next succeeding regular or special session.

APPROPRIATIONS IMPOUNDED

SEC. 408. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this title shall not be used for any purpose, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

TERMINATION OF POWER

SEC. 409. The authority granted to the President under section 403 shall terminate upon the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this act, unless otherwise provided by Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the only difference between the amendment and the text of the bill as reported by the committee is that in section 401, instead of a declaration of policy, words have been substituted which define a standard and which provide for an investigation by the President as to the existing administrative agencies of the Government and lay down a rule to be followed by any Executive order which he may thereafter promulgate.

The second change is that in section 403 it is provided that the President may issue an Executive order after investigation by him and after the declaration of the existence of the facts set forth in section 401.

The third change is in section 407. That section in the bill as reported provides that when an Executive order is submitted to Congress the Congress by a concurrent resolution may disapprove the order of the President. That is the effect of the language of the bill. In the amendment now offered that authority is eliminated, and it is provided that whenever the President shall issue an Executive order it shall be submitted to Congress while the Congress is in session " and shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days after such transmission, unless Congress shall by law provide for an earlier effective date of such Executive order or orders."

It further provides " if Congress shall adjourn before the expiration of 60 calendar days from the date of such transmission such Executive order shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days from the opening day of the next succeeding regular or special session."

The reason for the omission from the amendment of the language contained in the bill with respect to action by Congress by concurrent resolution is that in the veto message of the President, sent to Congress on January 24 last, disapproving the deficiency appropriation bill because of the inclusion in that bill of the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the opinion of the Attorney General, which is cited in the message, calls attention to the fact that the provision contained in the existing law which was enacted by the Congress at the last session giving to the President the power to reorganize the departments of the Government and authorizing one House to disapprove the action of the President was probably unconstitutional. The Attorney General said, as appears from the message of the President, as follows:

> The attempt to give to either House of Congress by action which is not legislation power to disapprove administrative acts raises a grave question as to the validity of the entire provision in the act of June 30, 1932, for executive reorganization of governmental functions.

An investigation of the authority cited by the Attorney General in that veto message causes me to conclude that the Attorney General was probably correct in that opinion, and that if the Congress should now enact the bill in the form in which it was reported by the committee, providing for the disapproval by the Congress of the Executive order of the President by concurrent action and not by legislative action—not by law but merely by the action of the two Houses overriding the final action of the Executive—it would be unconstitutional.

I know that the Congress has no desire to pass this bill in a form which would cause the Attorney General to recommend a veto and cause the President, following the judgment of his Attorney General, to veto the bill.

That, Mr. President, is the difference between the bill and the amendment I have offered.

As to the provisions of the bill, I think, judging from the discussion which has taken place in this body within the last few days, that the Senate is of the opinion that there can be no real merger and consolidation of bureaus if we must wait for the Congress to act. I think, as I have said before, that the nearest earthly approach to immortality is a bureau of the Federal Government. We never can abolish a bureau of the Federal Government by act of Congress. Whenever it is attempted, all of the pressure is brought to bear by those interested in the continuation of the particular bureau. In the same way, I am satisfied that if there is an effort to consolidate or merge bureaus we will have the same experience.

I came to the House of Representatives in 1911. I remember then, in my first session of the Congress, learning of the efforts that had been made for years to reorganize the Customs Service; and though the Congress wanted to abolish customs districts and the position of collector of the port at many places where men were drawing large salaries—the salaries in some instances being four or five times as great as the receipts of the office—Congress never could accomplish the reduction in the expenditures of government.

Finally, the Congress authorized the President to reorganize the Customs Service. President Taft brought about that reorganization; not, however, until there came from all over the country men to protest against the change in the Customs Service which brought about a reduction of salaries of officeholders in this country. The Customs Service was reorganized and has functioned with greater efficiency since that date.

In 1920 a joint commission of the Congress was appointed, and Members now serving in the Senate served upon that commission and worked faithfully upon the preparation of a plan to reorganize the departmental service, only to find, when completed, that it could not be passed by the Congress.

Recently, we know that the Congress authorized President Hoover to proceed with this reorganization. I know that men will say that the order submitted by the President brought about no substantial saving. I have said that. I regret that at the time his Executive order was submitted it did not set forth any savings that would be effected as a result of it. However, the Economy Committee intended to go into the consideration of that measure upon its merits. By reason of the action of the House we were precluded from doing so.

This is no partisan question, because the President of the United States, after submitting his Executive order to the Congress, said this:

> Either Congress must keep its hands off now, or they must give to my successor much larger powers of independent action than given to any President if there is ever to be reorganization; and that authority, to be effective, should be free of the limitations in the law passed last year which gives Congress the veto power, prevents the abolition of functions, and prevents the rearrangement of major departments. Otherwise it will, as is now being demonstrated in the present law, again be merely make believe.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the Senator two questions concerning the amendment. One is with regard to section 402, as to whether or not the Senator interprets that language to include the Federal Trade Commission, the General Accounting Office, and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BYRNES. Under the definition of " Executive agencies " it would include all of the commissions and departments of the Government except the executive departments.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. One other question: I understood the Senator to say, with regard to section 407, that any action by the Congress save by joint resolution would be unconstitutional.

Mr. BYRNES. I stated that that was the opinion expressed by the Attorney General, and that I concurred in that opinion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But of course that, I take it, does not go so far as to justify on the ground of constitutionality the provision contained in section 407 which does not give the Congress any veto at all. It simply gives it the opportunity of advancing the date upon which the order of abolition or consolidation or reorganization shall take effect.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that under the provisions of this bill it is purposely provided that it shall not become effective for 60 days, during which 60 days the Congress is in session, in order that the Congress may act. Without the Congress giving itself the power to disapprove, the Congress has that power; and within the 60 days which must expire the Congress can act, if it sees fit to do so.

That was the purpose of providing that the order should not become effective for 60 days, in order that the Congress might act; and we did not believe, or I did not believe, that it would give or could give any additional power to the Congress to say that Congress could disapprove it, because I know the Senator will agree that Congress could disapprove it without any such provision in this amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator whether he concurs in the position taken by the Attorney General in his opinion?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that I do. I think, however, that the Attorney General, if he was of that opinion, should have advised the President of it when the bill was passed last year. I think if he was of that opinion, he should have advised the President when the President submitted the Executive order to the House and not have waited until the President was sending a veto message to the Congress on the subject of the income-tax refund, and then, as mere dictum, call attention to it. But, regardless of what he should have done, I concur that his statement of the law is correct; and, because of that, I think it would be exceedingly unwise to include in this bill a provision which undoubtedly would result in his advising the President to the same effect that he has stated in this veto message and bring about the veto of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BYRNES. I do.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is true that the Senator, in his amendment to section 407, has provided that this order shall not go into effect until 60 calendar days after transmission to Congress, unless—now I ask the Senator to observe what he has provided—

> Unless Congress shall by law provide for an earlier effective date of such Executive order or orders.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, all that the Congress could do is by law to provide that the order shall go into effect a little earlier.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no!

Mr. BINGHAM. Congress can not veto it.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, yes!

Mr. BINGHAM. But the Senator has not said that. He does not say it shall go into effect unless the Congress shall by law provide for something else. All that the Senator provides that the Congress may do by law is to provide for an earlier effective date.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think the Senator from Connecticut listened to me as I replied to the Senator from Wisconsin. That language is necessary, because the amendment provides that the order shall not go into effect until 60 days, unless the Congress by affirmative action should pass a joint resolution, which must be signed by the President, and which by law would be subsequent action to this, and which would declare that it should go into effect on some other date.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then what the Senator means is that the only way the Congress can undo what the President does during the next two years is to pass a law repealing this law, which the President must sign or the Congress pass over his veto by two-thirds vote.

Mr. BYRNES. Right.

Mr. BINGHAM. Or else provide for an earlier effectiveness.

Mr. BYRNES. Right.

Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, Congress has to go to work and repeal the law.

Mr. BYRNES. Congress has to repeal the law, or——

Mr. BINGHAM. Under the provisions of the amendment, Congress has no veto power on the proposals of the President other than to repeal the original law.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. Under the decision of the Attorney General, which is correct, the Congress by concurrent action of the two Houses can not veto the final action of the Executive.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, now that we understand the proposal, I understand perfectly why the Senator has perfected his amendment to make it apply only to the next two years. I think it is a very dangerous power to give to any President, and I hope that the new President will not abuse it; but I can not possibly agree that we are going to say to the new President, whom we all respect and whose administration we hope will be successful, "During the next two years you may try your hand at remaking the United States Government by consolidating everything except departments, by abolishing everything except departments, and the Congress can not possibly do anything about it except repeal this law."

Mr. President, had I known that was the Senator's amendment, I should have been more decidedly opposed to it; and I do not believe that most Members of the Senate—only 52 of whom answered the last roll call—appreciated what the Senator was trying to do any more than I did, and I hope the Senator will not press for a vote on it this evening.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered has been pending for some days, and I am sure the Senator from Connecticut has had opportunity to see it; and my recollection is that I even told him some days ago the reason why section 407 was changed—by reason of the action of the Attorney General in the veto message to which I have referred.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am sorry. It is quite true the Senator spoke to me about it; but even the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]—who is not in charge of the bill and who has not had to spend 13 hours a day in trying to get this bill through—thought as I did, that there was some provision in it for veto by the Congress, and was surprised when he read the section again to discover that the only power given to the Congress under the section was to make the date of reorganization a little earlier.

Mr. BYRNES. I have told the Senator from Connecticut the fact. It is the fact that this bill can not give to one House or to two Houses the power to veto the action of the Executive under an order provided for in this bill. I think the Senator from Connecticut will agree that the Attorney General was right in saying that one House could not veto the final action of the Executive, and two Houses would have no greater power than one House would have; and we are brought face to face with the question as to whether or not we are ever going to take a step toward the reorganization of the departments of the Government.

If we are to do it, it must be done in this way. If an order is sent to the Congress, it will not become effective for 60 days; during which time, if the Congress sees fit, it can repeal the entire act. It can prevent the carrying into effect of any order that may be filed by the President of the United States. In no other way can the reorganization of the departments of the Government be brought about. If it is sought to do it by giving to the Congress the power—one or two Houses—it would be futile and vain.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Has any amendment to the amendment the Senator is discussing now been agreed to?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, under the amendment as read at the desk I added a section, which was in form the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] providing that the powers granted to the President in section 403 should expire in two years from the date of the approval of the act. Otherwise it is exactly as it appears.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was not aware of the pending of this amendment which the Senator is now discussing, a very comprehensive one, which would take out of the bill several pages. It would take out of the bill language where I desired to offer an amendment. I find the same language in the amendment of the Senator, and before it is voted on I want to offer an amendment, unless, during the debate, I am convinced that it will not be the proper thing to do. If the Senator will turn to page 3 of his amendment, line 10, commencing with the word "except," I want to strike out the balance of line 10, and lines 11, 12, and 13. In other words, I want to leave the power of the President without the exception that is stated in the language I want to strike out.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that as to that language it is absolutely essential if there is to be any saving at all effected by the reorganization of the departments of the Government. There is no doubt but that the mere merger and consolidation which were sought to be effected by the Executive order filed by President Hoover at this time amounted merely to a shuffling about of bureaus, without the abolishment of a single activity, and, therefore, retaining all of the expenditures which have heretofore existed.

Looking over the Executive order, the Senator from Connecticut, I remember, in a very enlightening speech over the radio, called attention to that very fact, that by the mere merging and consolidating of bureaus there was no material saving effected by the order. In all fairness to the President, I must say that, under the powers vested, which involve merely transferring one bureau to another, without the power to abolish any, there could be no substantial saving.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator is talking about the same provision about which I am speaking.

Mr. BYRNES. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. What I am seeking to do by this amendment is to enlarge the powers of the President given by the Senator's amendment. I want to strike out the exception. I want to give the President power to combine departments as well as bureaus.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not understand the Senator's amendment. The language to which the Senator refers was inserted by reason of the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the objection, let me ask the Senator, to my amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. I may say to the Senator that I see no objection, and as originally offered by me the provision did not contain that language.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think that one of the great savings which could be effected by a reorganization would be through abolishing some of the departments?

Mr. BYRNES. I agree with the Senator, but the amendment as reported by the committee carries that exception, which was inserted by vote in the committee. That is the explanation of it appearing in the bill, and I carried it into my amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. We are asked to confer, by this act, a very great power upon the President, one which I think is necessary, under the conditions, one I would not vote for under any other conditions. But I do not see any reason why, if we are to confer on the President the power to combine various bureaus, we should not go a step farther and give him the authority to combine departments. Perhaps upon investigation he would not exercise it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I so much agree with the Senator that I say that I have confidence that the President of the United States is not going to exercise the authority conferred upon him in this measure in any unwise or dangerous manner. The President of the United States has a responsibility to the people, just as we have.

Mr. NORRIS. After all, no matter what we may think about it, we proceed on the theory that the President is just as much interested in economy as we are, and we are giving him a power that, from the very conditions which confront any legislature, it is practically impossible for us to carry out.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator and I would agree that all legislative bodies are collectively in favor of economy, and individually in favor of extravagance.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is the way it turns out when we apply it practically.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer his amendment now?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not the floor. I was trying to find out, if I could, what possible objection there could be to striking this language out, before I offered the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I respond to the Senator that I see no objection, but Senators who are on the committee did object, on the ground that they did not want departments combined, and I do not think I would be misstating their position when I say that they were opposed to the War and Navy Departments being combined, more than any other two, and did not want to leave the measure in such condition that that power might be exercised. I think it is fair to make that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I can see a very plausible objection to any of this legislation. I do not think anybody will doubt that there is some objection to it. We would not be thinking of doing this except in great emergency; at least, I do not think I would.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I personally do not see any reason why we should not give to the President this authority and say to him, "If you, on investigation, think that it can be done, and think it is proper, you may combine departments, as well as bureaus." It is a step farther than the bill goes, but, to my mind, without my being an expert on the subject, it seems to me there might be the greatest of economy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. I apologize. I offer the amendment on page 3, line 10, commencing with the word "except," to strike out the balance of line 10 and lines 11, 12, and 13, the language stricken out being the words, "except that the President shall not have authority under this title to abolish or transfer an executive department and/or all the functions thereof."

Mr. BINGHAM. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would not that be an amendment in the third degree?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina is a substitute, so the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska would be in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Austin | Costigan | Hayden | Nye |
| Bailey | Couzens | Hull | Oddie |
| Bankhead | Cutting | Kean | Pittman |
| Barkley | Dale | Keyes | Robinson, Ark. |
| Bingham | Dickinson | La Follette | Schall |
| Black | Dill | Lewis | Schuyler |
| Bratton | Fess | McGill | Sheppard |
| Bulkley | Frazier | McKellar | Steiwer |
| Byrnes | George | McNary | Townsend |
| Capper | Goldsborough | Metcalf | Vandenberg |
| Clark | Gore | Moses | Wagner |
| Connally | Hale | Neely | Walcott |
| Copeland | Hastings | Norris | White |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska was considered in the full Committee on Appropriations when there was a very good attendance.

The Senator from South Carolina moved to insert the word "departments" in the bill, which was debated at length in the committee with a very full attendance, as I said, and on a vote of the committee it was not agreed to. It was pointed out that it gave the President too much power. In fact, there was some question about its constitutionality, but there is no question about it that to do what the Senator from Nebraska wants to do means that the President, if he chose to do so, could combine the Departments of the Army and Navy, he could combine the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor, or he could combine the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior. He could disrupt the entire Government service.

I know the Senator from Nebraska is not interested in having anything happen to the Department of Agriculture. Personally I am not interested in having anything happen to the departments concerned with the national defense which will interfere with their efficiency. In accordance with the traditions of my family, which, ever since 1066, has, in certain branches of it, been connected with the national defense of whatever country we belonged to, I believe in having the defense of my country as efficient as possible. When this country went to war, I was all prepared to take my part in it and served all during the war.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the diligent Senator from Connecticut if he feels that consolidation of the War and Navy Departments and of aeronautics under a single head would weaken the defense or lessen the efficiency of the Government?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do, and I base my belief on the study made of this question by the commission presided over by the late distinguished Senator from New Jersey, Mr. Morrow, the so-called President's aircraft board, known as the Morrow board, which considered very carefully the consolidation of the departments, particularly with reference to the question of air power, and came to the conclusion after long study and very thorough investigation that in the first place it would lay upon the shoulders of one man, the secretary of national defense, an even greater burden than to-day lies upon the shoulders of the Secretary of War, which is almost more than any one man can handle.

If the Senator from Illinois, with his long acquaintance with Government departments, will but recollect all the different things the Secretary of War has to do and the important duties he has to perform, he will realize that it is almost impossible to perform those duties effectively, and yet the Senator from Nebraska would add to that man's shoulders the duty of attending to the Navy. That is the first objection, that it is requiring almost superhuman ability on the part of any one person. At the present time the President of the United States himself is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and in time of war is the coordinating force that must take charge.

The second objection found by the Morrow board to this plan was that it would necessitate the setting up of a supergeneral staff. The General Staff of the Army has its hands quite full at the present time studying problems and putting into effect the best possible preparedness for that branch of the service. The General Board of the Navy has its hands full with naval problems. To set up a minister of national defense would require a supergeneral staff to consolidate and coordinate those matters, and in the opinion of the Morrow board, arrived at unanimously, it would be inadvisable and would cause additional expense and confusion.

It has been my desire to see this country prepared against emergencies in the national defense. I believe it can best be done under the present arrangement by having a separate Secretary of War and a separate Secretary of the Navy, and letting the President himself, as did President Wilson during the World War and as President Lincoln did during the Civil War, coordinate those departments and not attempt to set up a junior president or kind of vice president for the national defense who shall coordinate the various branches of the national defense.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. I would merely add that I was interested in the Senator's viewpoint. I pray to be forgiven for alluding to myself. I happened to be what is called a colonel of the State guard and I had a small service in both the Spanish-American and the late World Wars, of sufficient consequence to acquaint me with the plans to which the Senator has referred touching the matter of Government service.

I am still of the idea that the country, in the West where I live, feels that a consolidation of the Army, the Navy, and other branches of defense under a single head would reduce expenditures greatly, and that is the thing uppermost in their minds. I was anxious to have the opinion of the Senator from Connecticut and others interested in the matter of national defense as to whether they thought the consolidation would seriously interfere with preparations for defense, which just now I feel our country should be on the alert to continue.

Mr. BINGHAM. I fear it would. I would not object at all to a consolidation of some of the branches, such as the Ordnance Department and the Quartermaster Department, but I feel very keenly that history points out that we can have a better national defense if there is a certain amount of competition between the two branches of the service. May I call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Illinois to the fact that such a consolidation exists in none of the great powers in the world to-day, with the possible exception of Italy, which is operating under the enlightened leadership of a dictator who combines in his own ability superhuman powers. Italy is the only nation to-day where there is a combination under one head of the powers of national defense on land and on water. In England and France and Germany the same is true, though of course, in Germany there is no great army of defense. But the great nations of the world have learned through the experience of history that the problems of the navy and of the army are so different that they each require a complete organization for their general success and for the efficiency of those services.

Under our Constitution the consolidation takes place by making the President the Commander in Chief. In time of war his orders govern the actions of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Secretary of War. That is all that is necessary.

I believe that it is fallacy to think that by such a combination we can save a great amount of money. I know that has been repeatedly stated, but the Morrow board was unable to find where there would be any serious economy involved except in combining certain departments like the Ordnance Department and the Quartermaster Department which furnish clothing, ammunition, and so forth. Under the provisions of the bill as reported from the Appropriations Committee and under the provisions of the amendment suggested by the Senator from South Carolina that would be possible. It would be entirely possible for the President to combine the purchase of clothing and food for both the Army and the Navy. That might indeed save expenses. But to combine their general staffs and their policies under a secretary of national defense would, I believe, seriously impair the efficiency of our national training.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we are engaged here in conferring upon the President the power to combine various activities of the Government. In the amendment proposed, giving him this power, an exception is noted, and that is that he shall not have the power to combine departments. I shall not have time within the scope of the 15 minutes allowed me to go into any detail with reference to the arguments that appeal to me in favor of the combination of some of the departments. I would do it if I had the power even though there were no emergency confronting the country.

The Senator from Connecticut has devoted some of his time to a combination of the War and Navy Departments. I think that ought to be done whether we are thinking of the depression or not. It would mean a great saving without any doubt, but I think as a matter of efficiency in time of war those two departments ought to be under one head. I can easily conceive of disagreements between the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War in the handling of the Army and the handling of the Navy. Even in time of war those facilities of the Army and Navy ought to be held in conjunction with each other. One man ought to have control of both of them. It seems to me it is just as unwise as to say that in a battle there shall be two commanders instead of one. The departments ought to be in the hands of one man with authority to control them both. I think it would be a step toward efficiency.

All through those departments there are similar activities. The Senator from Connecticut says those activities can not be combined without combining the departments, but at once we would run into difficulty. The Ordnance Department would supply them with clothing, but should we put that activity under the Navy or under the Army? We would at once get into a dispute between the Army and the Navy on that score. We would not get into that kind of a dispute in bringing about that kind of a combination if there were only one man at the head of both the Army and the Navy.

For fear that I may not conclude before my time expires, I want to reply to the Senator from Connecticut who has referred to other departments. He said that probably I would be opposed to a combination of some of the other departments, and he made special reference to the Department of Agriculture. Other Senators have said that I would not want to combine the Department of Agriculture with some other department. I say that I would. As a matter of efficiency in time of peace, even if we did not have the distressing conditions which now confront us, I would not hesitate to combine the Department of Agriculture with the Department of the Interior. All through those departments are activities which overlap and duplicate.

The Department of the Interior, for instance, has control over the Reclamation Service and the reclamation projects all over the West. Those projects have to do 100 per cent with agriculture, but the Department of Agriculture has not a thing to do with them. Those activities ought to be combined under one department. We would save a great deal of money if that were done. I would combine other bureaus and activities besides that. I think probably there is not time for me take up the departments one at a time and show where they could be combined in my humble judgment in order to bring about efficiency and save money, but there are probably many places where it could be done. First of all, if I had my way, I would combine the Army and the Navy. I would be thinking only of efficiency. I would be thinking of the time of danger and the time of war when those two great departments ought to be under one head instead of two heads.

I do not know the views of President-elect Roosevelt. He may agree entirely with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. I do know that we will never get the Army and Navy officers to agree to combine. If I had time, with some of the documents which I have here, I think I could point out why. They are too jealous of their prerogatives. Many of those jealousies arise, not from anything having to do with the Army and the Navy directly but from other considerations. Among them is the matter of social activities. Each one wants to stand at the head. They represent, outside of the Department of State, the greatest social activities in our Government. Laugh at it if Senators will, but many times not only in those departments but in others, social duties interfere with the official duties that they owe to their country, and often they bring about inefficiency.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Often they bring about expensive luxuries for which the taxpayers must pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NORRIS. How much time have I, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 10 minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator, but I do not want the Senator to make a speech in my time. I will be glad to have him make any suggestion or ask any question.

Mr. ODDIE. Then, I will make a statement after the Senator has finished.

Mr. NORRIS. That is better.

Mr. President, it seems to me, therefore, that we ought to strike out the exception. I see no reason, if we want to economize, why here is not the place to take the greatest step toward economy that is provided for in the bill. There is no compulsion about it. Senators say the President under that authority could combine all the departments into one. Suppose he could; everybody knows he will not do so. The same argument may be made against every other power that is given him in this amendment. If he wanted to, probably he could ruin the country. He could take one bureau after another or branches of the Government service and combine them in such a way as to bring about inefficiency. We must take that risk; but I do not think we are taking any risk in the matter. We are going on the theory that the President of the United States is just as patriotic as we are, that he is just as much interested in economy as we are, and perhaps more so; but we have found our inability to bring about economy; so we have said to the President, "Here, you take up these matters; combine such executive agencies as you see fit; eliminate the useless straw; put an end to overlapping activities of the Government; we are unable to do it on account of the diverse interests we represent here." So we are giving to him a wonderful power, a power that a legislative body never ought to give unless in times like these, when we are in a worse condition than we were during the war, so far as money is concerned, and when we are all united to fight the depression as we fought the war; and, in order to do it, we must give to the Executive, as we must in time of war, almost unlimited authority for a year or two until the necessary combinations and proper eliminations shall have been brought about.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment. It seems to me, therefore, that we can not logically refuse to take this step. Do not let us put ourselves in such a position that the President may come back here and truthfully tell us that while we have given him power we have hedged it about with limitations, as I fear we have, so that he will be unable to exercise it. Let him have this additional power. If, in his wisdom, he reaches the conclusion that no departments or bureaus can be combined, that ends it, of course; but I have not any fear, and I do not believe any other Senator has any fear, that if this power were delegated to the incoming President it would be abused in any respect. I yield now to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I merely rise to call attention to the fact that if this measure shall be adopted containing the provision now proposed it must receive the signature of the present President of the United States. I remind the able Senator from Nebraska that when I presented a proposal for the consolidation of the Interior and Agricultural Departments, and the matter reached the place where it had to be considered in a general sense, the members of the Cabinet were able to convince the President that it was a dangerous, unwise, and unprofitable thing, and the President opposed it.

Also, I may remind the eminent Senator from Nebraska that the Secretary of War opposed the consolidation of the War and Navy Departments and supported rather the views expressed by the Senator from Connecticut. If a similar view still obtains, it is apparent that, if we adopt this measure and the present distinguished President will not approve it, nothing is to be gained if his attitude is one of opposition to combination.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is true, he will veto it, I suppose.

Mr. LEWIS. Such is my fear.

Mr. NORRIS. We can not take that power away from him, and if he feels he ought to veto it, let him veto it. We can not help it. I am not afraid of a veto. This is something that will not take any power away from the existing President. It will not go into force until he goes out of office, and if he is afraid to trust the President elect with this authority then he ought to veto it. If I were afraid to trust the incoming President with this authority, I would not vote to confer it; I would not vote for any of these consolidations that we want to bring about if I were not willing to trust him. I do not believe there is any question in the mind of anyone that we are running no risk in doing this.

The Senator from Illinois says that we have had this question up before. That is true. After a department has once been created, then if subsequently an effort is made to pass a law to abolish it, or any other department for that matter, of course the department involved is going to fight; it is going to fight just as when we try to abolish an office they oppose it, and bring to bear all the influence they can from corporations and others to bring about the defeat of legislation of that kind. That is one of the reasons we are unable to accomplish anything.

The President, to some extent, if this provision shall be adopted, will be up against that difficulty. If he says, "I am going to abolish the War and Navy Departments and combine them into one," either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy must go out of office. Of course, neither Secretary desires that; of course they will oppose it. If the President says, "I am going to combine the Agricultural Department and the Interior Department," both of which perform functions with respect to land and forests and the improvement of agriculture, of course, the heads of those two departments would oppose it if we would leave it to them. If any President should submit to his Cabinet a proposition to abolish one-half the departments, I would not be surprised if he would get an adverse report from all of them. They would not know whose head was coming off, and they would not be in favor of it. But I want to say to them, as I have said to Members of the Senate, that unless we do something along this line we will accomplish nothing. We are not going to get reductions under the amendment that was adopted to-day because it is so circumscribed with provisions that it will be made perhaps impossible for the administrative officers to bring about any reduction.

Mr. President, this country lived for a good many years without any Department of Commerce; it lived for a long while without any Department of Labor. When we started we had but two or three departments. We have been adding them gradually, one at a time, and when this depression came on there was great agitation all over the United States to have another department added—a Department of Education. Some Senators were in favor of it; it had strong backing from students all over the United States, but nobody would propose it now. If the President should, under the authority that would be given him if this amendment should be agreed to, abolish some department, when prosperity again returns if, in the judgment of Congress, that department ought to be reestablished, there is no reason why it should not be reestablished by act of Congress, just as most of the departments have been established from time to time.

So, Mr. President, if we are in earnest about saving money, if we are in earnest about abolishing overlapping that prevails to a large degree in all the departments, if we are going to do a good job of it, there will be some of the departments themselves that we will want to combine and that ought to be combined. Therefore it seems to me that we ought not to have this exception in the bill, but that the President ought to have the authority to do what he would have the power to do if this exception were taken out.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. He was good enough to accept the amendment which I offered proposing that the authority granted under this act shall terminate at the end of two years, but I notice he did not make use of the other amendment about the declaration of an emergency.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the language the Senator has in the amendment he offered was really somewhat similar to the language originally in the bill, and after consideration we determined it would be unwise to include it, thinking that it might endanger the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the purpose of offering it was to do exactly the contrary. I took advice in this matter, as I frequently do on matters which have to do with grave constitutional questions, from friends of mine in New York who specialize in that field, and they pointed out to me—and I quote from a letter which I hold in my hand:

> To my mind the various activities as to which Congress declares its policy—

Or "standard," as the Senator has it now in his amendment—> in section 401 of the bill are not inherently legislative in character, and the present concern of Congress with such activities represents a broadening of the legislative jurisdiction (some would say an encroachment) at the expense of the executive department.

> To direct what shall be done (make laws) is, of course, a legislative function which can not be delegated, but to direct how and by whom a given work is to be performed is a different matter. The powers sought to be conferred on the President would seem to be of the latter kind, and unless the necessary effect of the bill would be other than appears on its face, I should expect the Supreme Court to hold it constitutional, at least in its main scope and purpose.
> The provisions of subdivision (c) of section 403—
> "To abolish the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof"— > would seem at first blush to raise a difficulty. If that clause means that, in the case of an agency created and charged with certain functions by act of Congress, the President could annihilate both agency and functions, it would amount in substance and effect to giving the President power to repeal a law. However, I should anticipate that the clause, read in the light of the rest of the bill, would be construed by the courts as giving the power to abolish only in connection with a transfer somewhere else. In any event, it would, of course, be possible for the courts to uphold the rest of the bill even if one provision were deemed unconstitutional as involving a delegation of legislative power.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not get the idea of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. I have proposed two amendments. One provided that the authority hereby granted should expire at the end of two years, which has been accepted. The other was to have section 401 read in this way:

> SEC. 401. The Congress hereby declares that a serious emergency exists by reason of the general economic depression; that it is imperative to reduce drastically all governmental expenditures during such emergency; and that such reduction may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this title.

And then follow on with the language found in section 401.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not change the language?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I do not change the language. I simply insert ahead of section 401 the preamble or declaration of an emergency.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that objected to?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from South Carolina said just now he was afraid that it might jeopardize the bill by making it more likely to be declared unconstitutional; but on the contrary, Mr. President, my friends whom I have consulted have said that we should make clear to the court that there is an emergency by making a declaration that an emergency exists. Of course, in the States, where police powers are exercised, that would be done. We went very far in my State in passing rent laws and housing laws by reason of the declaration of an emergency. There is not any question that there exists now a great national emergency. If we were to make the declaration in the bill, it certainly would not weaken the bill. It would not change it in any particular except to make clear that we are adopting these drastic measures because there is an emergency.

Then, likewise, my friends advise that there be a declaration that this act shall expire at the end of two years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator's amendment seek to strike out a portion of the pending amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. No; it does not. It proposes to put ahead of the language in section 401 the declaration to which I have referred.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The language of the Senator from South Carolina as presented has been prepared with special reference to the constitutionality of the provision. I myself have given some consideration to that subject and to the language that is employed. I do not see any objection to incorporating the language of the Senator from New York if it does not delete those provisions of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina which, in my judgment, do bring it within the rule respecting the power of Congress to delegate power.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask the Senator from New York if he will yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to both the Senators that if the Senator's amendment does not strike out any of the section, it seems to me it is a very appropriate heading. I can see that it will be an advantage to a court, when it comes to construe this language, if it ever does, to have the objects of it set out. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it seems to me it would add to it; and it ought to be included, it seems to me, if it does not strike out any of the language.

Mr. BYRNES and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the language which is included in the Senator's amendment as it now stands would be inconsistent with the language which is contained in this amendment. It declares a policy after providing for striking out the language contained in section 401 in this amendment, and substitutes the language that is contained in this amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President; the Senator is wrong.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator starts at "401." Mine would begin:

> The Congress hereby declares that a serious emergency exists * * * accordingly, in order to reduce expenditures and increase efficiency in government—

Then we go on.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment if it does not strike out section 401.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from South Carolina to accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, and to modify his amendment accordingly. That being the case, the question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, to the committee amendment, was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have pending at the desk an amendment which relates to the so-called married women's provision of existing law, moving to strike that out. I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 74, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

> SEC. —. Section 213 of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is repealed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, on account of the lateness of the hour, and on account of the fact that I think everybody understands what the motion means, I shall not make any speech, further than to say that the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission was that the provision in the last economy bill be repealed, since it was contrary to the spirit of the civil service law. I agree with them, and I am moving to carry out their recommendation.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut if there are any restrictions on two or three wage earners from the same household?

Mr. BINGHAM. There is in the present law, I believe, a restriction of that kind; but I am not certain.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum, because I am unwilling to vote for a provision that permits two or three wage earners from one household when there are millions walking the streets.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Copeland | Hull | Robinson, Ark. |
| Austin | Costigan | Kean | Schall |
| Bailey | Couzens | Kendrick | Schuyler |
| Bankhead | Dickinson | La Follette | Sheppard |
| Barkley | Dill | Lewis | Steiwer |
| Bingham | Fess | McGill | Townsend |
| Black | Frazier | McKellar | Vandenberg |
| Bratton | Goldsborough | McNary | Wagner |
| Bulkley | Gore | Moses | Walcott |
| Byrnes | Hale | Neely | Walsh, Mass. |
| Capper | Hatfield | Nye | White |
| Clark | Hayden | Oddie | |
| Connally | Hebert | Pittman | |

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as a whole, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the letter which I send to the desk be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED AIR LINES,
Chicago, February 6, 1933.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR ROBINSON: The route certificate covering air mail operation between Chicago and San Francisco which was submitted by the Postmaster General, together with other data on the air mail service, was made in 1930. In it are established the rates of pay which were then current for operation over that line.

The Postmaster General's letter did not disclose the fact that those rates have been substantially reduced since that date. It has occurred to me that you might be interested to know what the rates are at the present. The following tabulation shows the rates now being paid. You will note that they have been substantially decreased since 1930.

| | Night | Day |
|---|---|---|
| Schedule 5, route 18, Chicago to Salt Lake City | $0.785 | $0.635 |
| Schedule 3, route 18, Salt Lake City to Oakland | .54 | .39 |
| Schedule 5, route 18, Salt Lake City to Oakland | .785 | .635 |
| Schedule 3, route 18, Chicago to Salt Lake City | .545 | .395 |
| Schedule 1, route 18, Salt Lake City to Oakland | .695 | .545 |
| Schedule 1, route 18, Chicago to Salt Lake City | .695 | .545 |

Very sincerely yours,

PAUL HENDERSON, Vice President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MINNESOTA SENATORIAL CONTEST

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I desire to call up Senate Resolution 343, which affects the election of a Senator from the State of Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being privileged, the resolution is laid before the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 343, reported by Mr. HEBERT on January 31, 1933, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

> Resolved, That THOMAS D. SCHALL is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Minnesota for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1931, and is entitled to be seated as such.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is my information that the resolution was unanimously reported.

Mr. HEBERT. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 13710, the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13710, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 13, line 20, under the heading "Expenses in probate matters," after the figures "$30,000," to strike out the proviso down to and including line 24, as follows:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the payment of attorneys or other employees unless appointed after a competitive examination by the Civil Service Commission and from an eligible list furnished by such commission."

RECESS

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate now take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 8, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who feedest the sparrows, arrayest the lilies in their splendor, and makest the sun to shine upon the evil and the good, hear our petition; cleanse our hearts; purge our vision, and make us see all things in Thy light. Let us confidently cling to Thy truth, for nothing else is real. Thou who are the God of fatherless, the God of the widow, and the God of the oppressed, be merciful unto them. In the midst of righteousness and unrighteousness, between good and evil, show us the path of life and make for us places of character and wisdom. O lead us in the solution of all problems and the questions which are so pressing. The blessed Lord be with our people, and Thy will be done. Amen.

The Journals of Saturday, February 4, and Monday, February 6, were read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1933.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 565, to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1933.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 565

Resolved, etc., That $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia, is hereby authorized to be appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in said District from February 28 to March 10, 1933, both inclusive, including the employment of personal services, payment of allowances, traveling expenses, hire of means of transportation, cost of removing and relocating street-car loading platforms, for the construction, rent, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public comfort stations, first-aid stations, and information booths, during the period aforesaid, and other incidental expenses in the discretion of the commissioners. Said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movements, and operating of vehicles of whatever character or kind during said period; and to grant under such conditions as they may impose, special licenses to peddlers and vendors to sell goods, wares, and merchandise on the streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the District of Columbia, and to charge for such privilege such fees as they may deem proper.

SEC. 2. Such regulations and licenses shall be in force one week prior to said inauguration, during said inauguration, and one week subsequent thereto, and shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia, and in such other manner as the commissioners may deem best to acquaint the public with the same; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of any of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable for each such offense to a fine of not to exceed $100 in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than 60 days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I understand this resolution takes money out of the District of Columbia fund at the request of the Commissioners of the District, and that it is exactly the same resolution as has been passed in previous years for inaugural ceremonies.

Mrs. NORTON. That is true. It provides funds through the District of Columbia Committee in exactly the same manner as has heretofore been provided.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, as a matter of fact, the way the resolution is written it does not take it out of the District funds. The inaugural week here causes an extra amount of police work and additional work for firemen. I want to ask the lady from New Jersey whether or not she has investigated to find out whether this sum is absolutely necessary at this time.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say that it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. And to appropriate less might be dangerous to the peace and good order of the community?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Reserving the right to object, what is going to become of the money received for concessions and licenses? Is that going to be returned to the Treasury?

Mrs. NORTON. I understand anything that is left over will be returned to the treasury—not the Treasury of the United States but the poor fund of the District.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let me ask the lady a question. Is not the existing law with reference to peddlers sufficient? Why should any special authority be given to the commissioners to grant license to peddle or vend goods on the streets or sidewalks? Does not that require more police than otherwise would be required?

Mrs. NORTON. My understanding is that the form of the resolution does not take in any more concessions than we have had heretofore.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This would only provide for a temporary license and obviate the necessity of giving annual long-term licenses, which would be required under the general law.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; this is merely an emergency measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mrs. NORTON. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, after the word "hereby," strike out the words "authorized to be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT, H. R. 14438

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to file a supplemental report to accompany H. R. 14438, to effect needed changes in the Navy ration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EVENING SESSION, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1933

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 370

Resolved, That on Thursday, February 9, 1933, it shall be in order to move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that at the evening session, until 10.30 o'clock p. m., it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the call of bills on said calendar to begin at No. 608.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, some of us have been hoping that we might have this Private Calendar considered on Friday evening instead of Thursday. I have talked to the Republican whip about the matter, and he is very much in favor of it.

Mr. RAINEY. I have tried to arrange it for Friday, but there will be objection to that date. I could not do it. This is the only night that I could arrange it for.

Mr. PATTERSON. I thank the gentleman for the explanation. Of course we want to have the Private Calendar considered, but some of us would find it more convenient to have it called on Friday than on Thursday.

Mr. BLANTON. And some can be here on Thursday much better than on Friday.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RESIGNATION AS TELLER, COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

FEBRUARY 6, 1933.

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: You have kindly designated me as chairman of the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress to act as teller upon the occasion of the counting of the electoral vote on Wednesday, February 8.

I appreciate the honor, but find that I will be obliged to be away on Wednesday, so will appreciate it if you will designate the ranking Democratic member of the committee, Mr. JEFFERS, to act on that occasion.

Thanking you, I am, respectfully,

P. J. CARLEY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed Mr. JEFFERS to act as one of the tellers.

CONSERVATION OF WILD LIFE, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The calling of the Consent Calendar is in order to-day. The Clerk will call the first bill.

The first business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 263) to promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I stated on several occasions, I shall not object to the bill if the first section is stricken out. I have a communication from the clerk of the Senate committee, stating that they understand the purpose of striking out the first section, and would not object to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think this is much too important to be considered on the Consent Calendar. I ask the gentleman from Texas to have it go over without prejudice.

Mr. JONES. Oh, this is the last session upon which we will have opportunity to pass this bill. The members of the committee are agreeable to elimination of the first section, as suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object if the gentleman does not wish to have it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With the reservation that my amendment to strike out the first section will be accepted, I shall not object.

Mr. JONES. I shall be glad to accept that. I have talked with other members of the committee and with others interested.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

AMENDING THE NATURALIZATION LAWS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10274) to amend the act approved March 2, 1929, entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes" (45 Stat. 1512).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and I have an understanding about this bill. This bill should be passed over without prejudice, and I make that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is any progress being made on this bill in the other body, as was suggested by the gentleman two weeks or so ago?

Mr. JENKINS. We had a meeting of our committee this morning, and I understood the chairman to say that the omnibus bill had been reported to the Senate.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The committee is considering a new bill in respect to the registry act of 1924.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman believe that he will be able to get it out in time so that he can get some action upon it at this session of Congress?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I expect to have a vote in the committee on the new bill on Wednesday. The Senate committee has already reported the bill out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the bill go over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, could the present occupant of the chair inform the House at about what time it is purposed to call up suspensions to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that suspensions are to be taken up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the present occupant of the chair any information as to what bills will be moved for suspension?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair has not that information.

ADVANCES UNDER RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION ACT TO PRODUCERS OF LIVESTOCK AND DAIRY FARMERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10673) to provide that advances under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act may be made to producers of livestock and to dairy farmers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, as I said at the last hearing of the Consent Calendar, this bill, in my opinion, was passed at the last session of Congress, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

FINAL ENROLLMENT OF INDIANS ON KLAMATH INDIAN RESERVATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2671) providing for the final enrollment of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. JENKINS, and Mr. CLARKE of New York objected.

OBLIGATIONS TO ENROLLED INDIANS UNDER TRIBAL AGREEMENTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 409) to carry out certain obligations to certain enrolled Indians under tribal agreements.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, as I said when the bill was previously before the House, I believe we should have an amendment limiting the commissions or fees for attorneys collecting this money to 5 per cent. Otherwise I think it would be all attorneys and no Indians getting the benefit from this money.

Mr. HASTINGS. I indicated before that I did not object to a reasonable limitation. If the gentleman insists that it ought to be 5 per cent, very well. It is only for interest. It is not for the principal amount. There are no principal amounts involved here.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand.

Mr. HASTINGS. But if the gentleman thinks it ought to be limited to 5 per cent, I have no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will tell the gentleman why. There is very little legal work involved in this matter.

Mr. HASTINGS. And they are full-blood Indians; non-English speaking.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So we ought to protect them, and I think 5 per cent is sufficient.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, when this bill was last called on the Consent Calendar I requested that it go over for two weeks so that I be given an opportunity to give the matter further consideration. I have given more than passing attention to this bill, and I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] whether he would have any objection to striking out section 2 and inserting in lieu of section 2 the following:

Provided further, That no interest on such refunds shall be payable prior to the time fixed by law for the payment of interest in any such applicable cases.

Mr. HASTINGS. What would be the effect of that change?

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to be frank with the gentleman as to the purpose of the amendment. Prior to the revenue act of 1921 the Government in no instance allowed any interest on claims for refunds. Then we modified that law under the revenue act of 1924. Certainly it is not the intention of the author of this bill to grant to the Indians any different policy in the matter of payment of interest on their refunds than was accorded other taxpayers of the country.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman is correct. If the gentleman's amendment does no more than that, I have no objection to it. In other words, if it places these Indian wards in the same status as white people, I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD (reading):

Provided further, That no interest on such refunds shall be payable prior to the time fixed by law for the payment of interest in any such applicable cases.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] I will change the word "applicable" to "similar."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I find a report from the Secretary of the Interior and from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but where is the report from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue? How much will this cost?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no report from the Secretary of the Treasury. In fact this bill should have been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means rather than to the Committee on Indian Affairs, because it is a matter that affects the revenues of the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. How much is involved? Let us not go at it blindly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not a question of how much is involved. It is a question of giving these Indians interest on their refunds, the same as every other citizen is getting.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I fully agree with the gentleman, but still we should have some information as to whether it runs into the millions or whether it is only a small amount.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is a moral obligation, in any event.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think we should have some information as to how much money is involved before we proceed.

Mr. HASTINGS. It is only the interest on the refunds.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But where is it coming from?

Mr. HASTINGS. From the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But suppose there is no money in the Treasury?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, these are only small amounts. It is for the interest on the refunds.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Has the gentleman any idea how much it is?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not have the amount. Really, only small amounts are involved. They are not large, but I really do not know the exact amounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As the gentleman assures us only a small amount is involved, I shall not object. I think in the future in a matter of this kind we should have a report from the Treasury.

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 167

Resolved, etc., That any person duly enrolled as a member of an Indian tribe who received in pursuance of a tribal treaty or agreement with the United States an allotment of land which by the terms of said treaty or agreement was exempted partially or in total from taxation, and from which land the restrictions have been or have not been removed and who was required or permitted contrary to law to pay any illegal or unauthorized Federal inheritance tax or Federal income tax on the rents, royalties, or other gains arising from such allotted lands, and who under the law and rulings of the Treasury Department have secured a refund of the taxes so illegally or erroneously collected but who did not receive interest on such refunds in accordance with the laws and the regulations in force at the time the refund was secured and who have failed to file a claim for the allowance of such interest, shall be allowed one year after the approval of this act within which to file such claim, and if otherwise entitled thereto may recover such interest on such illegally collected taxes in the same manner and to the same extent as if such claims for interest had been theretofore duly filed as required by law, it not being the policy of the Government to invoke or plead a statute of limitations to escape the obligations of agreements solemnly entered into with its Indian wards: Provided, however, That in the case of the death of any person any such interest on the refund of illegal taxes paid by him or on his account may in like manner be claimed and recovered by the person or persons who would have received such money had it constituted a part of his estate at the time of his death.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are modified for the purpose, and only for the purpose, of carrying into effect the provisions hereof.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for me to offer an amendment first?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: At the end of section 1 of the Senate bill, insert the following:

"Provided further, That no interest on such refunds shall be payable prior to the time provided by law for the payment of interest in any such similar cases."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 2, line 21, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any person acting as attorney or agent for any claimant to receive more than a total of 5 per cent of the amount collected under the provisions of this act, and any person collecting a total amount from such claimant in excess of 5 per cent shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Strike out all of section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House resolution was laid on the table.

OSAGE NATION OF INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was S. 2352, an act amending the act entitled "An act authorizing the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in the civilization fund claim of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States," approved February 6, 1921 (41 Stat. 1097).

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1928

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the next business on the calendar, House Joint Resolution 416, a joint resolution to extend the time for filing claims under the settlement of war claims act of 1928, and for other purposes, was one I introduced. I have another bill now pending before the committee. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was S. 4029, an act to restore homestead rights in certain cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

There was no objection.

CLASSIFICATION OF COTTON

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Joint Resolution 434, a joint resolution to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to provide additional facilities for the classification of cotton under the United States cotton standards act, and for the dissemination of market-news information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this bill was last under consideration I asked the privilege of having it passed over so I could give more thorough consideration to the purport and ramifications of this bill. I wish to say to the author of the bill that I have spent considerable time in the further examination of this measure.

I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether the bill as framed will result in any increased charge on the Treasury of the United States in its administration?

Mr. FULMER. The Census Bureau only furnishes information as to the number of bales produced. The Agricultural Department furnishes various reports, crop planning and outlook reports. This information is about the type of cotton and staple, the advantages of longer staple and better grades.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the working of this bill it is intended to give the local grower the same advantages that are now extended to the large cotton merchants.

Mr. FULMER. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Such as the classifiers we have at the large ports. I can not see any reason why there should be any market-news dissemination in connection with the proposal.

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman it will be perfectly satisfactory to strike that provision from the bill, as the main object of the bill is to extend the benefits of grading to the actual producer of cotton.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is but one further inquiry and I will be through. The last paragraph and the last lines of the bill—may require any licensed sampler to give bond for the faithful performance of his duties and for the protection of persons affected thereby and may prescribe the conditions under which cotton shall be sampled by licensed samplers—

I call particular attention to what follows—

for the purpose of classification by officers of the Department of Agriculture.

What is the need of having this clause in here?

Mr. FULMER. These samplers will be directly under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture as classers are now serving these large cotton factors and large cotton merchants as well as the cooperatives.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it really necessary to have this supervision by these officers?

Mr. FULMER. It is very necessary for the reason that you want a check to see whether or not they are really sending in bona fide samples.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that the gentleman accepts the proposal as to the dissemination of market news, I, personally, will have no further objection, having conferred with a representative of the Department of Agriculture as to its operation and need.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman says this is not going to cost the Government anything.

Mr. FULMER. Not a cent.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Who pays the samplers?

Mr. FULMER. The cotton buyer and the cotton producer just as it is done now under the operation of the law with large cotton merchants and exporters.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In the closing days of the last session of Congress a resolution was introduced and passed authorizing a committee to make an investigation in the South, and we were assured it would not cost the Government a cent, but the committee has just made a report and urges an appropriation of $50,000 as a starter toward erecting a memorial. Will you be back later asking for money?

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman, if he will only take the time to read the hearings, all of that was brought out. The original bill provides that the expenses of cotton classifiers are to be paid by the cotton buyer. Under this bill it will be paid by the local cotton buyer and the producer, and the producer will have the same advantage the large cotton dealer and the cooperatives now enjoy. The service will be supported out of the fees collected and it will not be a direct charge upon the Treasury.

I will say to my friend that this is a most important bill for cotton farmers for the reason we have to improve the staple of our cotton to compete with foreign countries that are now improving their staple very much. The only way to induce farmers to grow longer staple is to pay the proper premium for same.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman assure us that this is not going to cost the Government any money? That you will not be back later?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, I take it the purpose of the bill is necessary; and if that is so, may I ask the gentleman why, in the last section, on page 3, he makes it discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture to prescribe the regulations under which licenses may be issued? If you are going to have these licenses, why do you not put the duty on the Secretary of Agriculture and say "shall" prescribe the regulations?

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman that in a great many important pieces of legislation that we pass upon here from time to time that I would be delighted to do that, because the regulations are usually left to some one who is to administer the act and very often they leave out of the picture the very man we want to help; but under the original act the Secretary of Agriculture has already promulgated rules and regulations covering the classifiers of cotton with these large dealers and I am sure the same thing would apply in this instance.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is satisfied that even a Secretary of Agriculture who was unfriendly to the purpose of the bill would not be able, under the language of the bill making it discretionary, to block the administration of the act?

Mr. FULMER. I think it would work perfectly satisfactory under this language.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I ask the gentleman if he is willing to strike out the poetry or window dressing or blah, otherwise known as the "whereas clauses"?

Mr. FULMER. It will be perfectly satisfactory to do that.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. With all due respect to the gentleman who is the author of the bill, under the language of the bill where it provides that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to issue a license to any person with no limit on it whatever and under the language on the next page where the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe a bond, I can not see, in view of this language, how the gentleman can say this will not be an expense on the Government.

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman that all of these classers have to stand a regular examination and pass the examination before a license is granted. In the meantime, under the provisions of the original act, if they find that such a classer is not properly classing cotton, they have the right to revoke his license and dismiss him from the service.

Mr. JENKINS. Why are there not plenty of licensed inspectors now?

Mr. FULMER. They have them where they pay salaries, but at a number of the interior points they would not be able to pay a cotton classer a salary, but they could agree to pay so much per bale, just like they pay for weighing cotton. They have now sworn weighers paid by the producers and the buyers.

Mr. JENKINS. Who pays for that?

Mr. FULMER. The farmer and the cotton buyer. Today farmers come to town with ⅞-inch cotton, or 1-inch cotton, or 1 1/16-inch cotton, and in many instances he receives a price as if it were all ⅞-inch cotton. After it passes into the hands of the large dealers that have cotton classers working under the regulations of the Department of Agriculture, they properly grade and staple every bale and allocate each lot of cotton as to grade and staple, and it is sold on the merits of its color and the length of its staple. I may say to the gentleman that is one reason we are not now growing the type of cotton we should grow. We are not giving to the farmer the benefit that the large dealer is getting. This bill simply extends to the farmer the same facilities as the larger cotton merchants and cotton exporters now have and it is to be paid for by the farmer and the cotton buyer. This will enable the farmer to know when he goes to sell his cotton whether it is ⅞-inch, 1-inch, or 1 1/16-inch staple.

May I state to the gentleman that there is a letter in the report from ex-Congressman Lever stating that under the workings of this bill, as shown by the certification by an expert sent to my State, his cotton being properly graded, that he received an extra $7.50 per bale, or a sufficient amount on his whole crop, as stated by him, to pay his taxes for that year.

Mr. JENKINS. Let me ask the gentleman what the Department of Agriculture or the business concern does that determines whether a man is a competent inspector? The language of the bill is that the Secretary can appoint anybody.

Mr. FULMER. He has to qualify under an examination.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And they must be qualified.

Mr. FULMER. Oh, they have to qualify by an examination.

Mr. PATTERSON. And I may say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] that they already have a set of qualifications in the department.

Mr. FULMER. And they have to take an examination.

Mr. JENKINS. Whom does the gentleman mean by "they"?

Mr. PATTERSON. Cotton classers.

Mr. JENKINS. If we are going to have a number of people appointed, it seems to me there would be thousands of people who would ask the Department of Agriculture to be appointed inspectors.

Mr. FULMER. Not at all, for the reason that they could not get work.

Mr. JENKINS. Who states they can not?

Mr. FULMER. If they can, then we would need them. They can not get a job until they are appointed and they can not be appointed until some one says that he will pay the amount necessary for the grading of the cotton.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As I understand, the expert fixes the classification on which the price is based.

Mr. FULMER. Yes; and may I state to the gentleman that the cotton sampler, under supervision of the Government and under bond, will submit a bona fide sample of cotton taken from the actual bale on which the inspection will be based and when the farmer takes his cotton to market he will then know whether he has ⅞-inch cotton or 1 1/16-inch cotton and is then in position to bargain with the buyer.

Mr. JENKINS. Do the hearings disclose whether there is any opposition to this bill?

Mr. FULMER. There is no opposition whatever. It has the approval of the Agriculture Department, the cooperatives, and every agricultural commission in the South.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Is the inspection service self-supporting?

Mr. FULMER. Absolutely.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the whereases.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to provide additional facilities for the classification of cotton under the United States cotton standards act, and for the dissemination of market-news information.

Whereas it is a practice in primary cotton markets in the United States for buyers to pay to growers prices for cotton calculated on the basis of the average quality of cotton sold in a given market at a given time without regard to differences in the quality, grade, and staple of particular bales; and

Whereas this method of buying cotton in primary markets in effect penalizes the producers of superior qualities of cotton and unduly rewards the producers of inferior qualities, thereby operating to discourage the production of cotton of the better qualities and to encourage the production of cotton of inferior qualities, thus resulting in decreased incomes to cotton growers; and

Whereas the extension of facilities for correct classification of cotton in producers' markets and the dissemination to growers of market information relative to the commercial values of cotton of different qualities will promote more equitable practices in producers' markets and afford protection to the quality of the American cotton crop from the depressing influences of present marketing practices: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be requested to extend to cotton growers facilities for the classification of cotton authorized in the United States cotton standards act of March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. L. 1517), with such supervision of licensed classifiers as he shall deem necessary, and to increase the dissemination of market-news information now carried on under authority of the United States cotton futures act.

SEC. 2. Further to carry out the purposes of the said United States cotton standards act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to issue to any person, upon presentation of satisfactory evidence of competency, a license to sample cotton. Any such license may be suspended or revoked by the Secretary of Agriculture whenever he is satisfied that such licensee is incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly sampled cotton improperly, or has violated any provision of said act or the regulations thereunder so far as the same may relate to him, or has used his license, or allowed it to be used, for any improper purpose. The Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe by regulation the conditions under which licenses may be issued hereunder, and may require any licensed sampler to give bond for the faithful performance of his duties and for the protection of persons affected thereby and may prescribe the conditions under which cotton shall be sampled by licensed samplers for the purpose of classification by officers of the Department of Agriculture, or by licensed cotton classifiers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "necessary," strike out the words "and to increase the dissemination of market-news information now carried on."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I rise in opposition to the amendment. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to speak, out of order, for five minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, I think that the policy of the Speaker, when we are calling the Consent Calendar, is to refuse requests to speak out of order. I am not going to object, but I do not think that the gentleman should ask for such permission. I hope the gentleman will let us proceed with the calendar.

Mr. PATMAN. I will say that this is very important.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GATHERING OF WALL STREET BANKERS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, last night in New York there was a remarkably large gathering of Wall Street men. They were addressed by a distinguished Member of another body. I want to read to you some statements that he is reported to have made. I am quoting:

The financial policies of America originate right here in this great city; the heads of these powerful banks (meaning the New York Federal Reserve Bank and other great banks of New York City), together with the economic and financial advisers, have as a practical proposition Washington and the Congress as their agents * * *. To-day the Government at Washington is only one of the clients of this unified and powerful aggregation. A nod and a whisper by the powers mentioned can turn the tide and reverse the process of deflation and depression * * *. Bankers of New York, I plead with you to face the facts, meet the issue, permit the Nation to live * * *. I come to New York, the Nation's metropolis, to present the facts and to reason with you—you and you alone, who can give the order.

These statements are self-explanatory. A sad state of affairs.

INVESTIGATION

Mr. BLANTON. What is the name of the man who addressed the assemblage?

Mr. PATMAN. Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma. That statement, in connection with the statement recently published by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, and in connection with the statement made by Senator CARTER GLASS on May 10 of last year, I believe is a sufficient basis for an investigation.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

The Democratic platform of 1932 contains this provision:

We condemn paid lobbyists of special interests to influence Members of Congress and other public servants by personal contact.

Between now and the special session of the Seventy-third Congress we should get the information that will be necessary to form a basis for a proposed law to carry out that platform pledge.

SENATOR THOMAS RIGHT

Now, Senator THOMAS was exactly right. I do not mean to say that they are bribing Members of Congress. I do not know a Member of either body that I believe can be bribed. I have confidence in Members of both the House and the Senate on both sides of the aisle. The investigating committee that I propose can obtain and publish all the facts.

BANKER CONTROL

Wall Street international bankers are running the country. Members of Congress are responsible for this condition because the power is not taken away from them. These powerful bankers control the money and credit supply. The Constitution of the United States says that Congress shall coin money and regulate its value. This privilege has been farmed out to these few bankers. Congress is entitled to be criticized as long as this condition prevails.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF 1932

We have time to look into this matter for the purpose of getting the information that will be helpful in enacting such legislation as may be necessary to correct existing evils and to carry out the intent of the Democratic platform of 1932.

CREDIT OF NATION USED FOR FOREIGNERS

The credit of this Nation should not be used to finance exportations or importations of goods between foreign countries that do not touch the United States at all. Nevertheless, that is true.

I invite attention to the last Federal Reserve Bulletin, on page 18. You will find there that the Federal reserve banks are furnishing on goods stored in foreign countries or shipped between foreign countries more than a quarter of a billion dollars a month to finance those transactions. The banks should not be allowed to use the credit, which is a mortgage upon the homes of all of the people, and all of the property of this Nation, to finance foreigners in competition with our own people. International bankers are going to get us into plenty of trouble and cause the American people to suffer more misery and distress if not prevented by Congress.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman is going to start an investigation along certain lines to see why the Democrats have not carried out their platform promises, why does he not put in the whole list?

Mr. PATMAN. That is not the object of it. I am confident that an earnest effort will be made to carry out platform promises.

Mr. SNELL. I assume from the gentleman's statement that that is part of it. Why not put all the promises in?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include in the extension of my remarks the resolution which I have introduced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution is as follows:

House Joint Resolution 590

To provide for an investigation of certain charges of lobbying, influencing of the Congress and Members thereof, to obtain information to be used as a basis for legislation, and for other purposes

Whereas last night, Monday, February 6, 1933, there was assembled in New York City the largest gathering of Wall Street men in recent years for the purpose of hearing prominent statesmen discuss the restoration of prosperity and currency expansion; and

Whereas said audience was addressed by United States Senator, the Hon. ELMER THOMAS of Oklahoma, and in the course of his address he stated: "The financial policies of America originate right here in this great city; the heads of these powerful banks (meaning the New York Federal Reserve Bank and other great banks of New York City), together with the economic and financial advisers, have as a practical proposition Washington and the Congress as their agents. * * * To-day the Government at Washington is only one of the clients of this unified and powerful financial aggregation. A nod and a whisper by the powers mentioned can turn the tide and reverse the process of deflation and depression. * * * Bankers of New York, I plead with you to face the facts, meet the issue, permit the Nation to live. * * * I come to New York, the Nation's metropolis, to present the facts and to reason with you—you, and you alone, who can give the order "; and

Whereas on the 10th day of May, 1932, United States Senator, the Hon. CARTER GLASS, of Virgina, speaking on the subject of the opposition of certain bankers to proposed legislation, stated, "They hired a skillful and persuasive professional lobbyist and paid him a salary to come here to Washington—and worse than that, they hired some Congressmen, to my positive documentary knowledge "; and

Whereas on the 3d day of February, 1933, Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate, David S. Barry, published in a magazine, which had been widely distributed, the following statement:

"Contrary, perhaps, to the popular belief there are not many crooks in Congress—that is, out-and-out grafters—or those who are willing to be such. There are not many Senators or Representatives who sell their votes for money, and it is pretty well known who those few are "; and

Whereas it is believed by a large number of citizens of the United States that there has grown up in Washington and in the Nation an insidious lobbying system that is controlling unwittingly and otherwise Members of the United States Congress; that it is their belief that said lobbying activities are (a) designed for the purpose of creating more special privileges for a few people; (b) to use the credit of our Nation for the benefit of foreigners in order that they themselves may profit; (c) to perpetuate a spirit of internationalism destructive to American ideals, principles, and traditions; (d) to hinder and discourage the teaching in public schools, colleges, and universities the science of money; (e) to force low wages; (f) cheap commodities; (g) branch banking; (h) the use of the Government's credit for a few people in order that the masses may be compelled to pay tribute to them; and (i) to obtain cancellation of war debts; and

Whereas all lobbying activities affecting the United States Government should be fully and thoroughly investigated at once for the purpose of determining the truthfulness or falsity of said assertions and beliefs. Further, legislation should be enacted that will prevent paid lobbyists of special interests from influencing or attempting to influence Members of Congress or other public servants by personal contact. Further, open hearings before a committee should be held in an investigation of these charges and the people fully advised to what extent and manner, if at all, Members of Congress are influenced or persuaded against the public interests by said lobbyists, and make such reports and recommendations as said committee may think proper touching all matters and phases in connection with the subjects hereinbefore mentioned: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee which shall be composed of three Members of the Senate appointed by the President of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker. Members of the committee shall be appointed from among Members of the present Congress who will be Members of the Seventy-third Congress. The committee shall select its own chairman.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to conduct an investigation of all assertions, charges, statements, and alleged beliefs hereinbefore and to obtain such information and carry out the purposes and objects expressed in preceding paragraphs.

SEC. 3. The committee shall report to the Senate and House of Representatives not later than 15 days subsequent to the first day of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress the results of its investigations, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act during the sessions and recesses of the present Congress and the Seventy-third Congress at such times and places, to hold such hearings, to employ such experts and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary. Oaths and affirmations may be administered by any member of the committee.

SEC. 5. Subpœnas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes shall be applicable to any person summoned as a witness under the authority of this resolution in the same manner as such provisions are applicable to any person summoned as a witness in the case of an inquiry before a committee of the Senate.

SEC. 6. The expenses of the committee, not to exceed $25,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved and signed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULMER: Page 2, line 13, after the word "any," insert the word "qualified."

The amendment was agreed to and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment to the title offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Amend the title, after the word "act" in the third line of the title, by striking out "and for the dissemination of market news information."

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TO STABILIZE LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11816) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, for the reason that this is one of the bills the Speaker intends to recognize for suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. An amendment has been prepared, which I would like to have the Clerk read at the present time, and probably when it is read, the several objections on the floor will be disposed of.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the amendment be offered when the motion is made to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. It will be incorporated in the bill by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I notice that a portion of the title states "to stabilize the livestock industry." Does the gentleman want to stabilize the livestock industry with the present price of cattle and pork at almost nothing?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I had nothing to do with the writing of the title. This is simply for the purpose of providing for a new bureau in the Department of the Interior to look after the grazing of the public domain.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and ask unanimous consent that the proposed amendment may be read, because some of us would like to think about it in the meantime.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that the amendment be read?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, after line 8, insert a new section to be known as section 13, to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That this act shall not become effective in any State until 60 days after the approval by the legislature of such State affirmatively accepting its operation; and each such approving State, in its discretion, may designate and authorize one or more representatives or officials of said State with whom the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make and enter into suitable agreements for the cooperative administration of public grazing upon said public lands of the United States, and the lands owned by, or subject to the control of said State or any political subdivision thereof, which shall be subject to such rules and regulations as shall be agreed upon and promulgated by both the Secretary of the Interior and said State."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, there is one more amendment also.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 16, strike out the word "valuable."

RELIEF OF DISTRESS DUE TO UNEMPLOYMENT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12097) for the relief of distress due to unemployment, to create a committee for Federal, State, and local cooperation in placing qualified unemployed persons on unoccupied farms for the purpose of growing subsistence food crops during the continuance of the unemployment emergency.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

READJUSTMENT OF LEASE OF POST-OFFICE GARAGE, BOSTON, MASS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 88) to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, when this bill was last considered, I asked that the bill be passed over without prejudice so that I might be able to get the views of the Post Office Department and prepare necessary amendments. A Member objected to that request and I was forced to object to the bill.

I have conferred with the author of the bill and I have also conferred with representatives of the Post Office Department. The Post Office Department is opposed to this bill in its present form. This bill is directory, not discretionary. It directs the Postmaster General to modify the terms of the lease. My proposed amendments are as follows:

In lieu of the word "directed," on page 1, line 3, insert the word "authorized."

Then on page 2, line 1, insert a comma after the word "rental," and insert the word "the" after the word "and." In line 2, strike out "from the date of the lease," and insert the following: "under lease from the date of the enactment of this act but not in excess." Insert after the word "options" the following, "not in excess of." So that the last clause will read—to readjust the rental and purchase options in the existing lease by increasing the annual rental under the lease from the date of the enactment of this act but not in excess of $7,500, and by increasing the purchase options not in excess of $75,000.

That was agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Foss] when I submitted that to him after the consideration of the bill at the last session of the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman insists on that we will accept it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will have to insist on that very strenuously, because I would not allow a bill to pass this Congress which violated the established policy that we change the rental back to the date the lease was entered into. So that with that understanding, and with it being acceptable to the author of the bill, I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the Congress, as the gentleman knows, has authorized the construction of certain post-office buildings, with a maximum limit on the amount to be expended. The Congress has appropriated money for it. The Congress has authorized the President to designate the buildings which shall be built first on an emergency basis. The President has designated a number of them. There are a number of others not yet designated. An attempt elsewhere is not being made to cut off all of those buildings which have not been designated up to this time. They are cutting off many of them. They are restricting the appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman understands this has already been constructed, does he not?

Mr. BLANTON. I understand this is one of them, but there is a provision in this bill to increase the cost $75,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In the rent.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, $75,000 is as much as has been authorized for quite a number of buildings in quite a number of cities. In other words, all certain cities get is $75,000. When another body is cutting off appropriations for buildings which have already been authorized, and which are awaiting designation by the President, is it just to those cities to come here and increase another city $75,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit? May I have a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, under reservation of objection? I took occasion to go thoroughly into the merits of this proposal because it is rather out of the ordinary. What are the facts?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Regular order is demanded. The regular order is, is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are required. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection comes too late. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we must not move too fast when objections come before a bill is called. If the Speaker does not see the gentleman, it is not our fault. We are working here trying to preserve this calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] did not rise until after the Chair had announced that there were only two objections. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is hereby directed, because of the conditions encountered in the performance of the contract for the construction and lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and the modifications made in said building from the original specifications, during the course of construction, to meet the aforesaid conditions and to provide a larger and better building than was required under the original contract and specifications; to readjust the rental and purchase options in the existing lease by increasing the annual rental from the date of the lease $7,500 and by increasing the purchase options $75,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Line 3, page 1, strike out the word "directed" and insert the word "authorized."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 1, after the word "rental," insert a comma; and, after the word "and," insert the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer a further amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 2, in line 2, strike out the words "from the date of the lease," and insert in lieu thereof the words "under lease from the date of the enactment of this act, but not in excess."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 3, line 3, after the word "options," insert the words "not in excess."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. This garage was erected by a private owner at an expense of over $200,000 above the original specifications as prescribed by the Post Office Department. In constructing the building he was confronted with rather unstable foundations and had to go right down to bedrock.

The Post Office Department also requested at his suggestion in order to save expense that instead of the basement's being made serviceable for postal needs, as was embodied in the original specifications, he erect an additional story to the building. After the additional story was erected the Post Office Department requested that he also put the basement in condition for use. This required waterproofing.

For the additional work of constructing the fourth story and waterproofing the basement the Post Office Department made an estimate of $77,000 as to the cost. An estimate for this work, made by Senator BLAINE's committee which investigated this matter, was $75,000. Senator BLAINE, who, as chairman of the committee investigating leases of the Post Office Department, gave special attention to this matter, has, as I have been informed, agreed to these amendments making it mandatory that the increased rental should date from the date of the lease, which is five years ago. I understand these gentlemen here are going to insist that these amounts will not be effective, at least as to rentals, until the date of the enactment of the act. If this amendment is agreed to, the Government can exercise its option to purchase within the 10-year period or within the renewal period of 10 years, and if they do so it will be at a cost not in excess of $75,000; and if they exercise their option they will get at least $125,000 more value instead of the estimate that was made two years ago.

I think this is an exceptional case. I understand the Post Office Department is in favor of leaving it discretionary with the Postmaster General to increase this rental.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is reasonable that the contractor be compensated for building the story which was not included in the specifications, but I do not think the contractor deserves any consideration for the extra work involved in the foundation, for that is something he should have known about.

Mr. STAFFORD. And on the basis of $75,000 we are not compensating him for the extra cost involved in going down to bedrock. We are compensating him only for the additional story not included in the specifications and for the waterproofing of the basement. Seventy-five thousand dollars is below the estimate of the special agent of the Senate committee.

Mr. SNELL. This matter is left discretionary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Absolutely. I have made this statement in view of the statement of the gentleman from Texas. I do not think he had all the facts in this case.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to know the gentleman from Wisconsin is trying to go along with Senator BLAINE.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is following me when he adopts these provisions making it discretionary with the Government and striking out the mandatory requirement.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONTRACTORS ON PUBLIC-BUILDING PROJECTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9921) to require contractors on public-building projects to name their subcontractors, material men, and supply men, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the bills that is to be recognized under suspension. Therefore I ask that it be passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DEATH GRATUITY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6734) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize payment of six months' death gratuity to dependent relatives of officers, enlisted men, or nurses whose death results from wounds or disease not resulting from their own misconduct," approved May 22, 1928.

Mr. JENKINS, Mr. LAGUARDIA, and Mr. BLANTON objected.

NAVAL RESERVE AND MARINE CORPS RESERVE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5329) to amend section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve," as amended by the act of March 2, 1929.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1087; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 785), entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve," as amended by the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1477; U. S. C., Supp. IV, title 34, sec. 785), be, and the same is hereby, further amended by deleting from the second proviso of the act of March 2, 1929, the words "transferred thereto prior to July 1, 1925," so that said proviso will read as follows:

"Provided further, That any pay which may be due any member of the Fleet Naval Reserve shall be forfeited when so ordered by the Secretary of the Navy upon the failure, under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, of such member to report for inspection."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NAVY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5352) to provide for the better administration of justice in the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 92, to amend an act entitled, "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, and acts in amendment thereof.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am constrained to object to the consideration of this bill because it strikes me there is a new policy involved here. However, I should like the gentleman from New York or the proponent of the bill to explain it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this bill was in our committee, and I may say that all this bill does is to allow a totally disabled employee of the Government, who is totally disabled by being totally blind or by having lost both hands or both feet or by being paralyzed and unable to walk, an additional $50 a month. We follow this course in the case of veterans, and anyone will readily see that a person who is injured to the extent of being totally blind or having lost both hands or both feet, requires the services of an assistant, and this $50 a month would allow him such an assistant; otherwise, he could not live on the maximum allowed for total disability under the law.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is an employee of the Government. Suppose the gentleman had not had military service and should become totally blind or lose both arms or both legs, even though he has been a valuable Congressman, one of the most valuable we have ever had here, the Government would not pay him a cent. They would not only not pay him for an attendant but would not pay him anything at all. There was a time when the Government did not pay employees who got hurt anything. They extended this to them as a gratuity for which the Government was not liable in law. Now you are proposing to extend this for an attendant at $50 a month.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There was a time when the sovereign could take a subject out and shoot him if he were tired of him.

Mr. BLANTON. That is quite foreign to this matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We are progressing all the time.

Mr. BLANTON. I know, and my friend from New York has such a big, warm heart that, if he could, he would pay $100 a month to every widow of the United States who is 60 years of age. He would pay every orphan child, regardless of what service his father may have rendered, $100 a month out of the Treasury, because he is kind-hearted. I would, too, if it were my money and I could spare it; but this is the people's tax money, and until we stop extending these provisions, until we stop passing the buck along and giving public money to everybody for whom we have sympathy, we never will get the Budget of this country balanced, and we will never restore confidence among the people.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

UINTAH, WHITE RIVER, AND UNCOMPAHGRE BANDS OF UTE INDIANS OF UTAH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12651, for the relief of the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians of Utah, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am constrained to object to this bill for the reason the departments are not in favor of it.

Mr. COLTON. The departments are in favor of the bill. The only objection comes from the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word about this bill. I want to call the attention of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] to the report on this bill.

I believe in all of my 14 years in this House this report is the most outrageous, brazen disregard of the rights of the Indians I have ever seen exhibited in any report.

They are entitled to this relief. This money was paid to them for their land. It is a treaty between the Indians and the Government, and it is their money, and for the Government to say that paying money that belongs to the Indians and was paid for their land is contrary to the financial program of the administration, is dishonest.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read the report differently from the gentleman from New York. I read the report as recommending the passage of this bill, under this language——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I refer to the last section of the memorandum of the assistant commissioner.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me read the last sentence of the first paragraph of the memorandum:

> This bill is for the purpose of placing said money to the credit of the individual Indians entitled, and to authorize the use of same for beneficial purposes for such Indians. This disposition of the money, as set forth in section 2 of the bill, is believed to be of much more benefit to them than to pay same out in cash per capita payments, either in one payment or over a period of years, as the general experience has been that cash per capita payments are frittered away without any permanent benefit.

There is a direct recommendation of the provisions of the bill by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And will the gentleman read this language:

> This proposed legislation is desired when it can be accomplished in order that the benefits to the Indians therein provided for may be carried into effect. However, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised that it would not be in accord at this time with the financial program of the President.

This is what I object to.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the assistant commissioner in his prefatory statement says the bill is very commendable in its provisions, and then he winds up by surrendering to the Director of the Budget.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what I object to.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gravamen of the letter from the assistant commissioner is that he is in favor of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then let us pass it.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor under a reservation of objection, and I am sorry I have precipitated so much oratory by these two distinguished gentlemen. However, this proves my contention that this report is ambiguous. I am not thoroughly acquainted with what the measure proposes to do, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] to explain the purpose of the bill.

Mr. COLTON. The Bureau of Indian Affairs is favorable to the bill. The only objection is that pointed out by the gentleman from New York as coming from the Director of the Budget.

In 1905, nearly 30 years ago, the Uintah Reservation was opened to settlement, and a million acres of that reservation were taken from the Indians and put into the forest reserve. These lands have been there ever since. We passed a bill paying them $1.25 an acre for that land, and the money is in the United States Treasury now and belongs to the Indians.

Mr. JENKINS. How long has it been there?

Mr. COLTON. As I remember, about two years.

Mr. JENKINS. What is the controversy?

Mr. COLTON. There is no controversy. The Director of the Budget said when the bill came to him that it was contrary to the President's financial policy.

Mr. JENKINS. It was technically against the policy but not actually.

Mr. COLTON. We have appropriated the money, and this directs the way that it shall be paid to the Indians.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the total funds on deposit to the credit of the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians, arising under the provisions of the act of February 13, 1931 (46 Stat. 192), including the accrued-interest thereon, and cause the total sum to be paid in pro rata shares to all members of the said Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians who were alive and entitled to enrollment with such Indians on February 13, 1931: Provided, That the said Secretary, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall cause the shares of all Indians, including minors, to be deposited as individual Indian money in banks bonded and designated as depositaries for individual Indian moneys, to remain subject to disbursement for the benefit of the Indians entitled thereto as are other individual Indian moneys under existing laws.

SEC. 2. The funds when so deposited to the credit of each individual Indian shall become immediately available for the purpose of improving their lands, the erection of suitable homes, the purchasing of building material, farming equipment, livestock, feed, food, seed, grain, tools, machinery, implements, household goods, bedding, clothing, and any other equipment or supplies necessary to enable the Indians to fit themselves for or to engage in farming, livestock industry, or such other pursuits or avocations as will enable them to become self-supporting under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for their actual benefit and welfare: Provided, That in cases of the aged, infirm, decrepit, or incapacitated members their shares may be used for their proper maintenance and support in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. The funds deposited to the credit of minors, under authority of this act, may be invested or expended in the same manner and for the same purposes as are herein provided for the adults: Provided, That where the funds of any minor are invested or expended it shall be done with the consent of the parents and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. In no event shall any of this money become liable, payable, or subject to any debt or debts contracted prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVING EXISTING DISCRIMINATIONS TO CERTAIN LAND GRANTS

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4165) to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and to subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the land-grant railroad heretofore operated and now being operated between the stations of Hastings and Ortonville, in the State of Minnesota, the land-grant railroad heretofore operated and now being operated between the stations of Houston and Airlie, in the State of Minnesota, the land-grant railroad heretofore operated and now being operated between the stations of Humboldt and Junction City, in the State of Kansas, and the land-grant railroad heretofore operated and now being operated between the stations of Jonesville and Mackinaw City, in the State of Michigan, shall hereafter receive compensation for transportation of property and troops of the United States at the same rate as is paid to land-grant railroads organized under the land grant act of March 3, 1863, and the act of July 2, 1866 (ch. 278): Provided, That the Congress hereby reserves the right at any time by law to prescribe such charges as it deems advisable for such Government transportation.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "between the stations of Humboldt and" and in lieu thereof insert "from a point about 4 miles south of Humboldt through the station thereof to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GRAZING AND RANGE DEVELOPMENT IN CUSTER COUNTY, IDAHO

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill, H. R. 13559, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a cooperative agreement or agreements with the State of Idaho and private owners of lands within the State of Idaho, for grazing and range development, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FRENCH. Reserving the right to object, I want to make a brief statement to the House. This bill was reported to the House by the Committee on the Public Lands on January 10. Following the report to the House by the committee, the Secretary of the Interior made a second report on the bill, under date of January 11, in which he reported adversely, and consequently that report does not appear in the report of the Public Lands Committee.

I feel it is due to the House to make this statement and to incorporate this sentence from the Secretary's report dated January 11, 1933.

After reciting the outline that I have made, Secretary Wilbur continues:

I stated that if Congress desired to proceed with consideration of special legislation, however, I would have no objection. Since that time it has become apparent that a number of other special bills would probably be subject to some consideration, and I believe it desirable to dispose of these matters by one bill only. Pending action on H. R. 11816, therefore, it is recommended that consideration of H. R. 13559 be deferred.

In view of that statement, and in view of the plan to take up this afternoon the bill to which the Secretary refers, H. R. 11816, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 13559 be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LOCAL COOPERATION IN PROSECUTION OF WATERWAY IMPROVEMENTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Joint Resolution 553, amending provisions in river and harbor laws relating to local cooperation in the prosecution of waterway improvements.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I ask unanimous consent that this go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I see the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors coming into the Chamber.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DONATION OF PROPERTY IN MAXWELL, NEBR., FOR FEDERAL BUILDING PURPOSES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10749) to authorize acceptance of proposed donation of property in Maxwell, Nebr., for Federal building purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest an amendment on page 1, line 5, after the word "Israel" by inserting the words "in fee absolute."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I presume that the donor could do that, but I do not know that he could absolutely. Let me recite the facts. The gentleman who is making this donation is an elderly man, who has for many years been drawing a pension from the Federal Government on account of his military service. He is making this donation of a brick building, with a concrete vault, in good condition, without any strings to it, merely as an expression of his gratitude for what the Government has done for him. The building was formerly occupied by a bank and is now being occupied by the United States Government for post-office purposes. We are paying an annual rental for this building. Of course, the donor can convey only such title as he has. What that title is I do not know, but out of the goodness of his heart, and out of gratitude for services which have been performed in his behalf and benefits rendered to him, he wants to give this building to the Government. Personally I do not want to make the burden any greater upon him than is necessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For instance, is he married?

Mr. STAFFORD. What difference would it make whether he is married or is single?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. His wife, if he is married, would have to join in the deed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no question but that he will give a good title.

Mr. LANHAM. The matter to which the gentleman from New York has just referred would depend upon the laws of Nebraska. I am not familiar with them. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], who introduced the bill, can probably give information respecting that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, the bank was bought by Mr. Israel from our State banking department as a part of the assets of the failed bank. So far as I know, he has a fee simple title. A warranty deed has been deposited with the Treasury for several months to the property from him to the Government, so that there is no question about it. He has even gone so far as to keep up the taxes since he has given the deed to the Government. I think the title is clear. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that it is the intention to give to the Government a fee simple title to the property. The gentleman might complicate the situation by the insertion of the language which he suggests.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the Government has already given so very much westward to Nebraska, and as this is the first time that I know of where anything has come eastward from Nebraska to the Government, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. SIMMONS. I assume the gentleman is not referring to Members of Congress.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Without in any way intending to reflect upon this gift, we all know from our experience as legislators that very often we receive gifts and then find that we have taken over a lot of liens, incumbrances, and complications with them. Of course, I am not referring to this particular case when I say that, but I think it is our duty to inquire when a gift is made, because we have had some very sad experiences from the early days down, from the time of the Dawson Springs matter in Kentucky up to this moment. If the gentleman says that he knows from his own knowledge that a warranty deed is given and that it is a fee absolute, it is all right with me, but I think we should get a fee title and not a lawsuit.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know what the condition of the title is. I do know that the deed has been delivered, because that went through my office before the bill was introduced. The bill itself was drafted by the department and not by my office. They have examined the building, and it is their desire to take it over. The Post Office Department is now using it, and the intention is to give to the Government a completely clear title. If it should develop that that is not existing, there is no obligation on the part of the Government to accept title.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. It is not any kind of a homestead or susceptible of being made a homestead, as I understand, but is a store building?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is a bank building.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, with that statement I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to accept on behalf of the United States the donation by Mr. C. J. Israel of his property in Maxwell, Nebr., for Federal building purposes; being a cross section of lots Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, block 22, original town, facing east on Pine Street and having dimensions of 26 by 96 feet, together with the 1-story bank building now located thereon; that said property shall be used and operated as are other public buildings, and that the annual appropriations for the general maintenance of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department shall be construed to be available for use in connection with said property as for other buildings under said department; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to be used for the purpose of altering, repairing, and reconditioning said building to make same available for use as a post office.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONTROL OF BUILDING NO. 2, CUSTOMHOUSE RESERVATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13521) to transfer control of building No. 2 on the customhouse reservation at Nome, Alaska, to the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to propose a minor objection in line 4, to strike out the words "permanent jurisdiction of the." It is simply a transfer from one secretary to the other.

I withdraw the reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to transfer to the permanent jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, for such use as he may deem desirable, a plot of land, together with improvements thereon, included in the United States customs reservation in the city of Nome, Alaska, and particularly described as follows: Beginning at a point 91.8 feet south 43° 46' west from corner south No. 2 of said reservation, thence north 70° west a distance of 63 feet, thence south 20° west a distance of 42.5 feet, thence south 70° east a distance of 58.1 feet, thence north 26° 32' east a distance of 42.8 feet to the point of beginning, such boundaries embracing an area of 2,573 square feet.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "permanent jurisdiction of the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF AMMUNITION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12047) to provide for the transfer of powder and other explosive materials from deteriorated and unserviceable ammunition under the control of the War Department to the Department of Agriculture for use in land clearing, drainage, road building, and other agricultural purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, the purpose of the bill, as far as I am concerned, is quite proper, and the report states the specific purposes that these explosives are to be used for; but there is nothing in the bill that limits the Secretary of Agriculture to disposing of the explosives in the manner indicated. I would suggest an amendment which I have prepared, as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the letters "ture," insert the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall use said explosive material and unserviceable ammunition solely for distribution through the agriculture colleges of the several States, the same to be reconditioned and distributed only to the farmers of the cut-off timberland areas of the country at actual cost."

That is the wording of the report.

Mr. PEAVEY. As the author of the bill, I have no objection whatever to the gentleman's proposed amendment. I will say, however, to the gentleman and to the Members of the House that while the language of the bill does not specifically direct or limit the Department of Agriculture as to how or where they shall dispose of the explosives, this bill simply reenacts in principle what was the statutory law from 1920 to 1928. Under that administration no question ever came up as to the explosives being distributed to any other than the purpose named in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I remember some years ago that some so-called surplus material called junk got into the hands of some of our southerly neighbors and there was a great deal of comment about it at the time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEAVEY. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of enlarging and extending the bureaus of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. PEAVEY. May I answer the gentleman in this way——

Mr. BLANTON. Well, yes or no.

Mr. PEAVEY. Well, that question will hardly permit a yes or no answer.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am ready to answer that I am not willing. Under the present existing law the War Department can sell any surplus material which it has on hand, or any junk material. If the Department of Agriculture needs this material for building and constructing roads it has the right to buy it from the War Department with the funds that we give them, and let those funds be accounted for in the relative manner in which we provide for the expending of Government money, with State money, for that purpose. I am not willing to enlarge the activities of the Department of Agriculture any further, and I object, Mr. Speaker.

TIME OF HOLDING COURT IN EASTERN DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13655) to amend the act of May 10, 1928, entitled "An act to provide for the times and places for holding court for the eastern district of North Carolina" (45 Stat. 495).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 10, 1928, entitled "An act to provide for the times and places for holding court for the eastern district of North Carolina" (45 Stat. 495), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the terms of the District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina shall be held at Durham on the first Mondays in March and September; at Raleigh a 1-week civil term on the second Mondays in March and September, and a criminal term only on the second Monday after the fourth Monday in April and October; at Fayetteville on the third Mondays in March and September; at Elizabeth City on the fourth Monday in March and the first Monday in October; at Washington on the first Monday in April and the fourth Monday in September; at New Bern on the second Mondays in April and October; at Wilson on the third Mondays in April and October; and at Wilmington a 2-week term on the fourth Mondays in April and October: Provided, That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1928: And provided further, That at Wilson and Durham it shall be made incumbent upon each place to provide suitable facilities for holding the courts."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SCHOOL BUILDING AT FRAZER, MONT.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7532) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Frazer, Mont., in the completion of the high-school building there to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it appears that this bill has an unfavorable report from the department. It calls for the expenditure of money. It involves a departure, and unless the proponent of the bill can convince me, I am constrained to object to it.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes. I yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. It does not involve any departure from established practice. The only objection that is raised by the department to this bill and the next bill on the calendar is that they involve the expenditure of money at this time. The department is favorable to the policy that is involved here, and has reported favorably in the past on identical bills. This bill and the one following have both passed the Senate. The report of the department was to the effect that they were not fully informed as to the details, but the report was made about a year ago, and I have visited both of those schools since and know of the great need at both Frazier and Wolf Point.

Last fall I visited these schools personally.

Mr. BLANTON. We have already given this school $25,000.

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes; at Frazier, but nothing at Wolf Point.

Mr. BLANTON. This gives them an additional $15,000 for completing this school building.

Mr. LEAVITT. For the completion of the building.

Mr. BLANTON. With $25,000 now available they should be able, considering present reduced prices, to construct a $50,000 building with the contributing share of the local authorities.

Mr. LEAVITT. They had to pass a special bond issue. They are in the middle of an Indian reservation with a very small amount of taxable property. They have not been able to finance the building.

Mr. BLANTON. What fees did they have to pay the agents or bankers for cashing those bonds?

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not think they paid anything. It was handled through a local bank there, I believe.

Mr. BLANTON. What did the bank charge them?

Mr. LEAVITT. I understand it was handled by a man who was a member of the school board.

Mr. BLANTON. What did they get for the bonds?

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. The usual trouble in such cases is that the bonds are sold too low, and too much is paid for incidental expenses in connection with the sale of the bonds.

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not think that was so in this case.

Mr. JENKINS. They already have received $25,000 from the Government.

Mr. LEAVITT. I so stated, but they are unable to raise by another special bond issue through taxation the remaining amount necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the reason they are calling upon the Government for an additional $15,000 for this purpose? And will the gentleman further inform the House how much it was originally estimated the building would cost?

Mr. LEAVITT. About $65,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. The original estimate was $50,000. Congress contributed one-half of that. Now the gentleman is asking the United States to contribute $15,000 more, to contribute four-fifths of the entire expense.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have both this bill and the next one marked for objection.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9064) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Wolf Point, Mont., in the extension of the public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this would appropriate an additional $50,000. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ROOSEVELT ISLAND

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14228) to change the name of "Roosevelt Island" to "Theodore Roosevelt Island."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have some explanation from the author of this bill as to why it is necessary to change the name at this time.

Mr. JENKINS. Were the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] here, he could inform the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think we better let this go over until we can be informed of the history of the case.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think I can explain the matter to him. Originally this island was known as Analostan Island. It was accepted by Congress as the site for a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt. Now that Franklin D. Roosevelt has become the President elect, and in order to make certain that the dedication of the island is to the proper Roosevelt, they want to change the name from Roosevelt Island as it was originally designated to "Theodore Roosevelt Island."

Mr. JENKINS. I hope with that understanding the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LEAVITT. That is the situation.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I think the gentleman from New York fully understands that the Theodore Roosevelt Association sponsored this memorial and secured contributions making it possible. That is the reason they want the name changed, that it may be dedicated to the man Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that the present great Roosevelt is fully appreciative of the valuable characteristics of the former great Roosevelt and would himself approve this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, if the island is named Theodore Roosevelt Island, it may be an inspiration for the new Roosevelt to wield the big stick on certain predatory interests; and if that can happen, I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope he will wield the big stick.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt, approved May 21, 1932 (Public, No. 146, 72d Cong.), be amended as follows:

That wherever the name "Roosevelt Island" appears in sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act it shall be stricken out and the name "Theodore Roosevelt Island" shall be inserted in lieu thereof.

SEC. 2. In all public documents, records, and maps of the United States in which such island is designated or referred to it shall be designated as "Theodore Roosevelt Island."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOOKS FOR THE ADULT BLIND

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13817) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear a statement from the lady who is the author of the bill.

Mrs. PRATT. Mr. Speaker, I think the report is perfectly clear. This does not carry any appropriation. It merely amends the act approved March 3, 1931, so that the new radio records can be used for books instead of books being printed in Braille. I think the report is perfectly clear, but I shall be pleased to answer any questions.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931, is amended by adding after the word "books" the following: "published either in raised character or in the form of sound-reproduction records."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "character or in the form of", and insert in lieu thereof the words "characters on"; and in line 7 after the words "records" insert the words "or in any other form."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLUMBIA NATIONAL FOREST

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1492) to add certain lands to the Columbia National Forest in the State of Washington.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report shows that the land proposed to be included in the forest reserve is 75,446 acres, only 2 per cent of which is Government owned. It has been our policy here this session not to extend the confines of national forests to adjoining lands, especially when great portions of the adjoining land is privately owned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not sure about the percentage, but my information is that the acreage on the public domain is 10,080; acreage owned by the State is 25,000 acres plus; acreage owned by the county, 6,000 acres plus; and acreage privately owned, $56,000. There are large burned areas and these have become extreme fire hazards, endangering adjacent timber as well as continually threatening the Government's valuable timber in the Columbia reserve lying directly east. This bill has passed the Senate. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am reading from the report of the Secretary of Agriculture:

Practically all of the land has passed from public ownership, entries having been made before the Columbia National Forest was established. The land is timber producing and is chiefly valuable for that purpose. There are only approximately 1,200 acres of publicly owned land within the area.

A gentleman who takes particular interest in this character of bills is temporarily absent from the Chamber, and in his absence I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Otherwise I shall have to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me to make a further statement?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman for a further explanation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A considerable number of bills have passed the House, and, later, the Senate, extending forest reserves. Here is a tract in Clark and Skamania Counties and the Federal Government will be a great gainer by the extension and addition of this tract to the Columbia Forest Reserve.

Mr. STAFFORD. How will it be? A considerable part of it is owned by the Northern Pacific Railway Co. We have had scandals arising out of the way the Northern Pacific Railway Co. in years back received lieu lands and I am looking with suspicion always upon lands in which the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. is involved, because of the outrageous policy indulged in by them in years back.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman ought not to hold the lieu lands law of more than 30 years ago, which I agree was an outrageous thing, against this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Having in mind the outrage imposed upon the Government by the Northern Pacific Railway, I look with suspicion upon all such matters, and I am not a railroad baiter either.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That was more than 30 years ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall have to object unless the gentleman is willing to have it passed over without prejudice until the Member referred to is present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

PINE RIDGE, STANDING ROCK, CHEYENNE RIVER, AND ROSEBUD SIOUX AGENCIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 13770, to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States of America not otherwise appropriated, $19,357 to pay certain individual enrolled Indians under the Pine Ridge, Standing Rock, Cheyenne River, and Rosebud Sioux Agencies the amounts which they have been awarded by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of Congress of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. 484).

With the following committee amendment: After line 9 insert: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to determine what attorney or attorneys have rendered services of value in behalf of said Indians and to pay such attorney or attorneys on such findings when appropriation is available the reasonable value of such services, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery on any individual claim, which payment shall be in full settlement for all services rendered by such attorney or attorneys to said claimants."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the word "agencies" insert "in full settlement of such claims against the Government."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 1, in line, 7, after the word "agencies" insert "in full settlement of such claims against the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11735, to permanently set aside certain lands in Utah as an addition to the Navajo Indian Reservation, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the authority on public-land legislation whether there is any difference between unreserved and undisposed of lands?

Mr. COLTON. It is a question whether a reservation is a disposal of land. Yes; there is a difference.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman to section 2, where provision is made as to the relinquishment of these lands of equal area, but nothing is stated as to their being of the same value. I am wondering whether the gentleman would have any objection to inserting the clause after the word "area" in line 20, on page 3, "approximately of the same value."

Mr. COLTON. I can not see any particular objection to that. It may mean a little more expense in the matter of making the exchange, because the land would have to be investigated and examined.

Mr. STAFFORD. My suggestion is "approximately of the same value."

Mr. COLTON. If you use the words "approximate value," I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Further reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform the House the reason we are to turn over to the Navajo Indians 37½ per cent of the royalties? What is the reason for this determination?

Mr. COLTON. I think it follows the policy already adopted of giving this percentage of the royalties to Indians where the oil, if any is ever discovered, is found on Indian lands. It is in keeping with the general policy of the Government with reference to such lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not recall any such provision having been incorporated in a general law. It may be in certain regulations, but I was unaware of such language ever having been adopted in any general law.

Mr. COLTON. I can not point to a specific case, but I feel sure it is in some of the laws or regulations.

Mr. JENKINS. Reserving the right to object, I notice the commissioner makes some recommendation as to certain amendments. Have the recommendations been complied with?

Mr. COLTON. Yes; I think they have all been adopted.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell me why this bill was not referred to the Public Lands Committee for consideration? This is a disposal of public lands, but it appears to have been determined and passed upon by the Indian Affairs Committee.

Mr. COLTON. May I say to the gentleman that during all the time I was chairman of the Public Lands Committee I did ask to have such bills referred to that committee. There is some question, because of precedents heretofore followed, as to which committee such bills should go, and in this case it went to the Indian Affairs Committee, and I had no personal objection to that course. I believe personally that such bills should go to the Public Lands Committee.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I have no objection myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all vacant, unreserved, and undisposed of public lands within the areas in the southern part of the State of Utah, bounded as follows: Beginning at a point where the San Juan River intersects the one hundred and tenth degree of west longitude; thence down said river to its confluence with the Colorado River; thence down the Colorado River to a point where said river crosses the boundary line between Utah and Arizona; thence east along said boundary line to the one hundred and tenth degree of west longitude; thence north to the place of beginning; also beginning at a point where the west rim of Montezuma Creek or wash intersects the north boundary line of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Utah; thence northerly along the western rim of said creek or wash to a point where it intersects the section line running east and west between sections 23 and 26, township 39 south, range 24 east, Salt Lake base and meridian in Utah; thence eastward along said section line to the northeast section corner of section 26, township 39 south, range 25 east; thence south 1 mile along the section line between sections 25 and 26 to the southeast section corner of section 26, township 39 south, range 25 east; thence eastward along the section line between sections 25 and 36, township 39 south, range 25 east, extending through township 39 south, range 26 east, to its intersection with the boundary line between Utah and Colorado; thence south along said boundary line to its intersection with the north boundary line of the Navajo Indian Reservation; thence in a westerly direction along the north boundary line of said reservation to the point of beginning be, and the same are hereby, permanently withdrawn from all forms of entry or disposal for the benefit of the Navajo and such other Indians as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to settle thereon: Provided, That no further allotments of lands to Indians on the public domain shall be made in San Juan County, Utah. Should oil or gas be produced in paying quantities within the lands hereby added to the Navajo Reservation, 37½ per cent of the net royalties accruing therefrom derived from tribal leases shall be paid to the State of Utah: Provided, That said 37½ per cent of said royalties shall be expended by the State of Utah in the tuition of Indian children in white schools and/or in the building or maintenance of roads across the lands described in section 1 hereof, or for the benefit of the Indians residing therein.

SEC. 2. That the State of Utah may relinquish such tracts of school land within the areas added to the Navajo Reservation by section 1 of this act as it may see fit in favor of the said Indians, and shall have the right to select other unreserved and nonmineral public lands contiguously or noncontiguously located within the State of Utah, equal in area to that relinquished, said lieu selections to be made in the same manner as is provided for in the enabling act of July 16, 1894 (28 Stat. L. 107).

With the following committee amendments: Page 3, line 1, after the word "Utah," add the following: "Nor shall further Indian homesteads be made in said county under the act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. 96)."

Page 3, line 19, immediately after the statute reference, add the following: "Except as to the payment of fees or commissions which are hereby waived."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 20, after the word "area," insert the words "and approximately of the same value."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESTORATION OF INDIAN AGENT FOR THE LOWER BRULE INDIAN RESERVATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13007) providing for the restoration of an Indian agent for the Lower Brule Indian Reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not see any necessity for this Indian agent. If there was one thing when I was a boy which impressed me as a useless thing, it was an Indian agent. I am speaking of the time about 40 years ago.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think there is no question but that these Indians are entitled to an agent. Under the treaty of 1889 they ceded a considerable part of their reservation to the Government and did not receive one penny for it. The only consideration that they received was a guaranty that their boarding school and agency should "be maintained and continued" as "at present." The treaty expressly provided that the agency should be maintained. The agency was continued until 1924. Since then they have no one to go to for consultation about their leases, contracts, or personal allowances on their own reservation but have been obliged to go across the river to another agency. It seems to me that they ought to have an agent of their own in compliance with the treaty.

I want to say that a while ago a representative of the department was sent out there to investigate the situation. He remained two or three weeks on the reservation and on his return recommended that the agency be restored.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The assistant commissioner states:

On August 1, 1924, the Lower Brule Agency was placed under the jurisdiction of the Superintendent of the Crow Creek Agency, and this action was taken at that time for the reason that some of the buildings at Lower Brule were destroyed by a storm and most of the others damaged to a greater or less extent. Furthermore, we felt that with the small number of Indians at that place—about 600—and the fact that these two jurisdictions were reasonably accessible to each other during much of the year it would be in the interest of good administration and economy to consolidate them. In doing so arrangements were made to provide a suitable staff at Lower Brule to look after the needs of these Indians. In addition to the financial clerk, who is in charge, there are authorized the positions of stockman, physician, field nurse, laborer, judge, and two police privates. The subagency is connected by Government telephone with the Crow Creek Agency, which is a distance of 7 miles by ferry across the Missouri River.

The only complaint seems to be that in the wintertime they can not ferry across the river, and have to go aroundabout way to get to the central agency.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Not only that but every time they ferry across the river it costs them about $2.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the Indian agent visits them every week, or at stated intervals.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If the gentleman knew as much about the Indians as those of us who live among them, I think he would not object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And besides, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says that it is not necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as I understood, agreed to restore the Indian agency about a year ago, but on account of the economy program the matter has been deferred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

A CENTURY OF PROGRESS EXPOSITION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Joint Resolution 561, amending section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes," approved February 5, 1929, and amending section 7 of the act entitled "An act to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at A Century of Progress (Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933," approved July 19, 1932.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the resolution, but there is one minor amendment that I wish to offer limiting the time to six months within which these articles, imported free of duty, have to be sold. With that understanding I have no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the articles are sold, then the duty is to be paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I notice in the fourth line on page 1 this uncertain language "under certain conditions." The President is authorized to do certain things under certain conditions.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Oh, that is merely a part of the title of the original act.

Mr. JENKINS. How does that relate to this bill, as to whether or not these conditions will be laid down by the President or somebody else?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That has already been performed. The conditions for the subscription of capital were laid down, to authorize the President to invite the nations of the world to participate. That condition has been met. The invitation has been sent. The nations of the world are coming to exhibit. That language is only a part of the title of the original act, authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to participate in the fair.

Mr. JENKINS. That is my point. The gentleman is an authority on this matter. Does this bill fit in with the original act?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Entirely so. The principal purpose of this bill is to facilitate the matter of reimbursement by the Chicago Fair authorities to the Federal Government of the expenses incurred by the latter.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand how long the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin extends. Is it limited to only six months?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. During the period of the exposition and six months thereafter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Within six months after the close of the exposition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And if the articles are not then sold?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They must be sent back to the countries from which they came.

Mr. Speaker, let me add that the fair will be open from June 1 to November 1 of this year. It will depict, in a novel and artistic way, the progress of mankind since Chicago was incorporated as a village a hundred years ago. Its official title is therefore "A Century of Progress," as clearly set out in the pending joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes," approved February 5, 1929, be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the exposition to be held by and known as A Century of Progress, in section 1 of this joint resolution called the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or at the close of the said exposition to sell any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles, which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure, the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be reimbursed to the Government of the United States by A Century of Progress, also known as the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

SEC. 2. That section 7 of the act entitled "An act to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at A Century of Progress (Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933," approved July 19, 1932, be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. All necessary expenses incurred by the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed to the Government of the United States by A Century of Progress, also known as the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, under regulations to be prescribed by the Librarian of Congress and by the Commissioner of Patents, respectively."

SEC. 3. That the receipts from reimbursements to the Government of the United States paid by A Century of Progress, also known as the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, as provided in the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes," approved February 5, 1929, as hereby amended, and in the act entitled "An act to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at A Century of Progress (Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933," approved July 19, 1932, as hereby amended, shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriations from which paid, instead of being covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts as provided by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, in the manner provided for receipts from reimbursable charges for labor, services, and other expenses connected with the customs, in section 524 of the tariff act of 1930.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 14, after the word "or," strike out the word "at" and insert the words "within six months after."

The amendment was agreed to, and the joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

MEMORIAL TO BRIGADIER GENERAL PULASKI AT SAVANNAH, GA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6490) authorizing the erection of a memorial to Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski at Savannah, Ga.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I find that this is a fund to come out of the Federal Treasury. This memorial can well wait until the Federal Treasury is in better condition. I object.

AMENDING MARINE ACT IN RESPECT OF VIRGIN ISLANDS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10329) to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and to provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes," as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. What ships involved are engaged entirely in coastwise trade in and around the Virgin Islands? Are they not all engaged in foreign trade by nature of the location of the islands?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, that is largely true, but under the law the coastwise laws of the United States apply to the Virgin Islands unless the President, by Executive order, suspends their application. Unless the application is suspended, a voyage between any port in continental United States and the Virgin Islands would be coastwise, and foreign vessels could not operate in that trade. The Presidents from the time of the enactment of the law in 1920, first President Wilson, and all subsequent Presidents, have annually suspended the application of the law to the Virgin Islands, for the reason that they were not being served by American vessels; at least, they were so served to a very limited extent, if at all.

Now, the Governor of the Virgin Islands and others have very strongly urged this legislation on the ground that, as they are under present conditions dependent upon foreign ships, those services will not give as adequate or as frequent services or as efficient services when they know that the order may not be continued at the end of any year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will permit, it seems strange to me that, after spending some fifty or sixty million dollars a year on subsidies and having spent several hundred millions in loans, we can not establish trade and regular lines between the Virgin Islands and the United States, when foreign ships can do it. It is beyond me.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Well, that sounds very plausible, but the fact of the matter is they have not been established. Those islands are possessions of the United States. They are having a very hard time down there, and one of their industries has been the coaling of ships which stop there. The more ships that stop there the more it means to those people.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But, if the gentleman will permit, if it is a foreign ship touching a United States port and coaling at the Virgin Islands, going on its course, it would not be construed as being in the coastal trade, and our coastal laws would not be applicable to it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. But suppose the ships go from Europe, as many of them do, and they stop at the Virgin Islands. If the coastwise laws are applicable, they can not then carry passengers or cargo from the Virgin Islands to any port in the United States, or vice versa.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is true.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. But I want to say to the gentleman, it means nothing more to me than it does to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand that.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. After holding hearings on it and there being no serious objection, and having the indorsement of the Commissioner of Navigation and of the Shipping Board and apparently of everybody, with the amendments that were adopted the committee reported the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I agree as to the necessity of it under the conditions.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Now, the bill as amended only makes this change: As the law now stands, the coastwise law applies to the Virgin Islands unless it is suspended by executive order. This changes it so that our coastwise laws do not apply to the Virgin Islands unless the President shall by Executive order so declare.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am not going to object, but it is a sad commentary on our subsidized merchant marine.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Oh, I agree with the gentleman on that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate bill (S. 3950).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 997), entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by adding thereto the following proviso: "And provided further, That the coastwise laws of the United States shall not extend to the Virgin Islands of the United States until the President of the United States, after a full investigation of the local needs and conditions, shall, by proclamation, declare that an adequate shipping service has been established to such islands and fix a date for going into effect of the same."

SEC. 2. Title IV of the merchant marine act, 1928, shall not be construed to authorize ocean mail contracts for routes between continental United States and the Virgin Islands.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is not the same bill. It is different from the House bill in many respects.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asked unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill, and there was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The purpose of the two bills and the title are identical, and I have offered an amendment to the Senate bill to make it conform identically to the House bill as reported by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 2, line 4, after "United" strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert: "States, until the President of the United States shall, by proclamation, declare that such coastwise lines shall extend to the Virgin Islands and fix a date for the going into effect of same."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. What action does the gentleman take toward the further provision of the Senate bill, which is section 2? I do not know what the effect of section 2 of the Senate bill is; "Title IV of the merchant marine act, 1928, shall not be construed to authorize ocean mail contracts for routes between continental United States and the Virgin Islands." We have not legislated on that provision at all in the House bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; that is not in the copy that I have before me.

I offer a further amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 2, line 9, strike out all of section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that he promised recognition for suspending the rules in one or two, or possibly three, instances. Evidently the Consent Calendar can not be concluded to-day unless more time is devoted to it. On the last six days of this session suspensions are in order. The bills which the Chair had intended to recognize for suspension to-day can be passed at that time. However, there is only one other Consent Calendar day, the 20th day of this month. I think all will agree that the Consent Calendar should be called before the end of the session. For that reason the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Montana to call up a bill under suspension of the rules, and the Chair hopes the House will remain in attendance so that we can resume with the Consent Calendar later.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, would I be intrusive by suggesting to the Speaker and the majority leader that when the next Consent Calendar day is reached we commence with the Consent Calendar where we leave off to-day? Under the new rule established in the last session any bill that is objected to retains its place on the calendar. The calendar is getting clogged up with these bills, and we do not have an opportunity to consider the bills which have been reported recently and which should be given their day before final adjournment.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to present a unanimous-consent request that the call of the calendar on the next Consent Calendar day begin where it left off to-day, the Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. My purpose in asking this——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There is no use wasting time making a long statement, for I shall object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an inquiry along the same line. We have spent a good deal of time on the two calendars, and we have sent 500 or 600 bills to the other end of the Capitol. I wonder if the Speaker has any influence by which he can get some of these bills considered over there, or are we spending all this time in vain? It seems useless for us to have special night sessions to pass these bills if they can not be passed by or considered in the other body.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair say to the gentleman from New York, the minority leader, what he has said to a number of gentlemen heretofore, that it seems useless to suspend the rules and pass these bills if they are not going to be considered by the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. That is my position exactly.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair is informed that the Senate is in position to pass the bills if we will pass them. What authority there is for the statement the Chair does not know. Undoubtedly the Senate is in a condition at the present time that makes it seem doubtful whether these bills that have been sent them will be considered. However, the House ought not to adjourn without having an opportunity to pass these bills on the Private Calendar and the Unanimous Consent Calendar that are unobjected to.

Mr. SNELL. I am in hearty accord with what the Speaker says, and I am interested in having him use all possible persuasion to get these unobjected-to bills considered at the other end of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is fearful of bringing too much pressure to bear in view of the fact he has got to come in contact with some of the Members of the other body later.

Mr. SNELL. I thought on that account the Chair would have more influence.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Did I understand the Speaker to say to the House that he would recognize one or two gentlemen to move to suspend the rules and that then the House would revert to the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correctly informed. If the Members will stay here until 5 o'clock or 5.30 this afternoon we can pass a lot of these bills.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the House would be agreeable to the idea of passing right now the five or six bills pertaining to the building of bridges? They ought to pass. I have one in my district. They want to begin work on it right away.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk tells me there are 11 bridge bills. They will be reached soon after the suspensions.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] to move to suspend the rules.

TO STABILIZE LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11816) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote the highest use of public land, the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion is hereby authorized to establish by order grazing districts or additions thereto from any part of the public lands of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, not in national forests, national parks and monuments, or Indian reservations, and which in his opinion are chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, and/or to modify the boundaries thereof: Provided, That no lands withdrawn or reserved for any other purpose shall be included in any such district except with the approval of the head of the department having jurisdiction thereof. Such orders shall be so worded as to safeguard valid claims existing on the date thereof. Neither this act nor the act of December 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 862; U. S. C., title 43, secs. 291 and following), commonly known as the stock raising homestead act, shall be construed as limiting the authority or policy of Congress or the President to include in national forests public lands of the character described in section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 1103; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 471), for the purposes set forth in the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. 35; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 475), or such other purposes as Congress may specify.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall make provision for the protection, administration, regulation, and improvement of such grazing districts as may be created under the authority of the foregoing section, and he shall make such rules and regulations and establish such service, enter into such cooperative agreements, and do any and all things necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act and to insure the objects of such grazing districts, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use, to preserve the land and its resources from destruction or unnecessary injury, to provide for the orderly use, improvement, and development of the range, and to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the use of such public grazing lands; and any violation of the provisions of this act or such rules and regulations thereunder shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue or cause to be issued permits to graze livestock on such grazing districts to such bona fide settlers, residents, and other stock owners as under his rules and regulations are entitled to participate in the use of the range, upon the payment annually of reasonable fees in each case to be fixed or determined from time to time under his authority: Provided, That grazing permits shall be issued only to citizens of the United States or to those who have filed the necessary declarations of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws. Such permits may be issued to individuals, groups, or associations for a period of not more than 10 years, subject to the preference right of the permittees to renewal in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall specify from time to time numbers of stock and seasons of use. During periods of range depletion due to severe drought or other natural causes, or in case of a general epidemic of disease, during the life of the permit, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to remit, reduce, refund in whole or in part, or authorize postponement of payment of grazing fees for such depletion period so long as the emergency exists.

SEC. 4. Fences, wells, reservoirs, and other improvements necessary to the care and management of the permitted livestock may be constructed on the public lands within such grazing districts under permit issued by the authority of the Secretary, or under such cooperative arrangement as the Secretary may approve. No permit shall be issued which shall entitle the permittee to the use of such improvements constructed and owned by a prior occupant until the applicant has paid to such prior occupant a reasonable pro rata value for the use of such improvements. If the parties interested can not agree, then the amount of such payment shall be determined under rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior. The decision of the Secretary in such cases is to be final and conclusive.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior may permit, under regulations to be prescribed by him, the free grazing within such districts of livestock kept for domestic purposes, and provide, so far as authorized by existing law or laws hereinafter enacted, for the use of timber, stone, gravel, clay, coal, and other deposits by bona fide settlers, miners, residents, and prospectors for minerals, for firewood, fencing, buildings, mining, prospecting, and domestic purposes within areas subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That subject to compliance with the rules and regulations governing such grazing district, nothing herein contained shall restrict the granting or use of permits or rights of way under existing law; or ingress or egress over the public lands in such districts for all proper and lawful purposes; or prospecting, locating, developing, entering, leasing, or patenting the valuable mineral resources of such districts under law applicable thereto.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to examine and classify any lands within such grazing districts which are more valuable and suitable for the production of agricultural crops than native grasses and forage plants, and to open such lands to homestead entry in tracts not exceeding 160 acres in area. Such lands shall not be subject to settlement or occupation as homesteads until after same have been classified and opened to entry after notice to the permittee by the Secretary of the Interior, and the lands shall remain a part of the grazing district until patents are issued therefor, the homesteader to be, after his entry is allowed, entitled to the possession and use thereof: Provided, That no lands containing water holes, springs, or water supplies developed or improved by the holder of any grazing permit or his predecessor in interest, shall be subject to classification, settlement, entry, or patent under the provisions of this section.

SEC. 8. That where such action will promote the purposes of the district or facilitate its administration the Secretary be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States any lands within the exterior boundaries of a district as a gift, or when public interests will be benefited thereby, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the exterior boundaries of said grazing district and in exchange therefor to issue patent for not to exceed an equal value of grazing district land or of unreserved surveyed public land in the same county or if any suitable lands can not be found in the county, in any other part of the same State: Provided, That before any such exchange shall be effected, notice of the contemplated exchange, describing the lands involved, shall be published once each week for four successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county or counties in which may be situated the lands to be accepted, and in the same manner in some like newspaper published in any county in which may be situated any lands to be given in such exchange; lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become public lands and parts of the grazing district within whose exterior boundaries they are located: Provided further, That either party to an exchange may make reservations of minerals, easements, or rights of use, the values of which shall be duly considered in determining the values of the exchanged lands. Where reservations are made in lands conveyed to the United States, the right to enjoy them shall be subject to such reasonable conditions respecting ingress and egress and the use of the surface of the land as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior. Where mineral reservations are made in lands conveyed by the United States, it shall be so stipulated in the patent, and any person who acquires the right to mine and remove the reserved mineral deposits may enter and occupy so much of the surface as may be required for all purposes incident to the mining and removal of the minerals therefrom, and may mine and remove such minerals, upon payment to the owner of the surface for damages caused to the land and improvements thereon.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Interior shall provide, by suitable rules and regulations, for cooperation with local associations of stockmen interested in the use of the grazing districts and with such advisory boards as they may name. The views of authorized advisory boards shall be given fullest consideration consistent with the proper use of the resource and the rights and needs of minorities. The Secretary of the Interior shall provide by appropriate rules and regulations for appeals from the decision of the administrative officer in charge. The Secretary of the Interior shall also be empowered to accept contributions toward the administration, protection, and improvement of the district, moneys so received to be covered into the Treasury as a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, for payment of expenses incident to said administration, protection, and improvement, and for refunds to depositors of amounts contributed by them in excess of their share of the cost.

SEC. 10. That, except as provided in sections 9 and 11 hereof, all moneys received under the authority of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, but 15 per cent of all moneys received from each grazing district during any fiscal year is hereby made available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior for the construction, purchase, or maintenance of range improvements, and an additional 35 per cent of the money received from each grazing district during any fiscal year shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State in which said grazing district is situated, to be expended as the State legislature may prescribe for the benefit of public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the grazing district is situated: Provided, That if any grazing district is in more than one State or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said district shall be proportional to its area therein.

SEC. 11. That all moneys received for grazing on Indian lands ceded to the United States for disposition under the public land laws, less 15 per cent for range improvements, shall be deposited to the credit of the Indians pending final disposition under applicable laws, treaties, or agreements, the applicable public land laws as to said Indian ceded lands within a district created under this act shall continue in operation, except that each and every application for nonmineral title to said lands in a district created under this act shall be allowed only if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior the land is of the character suited to disposal through the act under which application is made and such entry and disposal will not affect adversely the best public interest.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cooperate with any department of the Government in carrying out the purposes of this act, and in the coordination of range administration, particularly where the same stock grazes part time in a grazing district and part time in a national forest or other reservation.

SEC. 13. That this act shall not become effective in any State until 60 days after the approval by the legislature of such State; and each such approving State, in its discretion, may designate and authorize one or more representatives or officials of said State with whom the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make and enter into suitable agreement for the cooperative administration of public grazing upon said public lands of the United States and the lands owned by or subject to the control of said State or any political subdivision thereof, which shall be subject to such rules and regulations as shall be agreed upon and promulgated by both the Secretary of the Interior and said State.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON] for 20 minutes.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that about three years ago the President appointed a commission to draft a bill looking toward turning over to the States all public lands. Congress appropriated $50,000 for that commission. The commission brought a draft of the bill to the committee and the bill was introduced in the House. That bill did not meet the approval of the Public Lands Committee. The committee then went to work diligently on this bill and brought out what is now before the House; not a bill turning over public lands to the States, but a bill regulating the supervision of public lands by the Interior Department. It was suggested in the House this afternoon that this bill might be establishing a new bureau in the Interior Department, and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that is not correct.

There is no new bureau being established. We are putting these lands under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. These lands consist of about 180,000,000 acres of public domain, unreserved or set apart, public domain over which nobody now has any control. They are used as commons so that all men may turn their stock upon the lands, and they are doing so and grazing them to the grass roots and gradually depleting the productivity of the soil. This bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior, if he chooses, may set apart districts and limit the amount of grazing on these lands, and charge a certain fee for doing so, and use the money as set forth in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What has been troubling me more than anything else with reference to this bill is this:

It seems to me that once grazing lands are leased the lessee will have absolute control almost in perpetuity over these lands, because the bill provides that a subsequent lessee can only take it if he pays for any improvement, fences, or any other expenditures of his predecessors. If they can not agree the price is to be fixed, and there is great danger, notwithstanding the utmost care in administration, that the grazing lands will be in the control of a very few large cattle or stock raisers in a very few years, to the exclusion of everybody else. That is what I am troubled about.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, under the limited time we have for debate on this bill, I desire to yield to the author of the bill, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON], to answer the gentleman from New York.

I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, as has been briefly outlined by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS], the chairman of the committee, this is a conservation measure for the purpose of protecting the public domain of the United States. I think no one will dispute that the regulation of grazing on forest lands has been a very great help to those lands. In fact, it has been a great help not only to the lands themselves but to the livestock men that use these lands for grazing purposes. The grazing on the great area of the public domain has not been regulated, as no one has that authority now. There is no authority anywhere in the Government to control grazing on the public lands, with the result that these lands are being very greatly injured by overgrazing. The overgrazing largely results from using these lands during the entire year. This is mostly done by nomadic herds whose owners are not citizens of the United States in many cases.

The land has no chance to rehabilitate itself, with the result that the forage and the vegetation is being completely destroyed in many areas. The lands are being injured and a great waste has already occurred, and a very valuable asset is being dissipated. Unless something is done soon it will be too late to save the great asset of grazing.

Now, with reference to the question raised by the gentleman from New York, I may say that similar regulations to which he refers are in existence on the forest reserves; in other words, men are given permits to graze stock upon the forest reserves, and their operations are supervised by forest rangers, so it is not something new.

It would be unfair to give a man a permit on a certain tract of public land and allow him to build reservoirs and fences for protecting the land and then at the end of 10 years not give him any chance to sell or dispose of the improvements. We are putting this provision in the law for the very purpose of encouraging men to put needed and reasonable improvements upon the land, the permittee having the first chance for a renewal. If he decides not to take the land for a second term, the price of the improvements may be fixed by arbitration if the parties can not agree. This is done so there will be no injury to the man who constructs the improvements in the first instance. It will all be in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that it is the uniform practice that improvements put on property by the lessee revert to the lessor?

Mr. COLTON. That would be true under this bill, but the second lessee ought in fairness to compensate the man who puts the improvements on the land. As a matter of law the improvements do revert to the lessor or the Government in this case, but surely the second lessee or permittee ought to pay a reasonable amount for the improvements.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I wish the gentleman would make clear just exactly the protection the Government is going to get with respect to the improvements or the investments the lessees are going to make under this bill, so far as the value of such improvements is concerned.

Mr. COLTON. At the termination of the lease or permit——

Mr. CLARKE of New York. What is the determining factor in the matter?

Mr. COLTON. The Secretary of the Interior is the final judge in all these matters.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. The Secretary is the final court in that regard?

Mr. COLTON. Without any question, yes.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. I understood the gentleman to state that this is going to be under management and control similar to the Forest Service. The gentleman knows that to-day those who have permits on the forests are unable to pay the fees or very few are able to pay the fees and that people who are going to engage in the grazing business would be unable to pay the fees under this bill and it would not be long until only the wealthy would be able to accumulate grazing privileges on all this land, and there would be a monopoly just as the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has stated.

Mr. COLTON. If the gentleman will permit, that has not followed in the matter of regulating the forest reserves and I may say that this is Government land and is under the supervision of an agent of the Government, and it does seem to me that you will have to trust some one to make reasonable regulations along this line.

I appreciate what the gentleman says about the stockmen being in a precarious condition, but so is every other business, and I will say, frankly, in my judgment in the main the Government has been fair in its treatment of the stockmen on the forest reserves, and we have to presume that the same thing will be true on the public domain. In some instances and during certain periods, I am sure the fees have been too high, but most of the time they have been reasonable.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has not the Government been outrageously lax in allowing the public lands to be stolen, virtually, by the large stockmen who have appropriated the land for their uses without any compensation whatever and have grown "greasy" rich at the expense of the Government?

Mr. COLTON. I do not know of many cases where men have grown "greasy" rich. I think the gentleman is practically right in saying the Government has been too lax, and such a policy has not only been a detriment to the Government itself, but is now acting as a boomerang on the men who have used and in many cases abused the public domain, and they are now asking for regulation.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Is this bill limited to grazing or does it also involve crop production?

Mr. COLTON. It is limited to grazing.

Mr. CULKIN. It has no irrigation or reclamation phase to it, real or prospective?

Mr. COLTON. It has not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. Under the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Montana, one State may adopt this plan or approve the bill and another State may not approve it, and therefore it will not be a bill that applies to all of the States alike.

Mr. COLTON. I may say frankly to the gentleman that if I had my way I would not have had this amendment, but I do believe that the States are so anxious for some form of reasonable regulation and control that practically every public-land State, when it sees the benefits of the bill, will adopt or accept the provisions of this law.

Mr. DOWELL. But is it not true that any State may absolutely destroy this bill?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. I yield.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] is in error in thinking that the veto of one State would control the action of other States.

Mr. DOWELL. Oh, no; it would not control the action of other States; but so far as the States are concerned, one State can veto the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. So far as the particular State vetoing it is concerned.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. That is true.

Mr. DOWELL. Then you may have one tract of land by the side of another tract of land, one where they charge for grazing and the other one without any restriction whatever.

Mr. COLTON. Unfortunately, the gentleman's interpretation is correct; but I repeat that I am sure this will become so popular, and its benefits will be so apparent, as has been the case in the forest reserves, that it will only be a short time until every State in which there are public lands will accept it.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill are simple and easily understood. They provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall make rules and regulations governing the grazing on the public domain in accordance with well-established principles that have already been worked out; and every man who has studied the question must admit that proper regulation of grazing upon public land is absolutely necessary. With proper regulation, grazing does not injure the public lands.

But if you overgraze them and nothing is done to give the land a chance to rehabilitate itself, you ruin the land. Moreover, there is a close relationship between grazing on lands and flood control. It has been proven that where grounds have been denuded of vegetation floods occur more frequently. Federal roads are injured and other public property often destroyed by floods which are caused by overgrazing of lands. Lands which have been denuded of vegetation will not hold water.

Mr. Speaker, for eight years I have been working for some measure of this kind. It gives me much pleasure to see the House considering and about to pass a bill which I know will result in good to our public domain and to the livestock industry in the Great West.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill (H. R. 11816) is a sort of a composite of two bills that in slightly different form have been pending before the Public Lands Committee for several years. In the present Congress these bills have borne the numbers H. R. 4541, by Representative COLTON, and H. R. 8822, by myself. As I phrased the title of the measure when I introduced H. R. 8822, I used this language, "To prevent erosion of soil, to protect the national watersheds, and to promote the highest general uses of the public domain, and for other purposes." That is the thought emphasized by the title of 11816, and that is the idea that is in Mr. COLTON'S mind and in my own.

As I have made repeated trips over the various States that include practically all the public domain, I have been impressed by the ever-increasing erosion that is going on, by the destruction of the value of the public domain for greatest grazing purposes, and by the apparent inability to prevent erosion and range destruction unless a way may be found by which adequate supervision may be had.

Destruction of the range is going on partly through overgrazing in some areas but chiefly through improper grazing, that is, the grazing of the public domain during seasons of the year when grazing ought not to be permitted, as, for instance, in the spring when the grass and other forage are beginning to take life, and in the fall when the rains and early snows begin.

Those who are familiar with the effect of tramping upon lands that are wet and where a turf has or has not been firmly established must know the unfortunate effect of disturbing and lacerating the surface from the standpoint of erosion and the standpoint of killing plant life.

It is my firm judgment that the public domain could be made to support a vastly larger number of sheep and cattle and other livestock than now are grazed upon these lands if the range were adequately protected and the livestock permitted to go upon the range under proper conditions from the standpoint of both number of sheep or other stock and from the standpoint of seasonal factors to which I have referred.

Let me be more specific. Some three years ago complaints were made to me that the watershed above Arrow Rock Reservoir in Idaho was being overgrazed and utilized at improper times to such extent that it was in process of rapid deterioration. This watershed is basic in the great Boise-Payette reclamation project. With Mr. Walt Mitchell, an outstanding citizen of the project and speaking for many others, Forest Supervisor Guy Mains, and others, I made a trip over the area that consumed about four days. I saw great stretches of the watershed that had been practically denuded of plant life; I saw areas that were contiguous to national-forest areas, and the conditions by way of contrast upon the public domain and the national-forest areas were such that without a guide to point out the boundary line I could have staked out fairly well the line of separation between the public domain and the forest area, basing my judgment upon the condition of plant life upon the one area in contrast with the condition upon the other.

Or again, as I followed the boundary line of the Arrow Rock Reservoir I noticed repeated deltas made by the wash of silt and other débris that had come down from the areas above the reservoir. Following up the streams from the reservoir I noticed in places great gouges in the earth where heavy freshets and accumulated water had washed out tons of surface soil, which had been deposited in the reservoir below. It was perfectly plain to me that unless an end could be brought to this erosion the reservoir itself would be filled up in the course of years, the reclaimed lands on the Boise-Payette project reduced in value enormously or maybe destroyed, and the remaining grazing opportunities on the areas wiped out.

Accordingly, upon the convening of the Congress three years ago I introduced a bill adding a considerable part of the area above the Arrow Rock Reservoir to the national forest, and it has become a law.

The difficulty that had existed was brought about through uncontrolled grazing upon the public domain. Sheep, cattle, and possibly other stock would go on the public domain to which I have referred weeks before they would have been permitted to enter the national forest. The hoofs of the stock would chop up the surface of the land, rains would wash the surface soil away, the roots of the grass and shrubs would be destroyed, and the surface would be left in a condition that lent itself to easiest erosion. In the fall there would be a repetition of what had occurred in the spring. Weeks after the cattle and sheep had been withdrawn from national-forest areas they would continue to tramp over the public domain above the Arrow Rock Reservoir. Not only was this area stripped of practically every vestige of plant growth usable for sheep and other stock, but the surface was left in shape for immediate erosion as a result of the rains and snows of late fall and winter.

Members of the House who have traveled in the West are familiar with the situation to which I have directed attention in connection with watersheds above many reservoirs throughout that region. The Zuni Reservoir in New Mexico is to-day practically destroyed as a result of the silt and other débris washed down from the watershed. It is more than 94 per cent filled upon the basis of the 900-foot level, and it is 75 per cent filled upon the basis of the 1,000-foot level. Although the reservoir was completed about 1907, new plans must be considered for the furnishing of water to the lands below the reservoir that are in cultivation, and for years a limitation has been placed upon full or additional acreage for reclamation purposes because of the exhaustion of available water.

Over and over throughout the West the situation to which I have referred to may be met in one form or another.

The public domain embraces approximately 235,000,000 acres if we include about 35,000,000 acres of coal and shale reserves and a limited number of acres within withdrawals for stock drives and stock-watering places. For the most part this area is within Western States and is spread over the watersheds that feed the Mississippi, Missouri, Rio Grande, Columbia, Snake, Colorado, and other rivers.

LITTLE OPPORTUNITY FOR HOMESTEADS

Under the generous public land laws of the United States practically all land that is available for the home builder has passed into private ownership with the exception of such areas as will be reclaimed through irrigation. Of course, I exclude the timberland, vast areas of which have passed into private ownership or have been included in national forests.

Probably the first question to be considered, as we approach the problem, is the question of the value of the land. The thousands of abandoned homes throughout the West in all the public-land States are grim evidence of the fact that the remaining acres of the public domain are not valuable for homestead purposes. Thousands of acres contain valuable stands of timber, but for the most part the lands have not sustained timber growth during many decades. Most of the lands of the public domain are valuable for grazing purposes.

If these were the only three important uses of the surfaces of the vast expanse of land, the problem would be solved readily. The timber areas could be turned over to national forests or to the States for forestry administration. Likewise the grazing lands could be transferred to private ownership, or reserved to the States or Federal Government for such use as either might care to make of them. As I see it, however, the astounding value of the public domain lies in uses that have been overlooked, for the most part, in the discussions that have occurred upon this subject. These uses are as watersheds and for the control of stream flow, uses as deterrents to floods, uses for natural storage for irrigated lands, uses for game and for recreation, uses for forage and range, uses as forest area, and finally, uses as gigantic regulators of climatic conditions of interest alike to the people under reclamation projects and in rainfall belts. Indeed, the values of these lands are such that the welfare and prosperity of the people of a mighty empire are dependent directly upon the fidelity with which the lands that we call the public domain are administered.

Watersheds are often of more value to other States than to the one in which they are situated. The people of the Mississippi Valley have a more vital interest in the watersheds that feed the tributaries of the Father of Waters than the people of the upper reaches are conscious, at least, that they possess. The people of the Nation have a constant interest in an adequate supply of timber, in game life, in expanses of domain for recreation. They have an interest in the control of the range and in forest control and management. They have an abiding interest in the value of the range for watershed with all that it means for reclamation, for flood control, and for modification of climate.

During the past several decades, the public domain has been regarded as the vast common upon which all people had the right to go and the forage from which they had the right to use. This principle was of natural growth and came from the desire of the Federal Government to encourage home building and the development of the West. Each home builder acquired not only his small tract of land but acquired theoretically and in part practically the privilege of using the public domain so long as it remained in this condition.

Since, however, the day of the homesteader has passed and it has become apparent that the vast area that we denominate the public domain is suffering deterioration beyond words to describe, we are driven inevitably to the problem of caring for these lands as a definite responsibility.

If the public domain is to be used for grazing, this use ought to be upon the basis of fair play and equal opportunity for all. In other words, some sort of regulation and control should be exercised over the public domain so that all users may have equal opportunity and equal terms.

FEDERAL CONTROL VERSUS STATE CONTROL

The administration of this vast area should not be turned over to individual States. Such a course would mean the placing of control of watersheds, with all that this implies to people of many States, in the hands of one State that might have little interest. State administration of land grants, of timber areas, of school lands, of reclamation under the Carey Act, in spite of some notable exceptions, has not been such as to inspire confidence. Also, it should be remembered that lack of constituted authority under which States can do teamwork in problems that are interstate, outside of the authority set up in the Federal Government, argues that the individual States should not be charged with handling assets that are of interstate character.

There is another thought in connection with State control. There are 11 States that include practically all of the public domain. These States have different laws that could not in all probability carry forward a program in common. Here is a proposition that requires a common program. I do not mean a program of administration exactly alike in detail; not one that has no regard for different climatic, soil, or other natural factors, but a common program in that it may be consistent through the years, that it may be consistent with respect to climatic conditions and other identical factors.

Again, we all know that in all the Western States, as in every other part of our country, we can not get away from the spirit of rivalry, from the spirit of selfishness at times, from the spirit of attempt to control State policies through political parties, through threats and intimidation, through combination of groups in one part of a State working with groups in some other part. I submit that this problem would be much more difficult to handle by the States from this standpoint alone than it would be by the Federal Government, where at all times there would be a consistent and definite policy of public welfare not only in which the States involved would be interested but in which would be interested the people of the entire country.

Under State control there could be absolute failure in one State and complete success in adjacent States. This might mean disastrous results to States where wise policy would prevail through the temporary and mistaken policy of a State which might find itself controlled by selfish interests.

Again, failure may result in one State in contrast with another because the personnel would not be so well trained. In all human probability there would be shifting of personnel; men would be placed in positions of responsibility without training, without experience. The building up of an efficient personnel when this work would need to be done by individual States would be more expensive than if the work were handled under the Federal Government and probably would be neglected. In fact, the success or failure of range control might turn upon the efficiency or inefficiency of personnel regardless of policy that was supposed to have been adopted.

It may be urged that this bill is in conflict with the recommendation of the Public Domain Commission of the President, whose chairman was the Hon. James R. Garfield, the former Secretary of the Interior. I have great admiration for this commission, for its personnel, for the tremendous work that it performed, and for the suggestions that it gave to the public. Members of this commission amidst most serious difficulties sought to bring about a wholesome policy in connection with the public domain. I differ from the recommendation of the commission in respect to State control in part over Federal control. The objective toward which it aimed is the precise objective to which I aim. More than that, the policy I am urging in the pending bill will not prevent the adoption of the policy recommended by the commission at some later date if upon further discussion the commission's recommendation may be regarded as better than the proposed plan. Either plan seeks to end the wicked waste upon the public domain. If we do not find the plan incorporated in the pending bill satisfactory after brief or extended experience, we may then turn to the other plan; and in the meantime certainly the condition of the public domain will be better than it is to-day.

The record of Federal administration in national forests, in reclamation of arid lands, in highway-construction programs, and in our great national parks has been such as to inspire confidence in the ability of the Federal Government to assume a further responsibility in the administration of the watershed areas.

The greatest benefits that will flow out of the public domain will go to the people of the country regardless of State lines, and most of these benefits are of such character that they can not be measured in money values from year to year. It may well be that the necessary cost of administering the public domain will be far in excess of the fees or other items of income that would be assessed properly against the land within a State if the areas were under State control.

It is high time that we work out a definite program for these lands, a program that will prevent overgrazing and that will mean orderly use of the range; a program that will permit control of forest areas, one that will stay the havoc of soil erosion. In short, we need a program that will bring about such control of the range that will mean ground cover of grass and shrub and forest, that will enhance the value of an asset of our country that for too long a time has been treated with neglect.

If I am correct in the assumption that the public domain has astounding values and that they belong to people generally regardless of State lines, it would seem that the agency representing the people benefited should be charged with the responsibility of control. This agency is the Federal Government.

PIECEMEAL LEGISLATION

It has been suggested that if we can not proceed with the pending bill we should proceed by piecemeal legislation, applying some sort of policy to each State or area that may ask for it.

I favor such a proposal only in event it may be impossible to carry forward a program that will apply to all the public-domain States.

In piecemeal legislation I see many difficulties. In the first place, the same criticism would apply to which I have directed attention touching the benefits of the surface rights of the public domain with respect to State lines. The benefits are national; they do not belong to individual States. What we do should be done with respect to flood control, to navigation, the modification of climatic conditions, the reclamation of arid lands, domestic water supply, and other factors that have no relation whatever to State lines.

Again, we ought to make every effort to meet this problem by general legislation rather than by piecemeal action, for the reason that if we make certain concessions to States by way, for instance, of the allocation of grazing fees it would be very difficult indeed to modify these concessions, certainly by way of making them less generous to individual States, if we shall propose a national policy a little later on.

Again, from the standpoint of administration, it would be unfortunate; it would mean more employees; it would mean conflicting policies across State lines; it would mean inefficiency and expense even though the program in each of the several States were to be administered by the Federal Government.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

In taking up a brief discussion of the provisions of H. R. 8822, by myself, and H. R. 11816, by Mr. COLTON, the latter representing the composite idea of H. R. 8822, Mr. FRENCH, and an earlier bill by Mr. COLTON, H. R. 4541, I want to acknowledge my obligation particularly to Mr. E. A. Sherman, of the Forest Service, and to Judge Edward C. Finney, of the Interior Department. Prior to the introduction of any bill by myself in prior Congresses upon this subject I had studied the reports and recommendations of these gentlemen. I had studied proposals that had been made in various drafts of bills, the recommendations that had been made by the Roosevelt Public Domain Commission, and numerous hearings and discussions upon this problem. In the present Congress, as in the last, Mr. COLTON and I have discussed the problem frequently, and both he and I in the preparation of H. R. 11816 have had the heartiest cooperation of the gentlemen of the Forest Service and Interior Department to whom I have referred and of others who are interested in this problem.

First. The proposed legislation seeks to prevent erosion of soil and to protect the national watersheds and to promote the highest general uses of the public domain.

Second. It is proposed that the Secretary of the Interior be granted authority to establish grazing districts or additions thereto from any part of the nontimbered public lands of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, not in national forests, national parks, and monuments, or Indian reservations, which in his opinion are chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, or to modify the boundaries thereof.

Third. No lands withdrawn or reserved for any other purpose shall be included in any such district except with the approval of the head of the department having jurisdiction thereof.

Fourth. Valid claims existing upon the areas shall be protected.

Fifth. The Secretary of the Interior shall make provision for the protection, administration, regulation, and improvement of grazing districts and enter into cooperative agreements with private owners of land within such areas looking to the carrying forward of the main purpose of the bill to provide for the safeguarding and development of the range and to stabilize the livestock industry depending upon the public domain.

Sixth. Grazing permits may be issued to homesteaders, residents, or other stock owners or to groups or associations for a period of not more than 10 years, subject to renewal by the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior shall specify from time to time the number of stock and the seasons of use.

May I say that the provisions of the bill that I introduced, H. R. 8822, with respect to preference to homesteaders and other actual residents within the vicinity and to occupants of the range who own improved ranches or who have provided water for livestock grazed on the public lands I like better than the provisions of the pending bill.

Seventh. Provision is carried for administrative details having to do with protecting prior permittees for improvements, purchase and sale of the same, and so forth.

Eighth. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to fix grazing fees, to permit, under existing laws or laws hereafter enacted, the use of timber, stone, coal, or other deposits.

Thought has been given to the problem of ingress or egress over the public domain to grazing areas, opportunity for prospecting, locating, and development of the mineral resources.

Ninth. The secretary is authorized to examine and classify lands where it may seem that lands have been included that would be available and suitable for homestead purposes and to open such lands to settlement.

Authority is granted to the secretary to exchange public domain lands for privately owned lands, and so forth, in the interest of the public welfare.

Tenth. It is provided that local associations interested in the use of grazing districts may set up advisory boards and that the advisory boards shall be given fullest consideration to the end that the rights and needs of all may be preserved.

Eleventh. It is provided that 15 per cent of all moneys received from grazing districts during any fiscal year may be made available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior for range improvement; that 35 per cent of the moneys received shall be paid to the State in which the grazing district from which the money was raised has been collected, this money to be expended as the State legislature may prescribe for public schools and public roads in the grazing districts where raised.

Twelfth. Where Indian lands may be included under arrangement, 15 per cent of the moneys received for leases shall be used for range improvements, and the entire amount of receipts over and above 15 per cent shall be deposited to the credit of the Indians until the total amount thus deposited shall equal the amounts which the terms of the applicable law, treaty, or agreement specify as payable to the Indians upon the disposal of such lands.

Finally, in my judgment, this bill should be enacted at the earliest moment, not only from the standpoint of protecting the public domain from erosion, extending thereby the best conditions possible from the standpoint of flood control, navigation, water rights, reclamation, water power for all purposes, but in addition for making available the greatest use of the range from the standpoint of its ability to support sheep, cattle, and other livestock, and from the standpoint of protecting wild life and scenic beauty of this vast area.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the amendment providing that acceptance by States shall be given before the measure may become effective has seemed necessary. It will mean delay—delay in all States, even in those States where the citizens are most desirous of beginning operations under the measure. The public lands, as I have said, belong to all the people—they belong to the country. They should be handled in the interest of all States and not alone in the interest of a State where the lands may be situated.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I will take but a few moments.

This bill presents two principal questions.

The first, Do you want to vote to establish a new bureau in the Department of the Interior to perform duties already the subject of the administration of the Forest Service in the Department of Agriculture?

The second is, Shall a present existing policy or one similar thereto covering grazing in the national forests be extended to the balance of the public domain which has not yet been homesteaded or otherwise taken up by settlers?

The questions involved have been the subject of a number of bills pending in this Congress and follow the presentation of the Garfield report of the survey of public-land conditions, upon which extended hearings were had by the Public Lands Committee of the House during this Seventy-second Congress.

One series of bills would take away from the Department of the Interior the administration of millions of acres of public domain and add it to the national forests in various States. Some of these bills have been general in character, seeking additions to all forests in individual States. Other bills have been for specific additions to specific forests. The effect of such bills is intended to place the administration thereof in the Department of Agriculture and under the Forest Service, one of its bureaus.

The other series of bills attempts to give the Department of the Interior a greater scope of administrative power over the remaining public domain in the public-lands States. The 1932 annual report of the Secretary of the Interior accentuates these bills in the following language:

> In the first session of the Seventy-second Congress two vitally important bills were introduced with the department's indorsement—one designed to carry into effect the recommendations of the President's Commission on the Public Domain, which, if enacted, would result in the transfer to the States of all unappropriated, nonmineral public lands, and the other a bill authorizing the Department of the Interior to regulate grazing on the public lands.

That first bill was given extended hearings by the House Committee on the Public Lands, from which it developed that there was practically a unanimity of opinion that the surface rights should not be segregated from the subsurface rights if transfer was made to the States.

Then consideration was given to this Colton bill, intended to provide for regulation of grazing on the public lands. The bill before us to-day is the result of numberless hearings and contains a rewriting of some of the thoughts expressed in the first draft. If enacted in its present form, it would ultimately cover every acre of public domain and put it under police and other administrative policies of the Department of the Interior with the authority to charge "such fees" as shall be "fixed or determined from time to time" by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Why would not that be a wise thing for the control and use of the public domain?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is what is being presented here. It has been difficult to prepare a bill on account of the situation. This bill applies to 11 different States, with 3 different types of public lands.

There are some State organizations that say that this bill will be a real detriment to the open range. But finally all agreed upon a State-option clause that permits each State to determine for itself whether to avail itself of the provisions found in the other 12 sections of the bill, and, if passed, ultimately the public domain will be under the administration of the Department of the Interior from a grazing standpoint.

Grazing in the national forests has been the source of revenues to the United States and charges against the stock raisers for a long time past and has also been the subject of much controversy.

Under the statute the fees for grazing are set by the Secretary of Agriculture. It is just 28 years since the national forests were transferred from the Department of the Interior and placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture. February 1, 1905 (33 stat. 628), is the date of the statute making the transfer of authority.

In 1927 grazing fees were the subject of a conference between stock raisers using the national forests and the then Secretary of Agriculture. Without any enthusiasm exhibited by the stock raisers themselves, when their representatives reported the results of the meeting it was learned that a fee schedule containing a sliding scale of increased fees amounting to 100 per cent was designated to become effective between 1928 and 1931, and continue for the balance of the designated 10-year period which will expire in 1935.

In 1931 the Secretary of Agriculture recognized a complaint that the fees were too high under all of the existing economic conditions. He consulted all the United States Representatives and Senators, and governors, of the 11 public-lands States, 81 in all, and after receiving their replies, upon September 19, 1931, he decided that the fees for 1931 should not be disturbed. At a later date it was ordered that the fees for 1932 should be just one-half of those charged in 1931. A little while ago this same Secretary of Agriculture ordered that the 1931 fees should be restored and that amount should be collected in 1933 grazing. This is a present controversy which is the subject of various bills now pending in the House and Senate. Just last week a subcommittee of the House Committee on Agriculture commenced hearings upon this subject and it is hoped they will be completed this week and the proper adjudication obtained.

In this connection I want to direct your attention to what may be expected when this bill becomes effective. In the 1932 annual report of the Forest Service the Forester states:

> On the whole, the year was one of the severest ever known for the range-livestock industry of the West. Declining markets aggravated the unfavorable conditions. Livestock values in the fall of 1931 were about 50 per cent under those of 1929 and 30 to 35 per cent under those of 1930. Credits were restricted, securities crippled, and many livestock loans placed in a precarious condition.

After reporting the reduction of the fees for 1932 the Forester states:

> In harmony with the policy which has been consistently maintained by the Department of Agriculture, this action was not taken in view of the general economic situation but in recognition of severe natural conditions. The grazing fees are fixed on the basis of a reasonable and fair rate over a period of years, irrespective of fluctuations in market and other economic conditions from year to year. * * *

What the administration under the Secretary of Agriculture has done it may be expected that another administration under the Secretary of the Interior will do.

Why the administration over grazing upon the balance of the public domain should not be vested in the Forest Service, which already has an experienced organization for that purpose, is difficult to understand. No one gives a satisfactory answer. At the present time there are over 130,000,000 acres included in the national forests and about 190,000,000 acres in open public domain not subject to some sort of present reservation. In addition there are approximately 80,000,000 acres of land with various reservations, of which possibly half are Indian lands.

In the national forests 82,761,612 acres of grazing lands accommodate 14,000,000 domestic animals—cattle, horses, and sheep. On the balance of nearly 50,000,000 acres of mountain country large amounts of forage are produced, but are not used by domestic stock. The Forester states—> that this is available to wild life for food and cover.

In his report he also states:

> If some provision for the regulation of the public domain is made it will go a long ways toward solving the growing winter-range problem for game in the western national forest regions.

But the bill before us does not provide for a continuance of present regulations.

It is to create another bureau in another department.

This new bureau in the Department of the Interior will oversee grazing and designate and collect fees therefor. It will place the functions of a new bureau at least parallel to, if not in conflict with, the present existing bureau in the Department of Agriculture.

Instead of placing further grazing jurisdiction within the Forest Service, so that its experienced officials might give the benefit of their experience to starting the administration over these additional areas with a minimum of repetition of the many troubles that accompanied the establishment of the present system on the forest reserves, when this bill passes it will make jobs for a large number of new principal and subordinate officials whose function it will be to divide up the balance of the existing public domain, have its employees patrol the same, and otherwise see that the purposes of this bill are made effective.

I have not been and am not now opposed to extending the administration of grazing control so that the balance of the public domain might be regulated in this respect.

I have been continually opposed to the establishing of new bureaus; and, in regard to grazing, I have tried my best to obtain the favorable consideration of a unified system under the Federal Government. I was not able to do so, and I may very properly say that the Public Lands Committee is not unanimous in the presentation of this bill, but those of us who have been trying to obtain a good bill for submission to you have finally agreed upon an amendment which recognizes that there is a different situation to be considered in different States. The chairman has presented this amendment as a new section, numbered 13, which, in effect, grants a State's option, so that it will not become effective in any State until its provisions have been approved and affirmatively accepted by the legislature of that State. It permits cooperative arrangements between the Secretary of the Interior and each such State in respect to its public lands, whether the lands are directly owned by the State or controlled by public subdivisions thereof.

With such an amendment, each State is given an opportunity to further survey its grazing situation and determine the wisest course to be followed.

The stock raisers, whether cattle or sheep, are still in controversy as to whether this bill proposes a good or a bad remedy. Whole districts are divided on the subject. A few meet and pass resolutions asking that the bill be passed. Others take exactly the opposite view.

If the amendment is adopted, these contending groups will have the opportunity to discuss the questions involved before their own legislatures, and thus arrive at a conclusion which will speak the mind of each individual State.

That seems to be fair.

I do not want to stand in the position of failing to vote for a just remedial measure, which is intended to straighten out, to some extent, the controversies which have caused the consideration of this legislation, merely because the controversies have not been settled. Notwithstanding the majority of the Public Lands Committee are submitting to you the establishment of a new bureau which is a duplicate of an existing agency, I sincerely trust that the amendment will be adopted, and then if this bill passes no State will be burdened with this additional bureau unless its citizens want to burden themselves therewith and to have another place for its citizens to go and fight over grazing privileges and all those questions which arise in connection therewith.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. This bill practically does away with homesteading.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. While the bill in its terms expressly does not do that, it is my opinion that the practical effect will be that in the grazing areas there will be difficulty for any homesteader to initiate a right which he can perfect.

Mr. COLTON. It provides, first, for a survey of these public-domain lands, and then the Secretary is to designate all the lands that are susceptible of homesteading for agriculture.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. All those lands that are designated as susceptible to homesteading for agriculture will not be included in any of these districts to be organized under this bill.

Mr. COLTON. That is my understanding.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. I see, on page 6 of the bill, that the Secretary of the Interior can accept lands that are not Government lands as gifts. Is that true?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. And then, on page 2, the Secretary of the Interior is allowed to modify the boundaries.

Mr. COLTON. Of the grazing areas; yes.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Would those include or allow the Secretary of the Interior to accept as a gift the Rockefeller Plan in the State of Wyoming, to be added to the forest reserves, with the consent of the head of the forestry department?

Mr. COLTON. I do not think this has anything to do with forests.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Or with national parks then?

Mr. COLTON. I do not think so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

REQUIRING THE NAMING OF SUBCONTRACTORS

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, H. R. 9921, to require contractors on public-building projects to name their subcontractors, material men, and supply men, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That contracts in excess of $5,000 in amount for the construction, alteration, or repair of any public building of the United States or of the District of Columbia within the geographical limits of the States of the Union or the District of Columbia shall be awarded only to bidders whose bids are accompanied by a statement containing the names and addresses of the subcontractors, material men, and supply men whose services the bidder intends to utilize in the performance of the work. Such contracts shall also contain provisions for withholding from, or payment by, the contractor of such penalties as may be fixed in the contract for failure to utilize such subcontractors, material men, and supply men in the performance of the work. Sums assessed or paid as penalties for such failure may be remitted or refunded, in whole or in part, by the head of the department, bureau, agency, or independent establishment of the Government or the District of Columbia which has made the contract on behalf of the United States or the District of Columbia, but only in case it is shown to his satisfaction that substitution for a subcontractor, material man, or supply man, as the case may be, was justified by reason of the inability or unwillingness of such subcontractor, material man, or supply man to furnish the materials or supplies, or properly to perform the work, as the case may be.

SEC. 2. No claim for the remission or refund of any penalty shall be granted under this act unless application therefor is filed within one year after the liability of the contractor accrues. If any such application for refund of any sum paid as a penalty is denied, or if no application for such refund is filed within the period provided for filing application under this section, such sum shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect 30 days after its passage, but shall not affect any contract then existing or any contract that may hereafter be entered into pursuant to invitations for bids that are outstanding at the time of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York to 20 minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill grows out of the very vicious practice of peddling bids in connection with public buildings. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] introduced the bill and a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures held hearings. The hearings are available at the Clerk's desk. It develops that the general contractors, when submitting bids, call upon the subcontractors to submit bids in connection with various work, such as plumbing, electrical work, and so forth. The general contractor uses all subcontractors' lowest bids in reaching his estimate, but after the general contractor succeeds in securing a contract it is found that he does not give preference to the subcontractors who submitted the lowest bids and upon which his general bid was based. There was presented to the committee evidence that the general contractors, after securing the bid, would peddle the subcontractors' bids—that is, by offering the work to others who would agree to do it at a lower price—and in that way secure bids, after he had secured the contract, below the amount that he had used in submitting his bids to the Treasury Department. It is a vicious practice. It is admitted that this applies only to the Government, but the thought is that the little fellows would have a better opportunity to be recognized if legislation of this character is enacted, and probably the States and municipalities would follow with similar legislation.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], the author of the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, when this legislation was proposed, during the summer vacation that we had two years ago, I had occasion in my own State to learn at first hand that the general contractor and broker contractor were resorting to the very vicious practice known as bid chiseling or bid peddling. The general contractor is protected by the United States Government by law, whereby that contractor receives a job when he is the lowest bidder. On the other hand, the subcontractor, or material man, or supply man, who bids to that contractor has no protection whatsoever, because they substitute one subcontractor or material man for another without regard to the fact that the subcontractor has spent considerable money trying to figure out the basis of his bid. I attended the hearings in the House and the hearings in the Senate before the committees, and every witness that came before those two committees, including those from the department, admitted that this is a very vicious practice, generally recognized as such throughout the United States.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the Treasury Department in favor of the gentleman's bill?

Mr. GOSS. The Treasury Department is opposed to the bill, and the reason for that is that they say it would take a longer time for the contractor to submit his bid than at present. I submit to the House that even if it takes two or three or four weeks longer, a delay now occurs on the building while these contractors are out peddling for their bids at a lower price. We are constructing these large buildings, and they were initiated partly for the relief of unemployment, and yet they are making more unemployment all over the country by breaking these subcontractors and material men.

Mr. BRITTEN. The bill provides that where a general contractor in submitting his bid on a big job does not indicate in that bid the names and addresses of all of the material men, all of the supply men, and all of the subcontractors with whom he expects to do business——

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman is in error there. He could still be the successful bidder, but he may substitute those contractors when it is found that they can not agree on the award or have not been put in.

I may say to the gentleman that was brought out clearly in the hearings, but if there is any saving made on the substitution of that contract, that saving goes to the United States Treasury and not into the pockets of the large contractor.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. My time is very limited.

Mr. BRITTEN. But the gentleman does not answer my question. The bill reads:

> Contracts shall be awarded only to bidders whose bids are accompanied by a statement containing the names and addresses of the subcontractors, material men, and supply men.

Mr. GOSS. That is correct.

Mr. BRITTEN. They are the only contractors authorized to bid.

Mr. GOSS. They can put in their name, and, I may say to the gentleman, they must have figures from some one when they put in their bid, or they would not know where they were.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will this bill not eliminate all the small, independent contractors?

Mr. GOSS. No, indeed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will it not be favorable to the big contractors who to-day have their subcontractors and their supply men that they deal with?

Mr. GOSS. It will have just the opposite effect.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I can not see it.

Mr. GOSS. And the large general contractor is the only one who is opposing this bill.

Now, the general contractors have recently wired to the Members of Congress, while we have not tried to have any of the subcontractors or material men influence them, but we want the legislation to stand on its merits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself four minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bad bill. It is designed to increase the cost of letting contracts on the part of the Government. It is opposed by the Treasury Department, the only department that appeared before the Committee on Expenditures, at the hearing. The Secretary of the Treasury, on page 2 of the hearings, stated his objection to the bill. The Supervising Architect was called, and he said:

> Usually we advertise for a period of 4 or 5 or 6 weeks, and in the central portion of the United States we might expect bids from the west or the east coast. As a matter of fact, the Bangor building was constructed by a contractor who lived in the State of Washington. We have to allow time for advertising for prospective bidders to make application.

The way it is done now on the large contracts is that the general contractor makes his bid on the basis of his previous experience and not upon subcontracts that are submitted to him at the time he makes his general bid. The general contractor may do that on small jobs, but on the big jobs he does it on his previous experience. This bill would prevent that practice. It requires the general contractor to specify a hardware dealer from whom he would buy a pound of nails. It requires him to specify the lumber yard from which he would buy a stick of timber. He is prevented from having the advantage of situations that might save the Government thousands and thousands of dollars, such as in scaffolding. He could buy second-hand scaffolding that would be just as good. In shoring up, the same thing could be done. He can not take advantage of the markets. When he takes a contract he does not know who his painting contractor may be a year later. He can not be tied up to such provisions and not make his bid higher than he would submit now. Why should we pass a bill which has no object and no result possible except to increase the cost of contracts to the Government? In the nature of things, we are at a point where we are close to the bottom on our commodity prices and prices for construction. We should not at this time go against the grain and pass a bill which will increase the cost of building construction at a time when we can not afford to increase it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact that where the large contractor and a small contractor are figuring on the same general contract, the small contractor will not get a sub-bid from the subcontractor, and the little subcontractor would rather figure with the big contractor, so the result of this legislation, if enacted into law, will be to put every little general contractor in the United States out of business?

Mr. TABER. That is just the picture exactly.

Mr. MILLARD. Is Mr. Wetmore opposed to this?

Mr. TABER. He is, upon numerous grounds stated in the hearings, covering several pages.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, there are only two points necessary to dispose of this question. Any contractor can protect himself to-day by dealing with a subcontractor, subject to the acceptance of his contract. Then the subcontractor can be protected in every way. Years ago it was my duty to make contracts for paper for the State, which contracts reached many thousands of dollars. There were a number of subcontractors with the paper contractor which could not have any other result than to largely increase, in every case, the contracts that were made. That would be the result here. Every man would try to protect himself with a safe bid. This is simply to add to the confusion of making contracts, it would seem to me. As I said, there is no possible excuse that can be offered for it.

Mr. DYER. And there is nobody for it.

Mr. FREAR. There is nobody for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was called on the calendar I objected to it. I thought it was a corollary to the Davis-Bacon bill. I was against the Davis-Bacon bill because I knew it would create in Washington just such a condition as we now have in this city, a condition where you are paying bricklayers and plasterers from the Government Treasury $14 a day, with 15,000,000 other men elsewhere are out of jobs.

You are paying the carpenters here $11 a day out of the Public Treasury when there are thousands of carpenters in Abilene, Potsdam, and other places who would be glad to come here for $5 a day. [Applause.]

Last July 1 the contractors here found out there were thousands of men clamoring for jobs and they set a new wage scale here and paid carpenters only $8 a day. From the 1st day of July the Government has taken advantage of that fact and every contract which has been let since that date has been let on the basis of $8 per day for carpenters, and the unions have been permitting their men to work for $8 per day since the 1st of last July. Yet, when the public grandstands are now to be built they saw an opportunity to make a grandstand play and they are now demanding that $11 a day be paid for all of that work and that $11 a day be paid the contractors on all other Government jobs. They are still contending for $14 a day be paid to plasterers and bricklayers.

Now, I want to ask my friend from St. Louis and my friend from Chicago: Can you go back home and square yourselves with your carpenters and your bricklayers and your plasterers who are working in St. Louis and Chicago for just half what they are getting in Washington, when by your vote you supported the Davis-Bacon bill, which pays these classes of workmen twice as much in the Nation's Capital on Government work out of the Government Treasury from the tax money of the people?

Mr. DYER. This bill will do just exactly what the gentleman is trying to stop.

Mr. BLANTON. I opposed this bill for quite a while until I found out it would benefit the little contractors in the United States and protect them from the big contractors.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLANTON. Therefore, I am going to vote for this Goss bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is considerable contrariety of opinion, even among contractors and subcontractors themselves, as to just what steps should be taken to correct the evils incidental to the practice of shopping bids.

There is pending at this time before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a measure which seeks to correct these evils along a different line. That bill provides that separate contracts shall be made with subcontractors, material men, and so forth. Hearings have been held on this measure and further hearings are contemplated. It seems to be generally agreed that the adoption of the provisions of that bill will really have an important effect in preventing the shopping of bids.

After studying the particular measure now before us in the House, it seems to me that by its very terms it nullifies what it undertakes to do. In the first instance, it provides that the bids of general contractors shall be accompanied by the names and addresses of subcontractors, material men and supply men whose services the bidder intends to utilize in the performance of the work. Then it provides that contracts with general contractors shall contain provisions for withholding payment of certain amounts as penalties for failure to use the services of such subcontractors, material men and so forth. I understand that a decision of the Comptroller General and another of the Supreme Court would prevent the imposition of such penalties. But, assuming that they could be lawfully imposed, the bill then recites that any sum assessed or paid as penalties for such failure may be remitted or refunded when the contractor was justified by reason of the inability or unwillingness of such subcontractors, material men, and so forth, to furnish the material or supplies or properly to perform the work.

It seems to me that this opens wide the door for fraud and that it will not prevent the shopping of bids at which the measure aims. A general contractor could easily name subsidiaries or straw men who would decline to perform the services for one or both of the two reasons stated in the bill, and then the contractor could shop bids very largely at his own pleasure. In other words, in my judgment, this bill will not prevent the practice intended to be corrected and may even encourage it. Legislation along the line of separate contracts with subcontractors, awarded on low responsible bids, would be much more effective in bringing about the desired result. Hearings are being held on such a measure.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that is calculated to help the subcontractor, or material man. A general contractor goes out and asks for a bid on stone, or steel, upon which to base the general bid. Having received those bids or estimates after a great deal of care and expense on the part of the material man, the general contractor when he gets a contract then begins to peddle around and bid one fellow against another in order to make more out of the general contract. It is to cure this evil and to have the Government square not only with the general contractor but also with the subcontractor and the material man that this bill is proposed. I think the Government should be square with the man who furnishes the material or who takes a subcontract on a Government job, who goes to great expense to figure out the necessary amount, dimension, prices and expense of doing the part of the work falling in his line and furnishing the general contractor the information upon which to make his bid. The general contractor having received the bid on the basis of the estimates of the subcontractors and material men, then turns his back on the men who made it possible for him to get the contract and he bargains and jockeys them around to try to make a little more out of the general contract. That is not a saving to the Government but is just a little more velvet in the pocket of the general contractor and is made at the expense of the material man and the subcontractor. This is the evil we are trying to remedy.

There is a good deal of complaint from the limestone men. There are several responsible companies. They submit their figures and then the general contractor begins to work around to see if he can get the material at a better figure; and I presume what is true with reference to the limestone men is true with reference to those who furnish other material.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I can not conceive of a set of business men enacting this measure into law. Should it become a law, it will prove a nightmare to those who support it. Instead of being a benefit to the subcontractor, it will mean driving him entirely out of business. Under such a law it would cost the Government 10 to 25 per cent more upon all of its building contracts. This measure requires that every contractor bidding upon a Government job must name the parties to whom he is supposed to let the subcontracts and to name all the parties from whom he is to buy his building materials.

Here is a simple example: In my home city the Government concludes to build a post office; its plans are prepared and are on file with the Treasury Department here in Washington. Contractors do not go and look over the building site in my home town. In most instances they send for the plans and specifications or come here to Washington and bid from the plans and specifications. In doing so they may confer with some electrical, plumbing, elevator, or heating subcontractors; but they do not figure nor have an opportunity to figure upon brick, stone, lime, cement, and lumber in my home territory. It would, therefore, mean that no one in my home community could furnish material because the contractor would not know the name, and he, therefore, could not specify them and would have to specify some well-known firm that had a stable price on the material that he was to use.

Another illustration would be that the contractor would not confer with the subcontractors and would so state in his bid and would, therefore, bid on his own judgment, and as a result his bid would be higher to the Government, and the subcontractor would be entirely eliminated.

I believe that the Government should have the right, as the Treasury Department is contending, to obtain the lowest bids, and the way to obtain these lowest bids for the erection of these Government buildings is to have an open field and allow the contractor to bid as low as possible in order to get the contract.

This law is just another effort on behalf of a few interested people to the great detriment of the overwhelming majority and to the great loss to this Government to restrict the right of competition and the right to do business.

As a general rule, men who are engaged in the business of bidding on Government contracts are those who have plenty of capital back of them, much equipment, and are qualified to make bond. They maintain as a part of their establishment engineers and men versed in every line in the contracting business. If this law were enacted, these contractors would do all the jobs, and the so-called subcontractors would get none. As a general rule, the so-called subcontractors are men without much equipment and financial backing; therefore are able to subcontract certain portions of a building cheaper than the man who has much overhead. It, therefore, follows as a common-sense conclusion, that this bill injures the man who it is claimed it will benefit. Say for instance I am a contractor, and a man engaged in the electrical, heating, elevator, or plumbing contracting gets a copy of the specifications and knows that I am bidding on the general contract and tells me that he will do a certain part of the work for a certain price, this bill seeks to make me award him the contract as subcontractor on the figures that he gives me regardless of whether or not I were to do it myself or could get it done cheaper. In many instances the subcontractor has no money invested and no equipment, as I have stated, and if the price of labor or material would go up after I made my bid, I could not make him comply with his statement or offer, and I would have to hold the bag and go on and fulfill the contract I had made with the Government. Realizing this, my original bid would be higher.

This bill is clearly against the interest of all material men in the community where the improvement is to be erected, it stifles and kills competition, and is a dangerous and most vicious bill. This measure has not the first earmark of being in the interest of labor as claimed. It is not even in the interest of the so-called subcontractor. Its enactment would prove most valuable to original contractors and be the means of robbing the Government.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add anything that has already been said in opposition to H. R. 9921, a bill to require contractors to name their subcontractors, material and supply men.

I have read carefully the testimony in the hearings before the Subcommittee of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is chairman.

It has not been brought to my attention that hearings have been held on H. R. 9921, the bill now before the House.

I find that this bill has been very strongly opposed by James A. Wetmore, the acting supervising architect of the Treasury Department, a man of unusual ability whose opinion should be given great weight. He states that the proposals of the bill which attempt to prevent what is known as "bid peddling" or "bid shopping" as a matter of fact will not do so. From the standpoint so far as the Government's end of the proposition is concerned this would tend to slow up action on the building program and will slow up very materially the limit of time bids will be on the market. Another thing, quoting from Mr. Wetmore, is that this will increase the cost of Government contracts.

This bill would not operate so as to do away with the shopping of bids if the contractors must, before bidding, say definitely who are going to be their subcontractors, as they would do their shopping before.

Mr. Wetmore was very carefully cross-examined by the chairman, Mr. Goss, and others and very clearly shows that this bill would not be beneficial to the Government.

The report further shows that the Secretary of Agriculture, Arthur M. Hyde, who was asked for an opinion, very clearly states that the Government does not need this legislation and that he can not recommend its enacment.

Also, the Hon. Patrick J. Hurley, the Secretary of War, recommends that this bill be not enacted into law and states that the proposed bill would make contracts too rigid and would deprive the contractors of any discretionary control which should be left to them within reasonable limits if the work is to proceed in a reasonable and orderly manner with due regard for efficiency and satisfactory results in the interests of the Government. If the bill is enacted into law it will probably result in increased cost to the Government, the amount of which can not be estimated.

I received many telegrams and letters from the best qualified contractors of my district who are all opposed to the passage of this bill; also the new York State Builders Branch of the Associated General Contractors of America (Inc.), the Westchester County chapter of the corporation, the William L. Crow Construction Co., E. Gisondi (Inc.), Frank N. Goble (Inc.), Robert G. MacKay (Inc.), and many others, stating that this would be inimicable to the best interests of the building industry and would not achieve its avowed purpose of stopping bid peddling.

I do not wish to criticize the committee, but your attention is called to the fact that when the House committee was holding hearings on the original bill, H. R. 4680, the opponents to the bill were not called. I refer to page 21 of the hearings, in a statement made by Mr. COCHRAN. The contractors of my district believe this very unfair.

The following five points have been submitted in a brief which has been sent to me by the Associated General Contractors of America:

1. It would greatly weaken the managerial control of Federal Government construction projects by the general contractors, thus jeopardizing the proper coordination of the work and inviting delays.

2. It would slow up the Government's building program considerably, inasmuch as it would be necessary to extend very materially the length of time that bids are on the market.
3. It would invite subterfuge and collusion on the part of both general and subcontractors.
4. It would materially increase the cost of Government construction.
5. It would not achieve its objective of eliminating "bid shopping" and "bid peddling."

I will not go into detail on these points, as most of them have already been called to your attention.

I am strongly opposed to the provisions of this bill and hope it will not be passed. It seems to me to be particularly mischievous and fraught with great danger to the public in their building program; and in constructing a building, like running a ship, there must be one head who is the direct responsible driving force. If this bill goes through you will undermine the position of the general contractors and cause chaotic conditions on building contracts, which, of course, will mean added cost, long delays on completion of contracts, without any benefiting results. The general contractor's position as chief of the operation must be maintained and must be strengthened rather than weakened, and I therefore strongly urge the House to vote against this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman says he has telegrams from the big contractors.

Mr. MILLARD. Big and small both.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That supports my contention that this bill is in the interest of the small contractor.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Are there not more small contractors than large ones in the gentleman's district?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes; that is quite true.

Mr. BRITTEN. And the gentleman's contractors, whether they be big or small, have told him that it would be impossible to comply with the bill as now drawn.

Mr. MILLARD. That is correct.

Mr. BRITTEN. Because, how does a contractor know from whom he is going to buy brick or cement or sand or tile or anything of that sort a year or a year and a half from now? And he can not possibly indicate that to the Government in advance.

Mr. MILLARD. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, Mr. LAGUARDIA.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will not charge me with trying to protect the big fellow.

While I can understand the motive and the very good intention which permeated this bill, the gentleman's bill is so impracticable that it will be ineffective and will produce directly the opposite result from the one which the gentleman seeks to accomplish.

There is one thing I want to point out to the gentleman from Missouri, because he is always so fair and he is always so accurate that I believe this is entirely unintentional. If there is one department of the Government that is in a position to know about these conditions, that is in a position to advise us about a bill of this kind, it is the office of the Comptroller General or the General Accounting Office, the auditing agency of Congress.

I find the gentleman's report is dated May 11, 1932. The hearings were held in the month of March; and yet, Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of a letter written to the gentleman from Missouri in reference to a similar bill, dated March 14, 1932, and I am going to put the entire letter in the RECORD from the Comptroller General, who passes upon every voucher of every building contractor which is covered by the gentleman's bill. The Comptroller General advises against the purposes and principle of this bill. He says:

It is the view of this office that the enactment of this bill would tend to increase the cost of the performance of Government contracts for the construction of buildings without compensating benefits to the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That letter was not based upon this bill; it was based upon H. R. 4680.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; but the provisions are the same.

Mr. GOSS. No; they are not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Wait a minute. The purpose, scope, and principle are the same. It is pointed out in this bill that the Government might get some compensating benefits. Where? I will read that, and this is from the bill now before the House.

Such contracts shall also contain provisions for withholding from, or payment by, the contractor of such penalties as may be fixed in the contract for failure to utilize such subcontractors, material men, and supply men in the performance of the work. Sums assessed or paid as penalties for such failure may be remitted or refunded.

And so on.

What does the Comptroller say in that letter about this bill or another with the same provision?

Any lump sum that is to be imposed on the contractor for such a failure would be more in the nature of a penalty or fine, and your attention is invited to the definition of liquidated damages contained in the One hundred and eighty-third United States Reports. It is doubtful whether the statute seeking to impose on the contractor such a fine or penalty in case of liquidated damages would be sustained by the courts.

Now here is the letter in full:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 14, 1932.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Consideration has been given your letter of February 17, 1932, as follows:

"There is submitted herewith a copy of the bill H. R. 4680, to require contractors on public building projects to name their subcontractors, material men, and supply men, upon which the committee would like to have an expression of the views of your office. Hearings on this legislation were started to-day and will go to the printer in the near future. Consequently your report will have to be received shortly if it is to be included in the record."

It is the view of this office that the enactment of this bill would tend to increase the cost of the performance of Government contracts for the construction of buildings without compensating benefits to the United States.

General contracts for the construction of public buildings are let as the result of public competition, and, of course, it behooves the general contractors to secure the lowest possible subcontractors qualified to do such of the work as is to be sublet. If subcontractors bid against each other and reduce prices below a fair rate, they have the means of protecting themselves in their own hands, and it is not believed that the United States should attempt to regulate competition between subcontractors in their relation to general contractors. It doubtless occurs in numerous cases that the bids of subcontractors are considered too high by the general contractor and that estimates are placed in the bids with the view of the general contractor doing the work or securing a lower proposal from some other subcontractor.

It would interfere with legislative control over the uses of appropriated moneys for public construction work and would be uneconomical if a general contractor must name in his proposals his subcontractors and be required to use such subcontractors under a penalty of liquidated damages, and it seems obvious that should the bill become law the peddling of subcontracts will take place before rather than after the general contracts are awarded, thus necessitating the delay incident to obtaining legally binding options from subcontractors and tending to deter some general contractors from bidding.

Section 1, page 2, of the bill provides that certain contracts shall contain a provision for payment by the contractor of liquidated damages for failure to utilize subcontractors, material men, and supply men named in the accepted proposal. It seems clear that no liquidated damages, as such, could be imposed for failure to use parties the contractor stated in his proposal. Any lump sum sought to be imposed on the contractor for such failure would be more in the nature of a penalty or fine and your attention is invited to the definition and application of liquidated damages contained in Sun Printing & Publishing Association v. Moore (183 U. S. 642) and Wise v. United States (249 U. S. 361).

It is doubtful whether a statute seeking to impose on a contractor such a fine or penalty under the guise of liquidated damages would be sustained by the courts. It is to be observed no damage would accrue to the United States because of the failure of a general contractor to use one subcontractor, material man, or supply man rather than others so long as the work is performed in accordance with the advertised specifications.

With respect to lines 4 to 12, page 2, of the bill, attention is invited to the fact that a large amount of building construction work is performed by other branches of the Government than the Treasury Department and manifestly the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, a subordinate in the Treasury Department, should not be empowered to remit or refund damages which have accrued under contracts with other departments and establishments of the Government because the contractor did not use the subcontractor and/or subcontractors named in the proposals.

If there is further information you may desire with respect to the matter an effort will be made to furnish same upon request.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

So let me point out that the benefits sought to be obtained here will not be derived, because we can not collect them under the opinion of the Comptroller General and the United States Supreme Court. Every department of the Government that have contact with this kind of work are opposed to this bill. The Treasury Department, the Office of the Supervising Architect, the War Department, the General Accounting Office, all are unanimous against this bill; all agree that it is not practicable; all agree that it will increase the cost to the Government; all agree that it does not say what it intends to do.

Let me point out that the big contractor has the advantage over the small contractor. He can do his own estimating and figuring, and he can bid without giving any name.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD] opposes the bill. That, indeed, is significant. I am now convinced the bill should be rejected. I know of a case where if this bill had been a law it would have cost the Government over a million dollars. The bid of the general contractor for limestone from Indiana was for over $1,800,000, and the contractor put in a bid for $1,000,000 less, knowing that the bid of the limestone company—and I mean the Indiana Limestone Co.—was exorbitant, and the United States benefited to the extent of $700,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE].

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I favor this bill in the interest of eliminating bid shopping by general contractors. It is one of the worst-abused things we have to contend with to-day. The general contractor does not go to a fly-by-night to get his bids. He goes to a reputable concern and gets his bid for a subcontract. As soon as he gets the general contract, then he begins his bid shopping.

How does a general contractor know whether his bid would be good or not? When the gentleman states that the contractor knew how to bid and intimated he disregarded the bid of subcontractor, why does he go to a subcontractor in the first place? The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] says that there was a bid for $1,300,000 for limestone, and it was cut down to $700,000. As a matter of fact, I am positive that the gentleman from New York can not substantiate those figures.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have got them in the RECORD heretofore, and they can not be denied.

Mr. CROWE. The general contractor, after compiling figures from subcontractors, submits his bid on that basis. As soon as he has secured the general contract, then he begins his chiseling and beats down the subcontractor who made it. Then the subcontractor who obtains the subcontract will begin to hammer on his job, and the Government is the loser instead of the general contractor. The Government loses, and the general contractor gains, and the subcontractor always has to lose. Reputable, efficient men in the limestone business, as well as structural-steel men in my district, inform me that on contracts on which they are the low bidders and submit honest bids at lowest possible prices, that even though they are the firms the general contractor secures his general contract through, yet they never in turn secure the job. They are always left out. The general contractor starts peddling the job as soon as he secures his contract. Every dollar he beats the subcontractor down goes into the general contractor's pockets, and he gains by that amount. The Government has not saved a cent. This method is breaking up hundreds of subcontractors.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I have had 20 years' experience as a general contractor. I have dealt with subcontractors and material men all over the United States from Portland, Oreg., and the Puget Sound Navy Yard, to Worcester, Mass., and to the Algiers Naval Station at New Orleans. This is a bad bill from the Government standpoint, and I am talking now as a Member of Congress. It should not be enacted into law, because it imposes certain impossible conditions on the general contractor. Take a contractor on a job running for several years, like that of the Chicago post office. He can not possibly indicate to the Treasury from whom he is going to buy his brick, or his cement, or his tile, or his marble one or two years hence. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made a wonderful argument. He thought that he was talking in favor of the bill. He made a great argument against the bill, as a matter of fact, because he complained about existing high wages. If you desire a successful contractor of to-day to guarantee that he will not reduce wages in the forthcoming years, irrespective of the trend of the times, then you should vote for the passage of this bill. This bill, if passed, will do damage to every small general contractor in the country, and, in addition, it will cost the taxpayers aplenty.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman was a big contractor.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, I was a little contractor. And I say this to the gentleman, that the thousands and thousands of subcontractors all over the United States do not prefer to do business with the small, general contractor, because the small general contractor has not the facilities to do the larger work, and consequently he is unlikely to get big contracts. The small subcontractor prefers, of course, and every subcontractor prefers to do business with the big contractor, because that is where his best interests lie. This is a bad bill. It is impossible of enforcement. The Treasury Department, the Comptroller General, the War Department, and every other interested branch of the Government is positively opposed to this bill. It is against public policy and in direct opposition to economical government. It is drawn on a wrong theory and will do no one any good.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, four minutes, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, we had all of this matter threshed out before the Committee on Labor when we had the Metcalf-Connery bill under consideration, which bill passed the House and the Senate last session and was vetoed by the President. This is a good bill; it is not a bad bill, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] said, and the proof that it is a good bill is that we have heard men stand up here to-day and say that they have telegrams from all over the United States from the big contractors who are opposed to this bill.

We are facing not the question of the general contracts alone, but we have the question of wages that is behind it. When a general contractor puts in a bid at the present time he does not have to name the subcontractor from whom he is going to get his brick or who is going to do his electrical work, but he starts out with a bid of say $300,000 for a post office, which may be a very low bid, and then he goes all through that section of the country and says to the subcontractors "You, Jones," or "You, Brown, bid against each other, and cut down on your bid," and Jones cuts to the bone with the idea in his mind that he will pay small wages to his men, and in that way he will be able to put a bid in that is lower than any competitor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How can they pay low wages, with the Connery bill in effect?

Mr. CONNERY. But the Connery bill did not go through. It was vetoed by President Hoover. If it had been signed we would not need this bill now.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Or with the Bacon-Davis bill, which went through.

Mr. CONNERY. If the Metcalf-Connery bill had been signed by Mr. Hoover, you would not need this bill or the Davis-Bacon bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Bacon-Davis bill provides for the payment of the generally prevailing rate of wages.

Mr. CONNERY. But it is neither observed nor enforced.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman knows where I stand on labor matters.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] has always been a loyal friend of labor.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that to-day they must pay the labor scale of wages, and must pay the prevailing rate?

Mr. CONNERY. No. They do not do it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They do.

Mr. CONNERY. I will give my distinguished colleague a sample of how they do not observe the law. They started out by paying 20 cents an hour on the Lynn post office until I had an inspector brought on from the Department of Labor three times to get them up to 50 cents an hour.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This will eliminate the small contractor.

Mr. CONNERY. It will help the prevailing rate of wages and will help the small contractor.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am very much interested in the gentleman's opening remarks. He says the general contractor when submitting his bid to the Government puts his bid away down low. Is it not to the interest of the Government to get low bids?

Mr. CONNERY. He does that because he knows that he is going out and make his subcontractors almost go broke trying to give him a low bid, and that fellow in turn makes his employees work for lower wages.

Mr. GOSS. Is it not true if this bill were the law, the subcontractor, knowing his bid would be used, would give a low bid first, and not put it high as it is now, to be chiseled down?

Mr. CONNERY. He would give a reasonable bid, and it would stop bid peddling and bid chiseling. You would have a reasonable bid going to the Treasury. These contractors want to get the contract and they are going to bid as low as they can.

Mr. LANHAM. Does the gentleman not think that the purpose could perhaps better be effected and the evils cured by passing the bill pending before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which provides for a separate contract on the part of the Government with the subcontractors for materials and supplies?

Mr. CONNERY. I may say to the gentleman that the legislation which would correct this situation, the prevailing rate-of-wage situation, and almost all the trouble in the public-building labor situation, would be the passage and signing of the Metcalf-Connery bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 66, noes 59.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri and Mr. SCHAFER objected to the vote on the ground that there was not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. (After counting): Obviously there is no quorum present. The roll call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 181, nays 126, not voting 119, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

REMOVAL OF INDIGENT ALIENS NOT SUBJECT TO DEPORTATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13811) to amend section 23 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 874).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. Will there be any further suspensions considered to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair is advised there will be no further suspensions to-day.

Mr. JENKINS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE] is responsible for this bill. The bill comes from the Committee on Immigration. I notice the chairman of the Committee on Immigration is not present. I wonder if this bill could not be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. CROWE. Does the gentleman object to the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. No. But the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] intended to offer an amendment, and unless that amendment is agreed to, the gentleman from Washington would object. The gentleman desires to provide that when those people are once sent out they can not come back.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I had a similar thought in mind, and I think the gentleman from Indiana might accept that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have a material amendment, that these aliens shall not be removed unless with their approval.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, that is the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; that is not the law. The Commissioner of Immigration is sending them, without their request, without their consent, out of the country.

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have known of some outrageous actions of immigration officials.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But there is a class of aliens who, if they become public charges within five years, from causes existent prior to their entry, of course are deportable. This bill, as I understand, takes care of those who become public charges, but from causes subsequent to their entry, and must be voluntarily deported at their own request.

Mr. STAFFORD. No, not at their own request. They are deporting aliens because they are not able in these times of storm and stress to make a living.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not object to the matter being passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

LANDS OF KICKAPOO AND AFFILIATED INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4339) repealing certain provisions of the act of June 21, 1906, as amended, relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of Kickapoo and affiliated Indians of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of the Kickapoo and affiliated Indians under the heading "Kickapoo" (34 Stat. L. 363) in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907," approved June 21, 1906, as amended, is hereby repealed.

All lands from which restrictions have heretofore been removed by operation of said act, still held by the Indians and free from encumbrances, the restrictions under which such lands were formerly held are hereby reimposed, to continue for a period of 10 years from the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, further extend said period in accordance with existing law.

With the following committee amendment: On page 2, strike out all of lines 1 to 8, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. All restrictions upon said lands which were removed by operation of said act are hereby reimposed for a period of 10 years from the date of the approval of this act on all of such lands as are still held or owned by the Indians: Provided, however, That valid encumbrances now resting against any of said lands shall not in any manner be affected by the provisions of this act, but any of such lands so encumbered, if still owned by the Indians, shall, when such encumbrances have been removed, become subject to the provisions of this act as fully and to the same extent as if such lands were now unencumbered: Provided further, That the President may, in his discretion, in accordance with existing law, further extend the period of restriction herein provided for."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PEND OREILLE LAKE BRIDGE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13974) granting the consent of Congress to Bonner County, State of Idaho, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pend Oreille Lake at the city of Sandpoint in the State of Idaho.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Bonner County, State of Idaho, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Pend Oreille Lake at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at the city of Sandpoint, State of Idaho, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE, BUSHKILL, PA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14030) authorizing the Bushkill Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River at or near Bushkill, Pa.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri, Mr. LAGUARDIA, and Mr. PATTERSON objected.

COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGE, THE DALLES, OREG.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14060) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will permit, this bill provides for the city to build the bridge. Why delay the matter?

Mr. JENKINS. I have no interest in the matter other than that I was asked to make the request by a gentleman who is interested, and I notice the gentleman is not present.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In this case the city is going to build the bridge. The gentleman would not stop a municipality from engaging in this enterprise, would he?

Mr. JENKINS. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection to my request?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The next bill, calling for the construction of a bridge by private people 5 miles away from this bridge, is one to which I shall object, for it will be in conflict with what the city is doing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg., authorized to be built by Dalles City by an act of Congress approved February 20, 1931, heretofore extended by act of Congress approved February 11, 1932, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from February 20, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "hereby," insert the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE DALLES BRIDGE CO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14109) authorizing The Dalles Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Columbia River at a point approximately 5 miles upstream from the city of The Dalles, in the State of Oregon, to a point on the opposite shore in the State of Washington.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri and Mr. LAGUARDIA objected.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER, SHAWNEETOWN, ILL.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14134) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., and a point opposite thereto in Union County, Ky.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri and Mr. LAGUARDIA objected.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I shall be glad to withhold it to permit the gentleman to make a statement, but I shall object.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Will not the gentleman consent to have the bill passed over without prejudice until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] can be here?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I shall be pleased to let it go over without prejudice, but I shall object to the bill when it is called up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, BROWNVILLE, NEBR.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 5235) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri and Mr. LAGUARDIA objected.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER AT ASTORIA, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 5357, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is a very much needed bridge. It is to be constructed under the direction of the mayor and others active in behalf of the people and the city of Astoria, as I am informed. They intend to get the money, I understand, from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is a very necessary connecting link between the coast highways in Oregon and Washington, and the traffic is growing very materially. They have ferry accommodations, but in the mornings and evenings and on Sundays and on holidays the people have to wait for hours in order to get across. The Oregon coast highway ends at the south side of the Columbia River and the Washington Coast Highway ends at the north side of the Columbia River. There will be a great deal of traffic over the proposed bridge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The first thought of constructing a bridge at Astoria dates back to several years ago when one Elliott, toll-bridge promoter, whose activities were referred to here many times, went out there and induced citizens to have a bill introduced in Congress to construct a bridge almost at the mouth of the Columbia River.

Mr. HAWLEY. No.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. How far is it from the mouth of the Columbia River?

Mr. HAWLEY. About 10 miles, as I recall.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Suppose something happened after a bridge was constructed and some one dropped a bomb on the bridge and closed up the river at that point. For instance, in the event we had a fleet that wanted to get up the river and get out of the way?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are several bridges up the river.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. They are way up the river.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is one halfway between the mouth of the river and Portland.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will amend his bill so as to provide that the city of Astoria is to construct the bridge rather than an individual, I shall not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the statement of the gentleman from Oregon, this is to be virtually a municipally constructed bridge.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is to be constructed by those representing and acting on behalf of the people and the city and out of funds that will be obtained as a self-liquidating loan.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is to be constructed, virtually, by an entity composed of the mayor and other public-spirited citizens.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Are they acting for the city?

Mr. HAWLEY. They write me they are acting in behalf of the citizens and the city.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And this is to be a self-liquidating project and they are to borrow the money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. With that assurance from the gentleman, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg., authorized to be built by J. C. Tenbrook, as mayor of Astoria, Oreg., his successors in office and assigns, by an act of Congress approved June 10, 1930 (46 Stat. 540), are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT RULO, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14126, authorizing John C. Mullen, John H. Hutchings, both of Falls City, Nebr., and William Shepherd, of Rulo, Nebr., his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Rulo, Nebr.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I withhold it.

Mr. MOREHEAD. We have had a franchise for a bridge at this place, and we have some encouragement now from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that they will aid us in its construction. It is 100 miles between the bridges on the Missouri River at this point, and we sometimes have to drive as much as 65 miles when there is ice on the river in order to get across.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Why does not the city make this application?

Mr. MOREHEAD. The county seat is about 10 miles from this place, where I make my home. This is not a promotion scheme in any way; and, as I say, we have changed the incorporators——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If it were feasible from a financial standpoint, why can you not get the money? You have had this pending for about six years.

Mr. MOREHEAD. No; only about four years. We have it arranged now so that we have a possibility of getting some help to build the bridge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Let me say to the gentleman that my city has an application with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for $2,500,000 to complete a free bridge, so you can go over it for nothing. When we go up to Nebraska, you want to have a toll bridge, so we will have to pay to go over it, and, furthermore, to pay private citizens.

Mr. MOREHEAD. It is the only opportunity we have to get a bridge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will amend his bill as I have indicated, I shall not object. If the bill is not amended to have the city build it, I object. I objected to a bridge bill in my own city because it provided for a toll bridge to be constructed by a private individual. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MICHIGAN CANAL

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14129) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across that portion of Lake Michigan lying opposite the entrance to Chicago River, Ill.; and a bridge across the Michigan Canal, otherwise known as the Ogden Slip, in the city of Chicago, Ill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of bridges authorized by act of Congress approved January 14, 1929, to be built by the South Park Commissioners and the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, separately or jointly, is hereby extended four years from January 14, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across that portion of Lake Michigan lying opposite the entrance to Chicago River, Ill.; and a bridge across the Michigan Canal, otherwise known as the Ogden Slip, in the city of Chicago, Ill."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14200) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, is it a private corporation?

Mr. CULKIN. I wish to say to the gentleman from Missouri that this is really a community bridge. The original franchise ran to the Northern New York Development Corporation, a membership corporation, which had for its purpose the development of northern New York. This outfit has become inactive since the granting of the original franchise but it still preserves its corporate identity and is prepared to assign to a group of citizens or to the locality this franchise. A representative committee of citizens has been organized who have for their purpose the construction of this bridge. They are working in common with a similar committee from the Canadian side. An application has been made to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan of $1,000,000 and that application has been held pending action by the New York State Legislature. There is no bridge between Niagara Falls and Messina, a distance of over 300 miles. This bridge will add greatly to the mutual convenience of both the people on the Canadian and on the American side. It has the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture. I wish to impress on the gentleman that this is not in any sense a profit-making venture for it will be in the hands of high-class, public-spirited citizens who are intent only on the development of the north country. I very much trust the gentleman will not object to this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In view of the fact that the Department of Agriculture has no objection to the construction of the bridge, I will not object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N. Y., authorized to be built by the New York Development Association (Inc.), a corporation organized under and by virtue of the membership corporation law of the State of New York, its successors and assigns, by an act of Congress approved March 4, 1929, and heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 13, 1931, and further heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved April 15, 1932, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from March 4, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we have come within two bills of those bills that would have been in order last Monday, if the calendar had been called. There are some Members who have not had time to examine the other bills, and I know that we are going through the balance of the calendar at the next call. Will the gentleman from Illinois move an adjournment?

Mr. RAINEY. I will as soon as I present a few matters.

REIMBURSEMENT OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE FOR LOSSES TO PERSONAL PROPERTY (H. DOC. NO. 539)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I inclose herewith a report which the Secretary of State has addressed to me in regard to claims of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States for reimbursement of losses of personal property suffered by them as a result of a cyclone at Pointe à Pitre, Guadeloupe, French West Indies, on September 12, 1928, and hurricanes at Nassua, Bahama Islands, on September 16, 1928, and on September 25–26, 1929; at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, on September 3, 1930; and at Belize, British Honduras, on September 10, 1931; at Moscow, Russia, in 1918, as a result of the seizure of government power by the present régime; at Buenaventura, Colombia, on January 26, 1931, as a result of a fire which destroyed the American consulate; and at Warsaw, Poland, in December, 1920, as a result of theft and breakage of household effects in transit at the time of the advance of the Soviet Revolutionary Army into Poland.

I recommend that an appropriation in the amount suggested by the Secretary of State be authorized in order to relieve these officers and employees of the Government of the burden these losses have occasioned.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 7, 1933.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. GAVAGAN, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one week on account of illness.

TRAINING IN VOCATIONAL AGRICULTURE

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of vocational agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I arise to defend appropriations for vocational agriculture. My story is that of a young man who arose from obscurity to national distinction by his love and devotion to farming and farm interests and by the help of vocational training.

In geologic ages the Ozark Mountains, we are told, was an island in an inland sea. Now it is a large area of hill country in southern Missouri and northern Arkansas, a fit place to be called the playground of America. The traveler going southwest from St. Louis will in time observe that the waters are clearer, the sky bluer, and the scenery more enchanting. By these tokens he may know that he has reached the Ozarks.

Here and there upon these wooded hills will be seen an humble farmhouse, with its fields and gardens occupied and worked by a family of that sturdy pioneer stock characteristic of the region. The valleys are rich as the famed Nile. The upland is less fertile but will respond liberally to the wooings of intelligent industry.

Into one of these homes on an upland farm of limited area 22 years ago Clarence Goldsberry was born. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Z. E. Goldsberry, were of that intelligent, rugged type which subdues the forests and wrings a livelihood from the soil. In the atmosphere of such a home, where industry, honesty, and thrift were taught by precept and example, young Goldsberry grew to manhood.

He finished the grades in a 1-room country school. Then he entered Houston High School, at Houston, Mo., 6 miles away, and without motor service, where, under congressional appropriations, vocational agriculture was taught by that outstanding educator, Wallace P. Gibbs. Drawing much inspiration from this ripe scholar, and under parental urge, he proceeded step by step to graduation. Not only did he study books but he communed with nature. His projects in agriculture were so important and so carefully conducted that they attracted national attention. This is shown by the fact that Hon. J. A. Linke, of Washington, D. C., Federal agent for vocational education, visited his farm to observe the work he was doing and the methods he practiced.

He joined Future Farmers of America, a national organization for farm boys who study vocational agriculture in public secondary schools under the national vocational acts. This organization, with 65,000 members in 46 States, promoted a contest among its membership. Its method was a process of elimination by locality, by States, and finally nation-wide. Step by step he scored superiority. The climax was reached November 15, 1932, at the American Royal Livestock Show in Kansas City, Mo., when he was adjudged national winner over his 65,000 competitors and designated the "star American farmer." For this distinction he was awarded and paid a cash prize of $1,000 by the Weekly Kansas City Star.

In a carefully compiled volume now on file with the Federal Board for Vocational Education in Washington recording and illustrating achievements throughout the period of his training in vocational agriculture, one may trace the steps which account for his success. During the large part of that time (1927 to 1932) this country was in the throes of a great depression. He combated this economic condition by producing a quality which commanded a premium on the markets. His livestock is registered, his poultry certified, and his crops are carefully selected and of high quality. Notwithstanding the financial distress which prevailed throughout the period of his vocational training the labor income from his various operations was more than $3,300.

He is a member of many farm organizations and a leader in most of them. Some of these have for their objective the improvement of the quality of crops, livestock, and poultry, as well as methods of production, while others boldly attack the intricate problem of marketing. He believes farming is a business as well as an occupation, and that it should be conducted along business lines. This is shown in the record he has kept by which the financial feature of his various farm operations can be determined to a cent.

This to date is the story of the 1932 "Star American Farmer" of the Future Farmers of America, winner over 65,000 bright boys working along similar lines. His ambition is linked to the farm. With industry practiced from childhood, with the indomitable determination already shown, and with the adequate training in his special line which he has received, it is confidently believed that he is facing a future full of achievements. His record thus far is a tribute to his character, to the organizations of which he is a member, and to vocational training by which he has been so much benefited, and is a challenge to other young farmers with like ambition and courage.

CONSENT CALENDAR BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the Consent Calendar on the next calendar day begin where we left off to-day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I present Mr. JOSEPH H. EAGLE, Member elect from the State of Texas in place of the late Daniel Garrett. I ask unanimous consent that the oath be administered notwithstanding the absence of the certificate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. EAGLE appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order to-morrow on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 371

Resolved, That on Wednesday, February 8, 1933, at the conclusion of the counting of the electoral votes, it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the call of bills on said calendar to begin at No. 608.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify the resolution providing for a call of the Private Calendar on Thursday night, so that the call shall commence where the call leaves off to-morrow afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE BUSHKILL BRIDGE BILL

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in connection with H. R. 14030, objected to to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 14030, which was to-day objected to, as were most of the bills calling for bridges to be constructed by private corporations, has within it some merit which it is my aim to call to the attention of the House. It is the aim of the corporation, in the event that it gets authority from the Congress and from the Legislatures of both New Jersey and Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the Delaware River at or near Bushkill, Pa. Under the bill, as reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the rights of the public, as required by that committee and by the Congress itself, have been taken care of in the normal manner; that is to say, the manner which has become the practice of the Congress of recent years.

The proposed location is at a point in northeastern Pennsylvania which is 22 miles north of and 15 miles south of the nearest bridge. It will serve to connect popular and growing resort areas in New Jersey and in Pennsylvania. In addition, it affords another and direct gateway from the new Hudson River crossings at Poughkeepsie and at New York, giving access to a great recreation area in Monroe, Pike, and Wayne Counties, Pa.

The Monroe County citizens who are most vitally interested in this project have given evidence in the past of their public spirit and have stated to me that their purpose in asking for a charter for this bridge is to serve this area. They are public-spirited citizens; they have in the last two winters provided work for their unemployed in improving mountain trails and roads in this Pocono area. The money for this has in almost every case been provided by public subscription, and apparently not until the latter part of this winter has the State been called upon to help northern Monroe County in caring for its unemployed. It is their purpose to build at Bushkill one of those self-liquidating projects which it is hoped would meet the requirements of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

It is true that Pennsylvania and New Jersey have taken very progressive steps in recent years in abolishing all toll bridges over the Delaware River north of the Tacony Bridge, and without a doubt the proposed bridge at Bushkill would itself be freed by the two States as soon as, if not before, the time when its tolls would have paid its original cost.

There is very considerable merit in this bill under the proper protective clauses thrown around it by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which reported the bill favorably. It does not interfere with any present local service, as there is comparatively little commercial intercourse between the two banks of the river in this area, but it would provide a useful short cut in long-distance travel between northeastern Pennsylvania and New York and New England. The War Department has approved the project; the rights of the States of Pennsylvania and of New Jersey will be taken care of by the two legislatures; but a start must be made at some point if the project is to provide work in these times of unemployment, and I trust that when this bill is again called on the calendar it may be approved by the House.

RECOGNITION OF MEMBERS FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO PASS CERTAIN BILLS

The SPEAKER. About this time in the short session of Congress it has been the custom of the Speaker to recognize gentlemen to ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration certain local bills or bills that have for their purpose no general application to the entire country. It is the purpose of the Chair to follow that procedure, but in doing so he hopes to confer with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. The Chair thinks this is a notice that should go into the RECORD, so that gentlemen who are on guard to object to the consideration of legislation may take notice that from now on the Chair will exercise the right to recognize various Members of the House to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of bills of the kind referred to.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2200. An act to authorize presentation of a medal of honor posthumously to the late Henry Clay Drexler and the late George Robert Cholister.

LEASE OF THE BOSTON POST-OFFICE GARAGE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 88) to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the word "directed" and insert "authorized"; on the same page, line 11, to strike out "and purchase" and insert a comma and "and the purchase"; on the same page, line 12, to strike out "from the date of the lease" and insert "under the lease from the date of the enactment of this act, but not in excess of"; and on the same page, line 13, after the word "options," to insert "not in excess of."

Mr. MOSES. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ODDIE, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. MCKELLAR conferees on the part of the Senate.

REMOVAL OF LAND-GRANT DISCRIMINATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4165) to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and to subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class, which was, on page 1, line 9, to strike out "between the stations of Humboldt and" and insert "from a point about 4 miles south of Humboldt and through the station thereof to."

Mr. NYE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

House Joint Memorial 4 to Congress of the United States of America to enact into a law an act to authorize the Federal Farm Board to dispose of the surplus cotton and wheat by the said board; if possible, converting the cotton into clothing and wheat into food for the needy and unemployed of our Nation

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your members of the Forty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, the senate and house concurring, respectfully request that—

Whereas the unemployment situation of our Nation is very serious, causing an unusual amount of suffering and distress; and

Whereas the cotton and wheat held by the Federal Farm Board could be utilized toward mitigating the suffering of the destitute and unemployed of our Nation; and

Whereas the cotton and wheat held by the Federal Farm Board is a great hindrance in the stabilization of the prices of these commodities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by this legislative assembly, That it urges the enactment by Congress some act by which the Federal Farm Board may dispose of this cotton and wheat held by them to some good purpose; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives from Arkansas in Congress.

Approved February 6, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, favoring the prompt passage of legislation known as the Glenn-Smith bill providing for the refunding by the National Treasury of all levee and drainage district bonds, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas on February 7, p. 3489, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. ASHURST presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was ordered to lie on the table:

House Joint Memorial 2

To the honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Your memorialist, the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents:

The State of Arizona, in common with every State in the Union, is confronted with the important task of providing employment for its citizens.

Funds are appropriated from time to time by the Congress of the United States for the construction of Federal public buildings and the construction of national-forest, national-park, and national-monument highways within the State of Arizona, upon which considerable numbers of men are employed.

Many of the contracts for such work are let to contractors located outside of Arizona, who usually, if not invariably, import into the State the labor required for their completion.

The employment of needy citizens of this State on such work would in some measure alleviate the serious unemployment situation in Arizona; would be a just policy, in that it would avoid adding to Arizona's burdens and duties in the matter of police protection and the protection of the legal rights of persons permanently or temporarily residing within its borders; would be a justifiable policy from an economic standpoint, since it would obviate the expense of transporting employees from other parts of the United States; and, finally, would work no injustice to any community.

Wherefore your memorialist prays that departments of the United States Government having under their charge and control the awarding of contracts for the construction of public works within the State, or the supervision of such works, if any, by force account, pursue the policy of establishing a reasonable and equitable preferential basis in connection with such contracts and works in favor of Arizona contractors, Arizona material, and particularly of Arizona labor, and that the good offices of the President of the United States be exerted to this end.

Wherefore your memorialist will ever pray.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

A concurrent resolution urging the United States Senate to expedite a vote upon ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway treaty.

Whereas the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway treaty is now in the hands of the Foreign Relations Committee, having passed through the hands of a subcommittee where full and comprehensive hearings were granted to all interested parties; and

Whereas sufficient publicity has been given to this project so as to enlighten the whole of our people; and

Whereas it now appears that there exists a real and imperative need for a waterway outlet for the products of the great Middle West; and

Whereas it appears that the immediate effect of ratification would result in the expenditure of large sums of money for labor and materials; and

Whereas such outlay by the Government would permit of great increase in employment, thereby lessening the burden of the present depression for which there seems to be no immediate remedy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the fifty-seventh Legislature of the State of Michigan requests the Senate of the United States to delay no longer in bringing the matter of ratification before that body for final consideration.

January 18, adopted by the senate.

February 2, adopted by the house of representatives.

DON W. CANFIELD,
Secretary of the Senate.
MYLES F. GRAY,
Clerk of House of Representatives.

Mr. KING presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of Salt Lake City, Utah, favoring the passage of legislation to exempt from taxation States, State agencies, and publicly owned utilities, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KING also presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of Salt Lake City, Utah, favoring the passage of legislation to establish a standard of integrity and sound economy of municipal bond issues and giving to municipalities which meet such standard the same rights enjoyed by national banks to receive currency on the pledge of their bonds, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of the city of Kansas City, Kans., favoring the passage of legislation authorizing the issuance of a special series of postage stamps in honor of an anniversary of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Christian Church of Tyro, the University Meeting of Friends of Wichita, and local chapters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Arnold, Concordia, and Downs, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the passage of legislation to regulate and supervise the motion-picture industry, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REDUCTION IN FREIGHT RATES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, transportation costs continue to be one of the heavy fixed charges which the American farmer must meet. No group in the Nation more directly feels the burden of these charges than does agriculture, because it must pay freight to market on its products and also on necessary supplies shipped to the farms from far-distant factories.

The three national farm organizations, the Farm Bureau, the Farmers Union, and the National Grange, together with the National Coal Association and the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, have recently filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a memorial petition for a general reduction of freight rates on basic commodities.

As is stated in this petition, the Interstate Commerce Commission is asked by the petitioners—

To order the carriers by railroad engaged in interstate and foreign commerce to appear and show cause why an order should not issue requiring them to cease and desist from charging the present high level of freight rates upon all basic commodities, and that an order issue requiring them to readjust their freight-rate levels (save and except in those cases where the rates have been reduced to meet competitive agencies of transportation) to meet the emergency which continues to confront the basic commercial industries of the country.

There are those who might think that such a petition would strike at the welfare of the railroads, but there are many who believe that such action on the part of the railroads would so increase their tonnages that the net revenue at the end of each fiscal year would be greater for the railroads than is now the case, to say nothing about the increased ability of the railroads on account of such reduction in freight rates more adequately to meet competitive transportation agencies.

I offer this memorial petition to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and for appropriate reference.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Honorable Interstate Commerce Commission:

A serious public emergency exists with respect to the production and distribution of the products of the basic industries of the United States. The present unreasonably high level of freight rates contributes materially to the deplorable conditions now existing and constitutes an effective barrier to revival of trade in these basic commodities.

Your petitioners respectfully request your honorable body to recognize the existence of this emergency and the importance of the freight-rate level in connection therewith, and to order rail carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce to appear forthwith in an ex parte proceeding and show cause why they should not be required immediately to cease and desist from charging the present unreasonable and inordinately high freight rates upon basic commodities.

Your petitioners further respectfully request that subsequent proceedings be conducted without burdening the public with the cost and expense of any further public hearings than may be absolutely necessary to consider the charges made herein.

In support of this petition the undersigned respectfully represent:

I

The severe decline in the price level of basic commodities with substantially no decline in the freight-rate level has thrown the economic structure so seriously out of balance as to imperil the ability of the industries represented by your petitioners to supply traffic for the railroads

Since the beginning of the depression and despite all corrective efforts prices on nearly all commodities have continuously and materially declined. There has not been a corresponding decline in the cost of transportation by rail. The situation with respect to commodity prices and freight costs is graphically portrayed in Exhibit 1 appended hereto. In each of the basic industries represented herein the situation is not materially different from that portrayed by the graph.

Both transportation and production are major factors in the machinery of supplying the public with its commodity requirements. When adequate transportation is not available at reasonable cost, the products of industry and agriculture are denied access to markets, and as a result production declines. This is particularly true in the case of those commodities on which the transportation costs constitute a substantial proportion of the sales prices.

It may be conceded that freight rates should be more stable and fixed than commodity prices which fluctuate constantly and violently. But when commodity prices continue to fall for a substantial period of time, the maintenance of high freight rates imposes an undue and ever-increasing burden on the shoulders of producers and distributors of commodities subject to heavy transportation charges. In fact, such producers and distributors are in effect called upon to bear, in addition to their own burden of declining prices, the burden of the failure of transportation costs to decline. Practically speaking, the additional costs which are in fact thereby imposed are in the nature of a bounty paid for transportation services. When commodity prices decline to the point at which there is no longer any profit this bounty must be paid out of the capital assets of industry, and its continued payment means the destruction of such capital assets. This destructive process is already under way, and it is not without importance that the industries suffering most are those upon which the railroads depend for the maintenance of traffic. It will continue as long as rail transportation costs fail to conform to the prevailing economic trend of lower prices.

This process of destruction must be arrested before the industries called upon to pay excessive transportation charges are completely destroyed. The level of freight rates must be adjusted so as to put it in accord with prevailing economic conditions. The price of railroad transportation is one of the most vital major factors in the process of production and distribution which is not conforming to the prevailing economic trends of lower prices.

II

The situation to-day is similar to that which induced the commission to take action in the proceeding known as Reduced Rates, 1922, except that the disparity between the level of commodity prices and freight rates is now much greater

In recognition of the increase in commodity prices, and operating costs of the carriers during the period of the World War, a general increase of 25 per cent in freight rates was ordered by the Director General of Railroads through General Order No. 28, effective June 25, 1918. Prices and costs continued to increase throughout the war and postwar periods, and after the relinquishment of Federal control of the railroads on March 1, 1920, this commission immediately instituted an investigation to determine whether further increases should be made in the freight rate level. This investigation was conducted with great expedition, and the decision was announced July 29, 1930, in Increased Rates, 1920 (58 I. C. C. 220). At that time some of your petitioners, together with numerous other industries, came before the commission and advocated substantial increases in freight rates for the reason, among others, that the increase in basic commodities prices was relatively greater than the increase in freight rates. In recognition of this fact the commission permitted general increases in freight rates ranging from 25 per cent to 40 per cent in different sections of the country.

Beginning with 1921 prices of practically all basic commodities declined substantially, and before the close of the year the freight-rate situation was precisely the opposite of that which was considered by the commission in 1920. The increases in transportation costs approved in 1920 had become a serious burden on the production and distribution of commodities which had suffered serious declines in price. Agricultural food products rotted in the fields, mines were shut down, mills ceased operations, and the continuance of the high freight rates threatened further damage.

Appeals were then made to your honorable body by various interests, as a result of which the commission instituted, on its own initiative, the proceeding known as Reduced Rates, 1922, being I. C. C. Docket 13293. Hearings were held in December, 1921, and January, 1922. The situation which brought about this investigation is briefly described in the following paragraph taken from page 679 of the reported decision:

"In Increased Rates, 1920, supra, decided July 29, 1920, we designated rate groups as provided in section 15a and authorized substantial increases in freight rates, passenger fares, and certain charges. Late in that year there developed in this country a pronounced and long-continued business depression, nation-wide, a phase of the general post bellum adjustment throughout the world. Practically all traffic and all industry have been affected. There has been substantial reduction in the price of most commodities without a corresponding reduction in rates. There is a definite conviction in the minds of the shipping public that the present rate level is unreasonably high, is an effective barrier to the return of business activity, prosperity, and the usual volume of traffic, and that it should be substantially reduced."

Thus the study made by the commission at that time recognized as the underlying problem the proposition set forth herein. As a result of its findings the commission concluded that there should be a general horizontal reduction in freight-rate levels to bring them more nearly in conformity with the downward trend of commodity prices. No order was issued compelling the carriers to comply with the commission's decision because the carriers, recognizing the facts, proceeded promptly on their own motion to make the necessary rate reductions.

Immediately following the decision there was a substantial revival in business and a corresponding increase in rail tonnage. In fact, the additional revenues provided by the lower rates enabled the carriers to invest several billion dollars additional in improvement of property and facilities, and to pay substantial dividends to their stockholders during the years 1923 and 1929.

At page 708 of its decision in Reduced Rates, 1922 (cited supra), the commission pointed out that in December, 1921, the average prices of farm products were only 113 per cent of the average prices prevailing in 1913. Using the same base the average prices of farm products in December, 1932, were 62 per cent of the 1913 prices. The all commodities index price as reported by the commission for December, 1921, was 149 per cent of the 1913 prices, whereas for December, 1932, the average of all commodities was 90 per cent of the 1913 base. The commission also pointed out that the average freight revenue per ton-mile for December, 1921, was 172 per cent of the average freight revenue for the year ended June 30, 1913. The relative index price of freight transportation for 1932 is 10 per cent under that of December, 1921, or approximately an index figure of 155. From this it is evident that the disparity between freight-rate levels and commodity-price levels is much greater at the present time than it was in 1921. The foregoing comparisons are based upon statistics of the United States Bureau of Labor. If the comparison be confined to raw agricultural products, as shown by the United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics, the 1932 prices will be found to be approximately 52 per cent of the pre-war level.

There is appended hereto and marked "Exhibit 2" a statement showing the relative wholesale commodity prices of various basic commodities and of all commodities based upon the year 1926 as representing 100 per cent, from which it will be seen that in the case of all commodities shown, with the exception of bituminous coal, the index prices for December, 1932, are lower than those for the year 1921. The average price per statistics of the National Coal Association on file with the I. C. C. in Ex parte 103 for bituminous coal realized at the mines for the first six months of the coal year 1932 was $1.22 per net ton, while the average freight charge for that period was $2.27 per net ton, or 186 per cent of the price realization. The average mine realization per ton in 1932 was only about 3 per cent higher than in 1913, while the freight-rate level on coal has increased appproximately 82 per cent.

Farm products are worth less than one-half of what they were in 1926, but there has been practically no decrease in the freight-rate level in the meantime. From Exhibit 2 it will be noted that it will require 3 bushels of grain to pay the transportation charge which would have been paid for by 1 bushel of grain in 1926.

The condition of the basic industries of the country at the present time is far more serious than it was when the commission initiated the proceedings in Reduced Rates, 1922. Unemployment, wages, and rapidly declining demand combine to produce a much greater disparity between basic commodity price and transportation costs at the present time than in 1922. The situation has progressively grown worse since January 1, 1930, and has reached a stage where it is essential that rail transportation agencies assume their share of the burden of lower prices from which the industry is now suffering.

It is not contended that the present freight-rate level has been the cause of the present depression nor even that existing conditions are in all respects analogous to those which prevailed in 1921. Neither do your petitioners assert that correction of the freight-rate level will of itself alone relieve the existing commercial distress. However, its importance as a factor which not only retards recovery but tends to worsen the condition of basic industries is indeed greater to-day than was found by the commission to be the case in the consideration of the economic situation in 1922. In this respect there is a present analogy with the conditions existing in the former period and we respectfully direct the attention of the commission to the following excerpts from its conclusions at that time:

"It is our duty to initiate such rates as will enable the carriers to earn as nearly as may be a fair return, qualified as provided in the act. In 1920 we authorized large increases in freight rates and passenger fares designed to produce the necessary revenues under the conditions then prevailing. There was then little doubt of the ability of industry to bear the increased charges. The situation has since changed. The country has been passing through a period of abundant supply and slack demand, in which prices at the source have fallen off sharply. High rates do not necessarily mean high revenues, for, if the public can not or will not ship in normal volume, less revenue may result than from lower rates.

"Shippers almost unanimously contend, and many representatives of the carriers agree, that 'freight rates are too high and must come down.' This indicates that transportation charges have mounted to a point where they are impeding the free flow of commerce and thus tending to defeat the purpose for which they were established, that of producing revenues which would enable the carriers 'to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation.' * * *

"Manifestly the depression of 1921 resulted primarily from causes other than transportation charges. But it does not follow that under present conditions existing high rates do not tend to retard the return to a more normal flow of commerce. Deflation has taken place to a greater or less extent in wages and origin prices of commodities in nearly all branches of industry, but most transportation charges are still near the peak.

"In Rates on Grain, Grain Products, and Hay, supra, we said at page 100:

"'The really vital concern of the carriers, in this situation, is to promote the return of what may be deemed normal traffic, and anything which will help toward this end is greatly to their benefit. So far as a tendency downward in their rates can be induced, and so far as the reductions in wages and prices which have already been made effective can be converted into rate reductions, we are assured that the full return of prosperity will be hastened for both industry and labor.' * * *

"We are of opinion that general reduction in the rate level, as substantial as the condition of the carriers will permit, will tend not only to lessen the transportation burden but also to equalize and stabilize the conditions under which commerce and industry are carried on, with consequently fuller assurance to the carriers of realizing the fair return contemplated by the law." (66 I. C. C. 732, 733, 734.)

III

Experience has demonstrated that the action of the commission in decreeing an increase in the freight-rate level in 1931 did not produce the results sought

In the summer of 1931 the owners of railroad securities, and the railroads themselves, claiming an emergency confronted them, jointly presented to the commission an application for a substantial increase in freight rates. They then recognized that there was in process a downward trend in commodity prices and a substantial decline in trade. But they argued that by increasing rail transportation costs the buying power of the railroads would be increased, the owners of railroad securities would have greater confidence, business would improve generally, the downward trend of commodity prices would be reversed, and trade would be restored to normal. In response to this plea the commission, contrary to the precedent set in Reduced Rates, 1922, authorized the so-called freight-rate surcharges, resulting in increased costs of transportation on numerous basic commodities at a time when commodity prices were steadily declining. Although the rail carriers are a major factor in our national economic structure, these increases in the prices charged for their services neither reversed nor checked the downward trend of commodity prices. Nor did such increased charges yield the rail carriers the expected revenues. On the contrary, they have only helped to make bad matters worse.

It is obvious that a decline in commodity prices without a similar decline in the cost of rail transportation produces in effect an actual increase in the relative cost of transportation, although tariff schedules published in terms of cents per hundred pounds remained unchanged. The producer can not continue indefinitely to buy at predepression prices, even such necessities as transportation, in exchange for his products which are being sold at constantly declining prices. Such a policy of rate maintenance must operate to reduce the volume of rail tonnage and the total of rail revenue. This situation has in part accounted for the steady increase in tonnage hauled by other transportation agencies. The decreased rail traffic and revenues have resulted not only from the general business depression, but also from unreasonably high rates which force shippers out of markets entirely, or to utilize other and cheaper forms of transportation.

The rail carriers possess a tremendous transportation machine of which only about 50 per cent is now being utilized. Granaries are full and people are in want, yet the farmer of Iowa burns corn for fuel which the miner in Illinois needs for food. It is in the public interest that a greater proportion of this transportation machine be usefully employed. Lower rail-transportation costs, which would bring freight rates more into line with the prevailing commodity prices, coupled with further operating economies, would tend to accomplish this purpose and also favorably affect gross and net earnings, all of which is in the public interest.

IV

A reduction in the freight-rate level on basic commodities will tend to discourage undue development of competitive transportation agencies and thereby preserve railroad transportation as the dominating factor in our national commerce

The railroads are practically the only agencies of transportation which have not reduced the prices for their service during the present era of depressed prices. Highway and water transport facilities have responded to the lower commodity price levels and have made substantial rate reductions. In specific instances the railroads have made reductions to meet such competition to the extent found actually necessary in each particular case. Such reductions are no part of any policy to reduce freight rate levels so that they will more nearly correspond to the reduced commodity price levels. They are merely sporadic instances where actual diversion of moving traffic has compelled the rail carrier to take action or see the competitor enjoy the traffic upon the lower rates. In an investigation of this character the commission should not be concerned with these sporadic and specific instances other than to glean the lesson that they demonstrate. Not only do such reductions reflect the demand of industry for reduced transportation costs, but because of their local character they operate to break down uniformity of treatment, and create new discriminations in rates between the favored commodities and/or localities and those not so favored, thus reverting to the chaotic rate conditions which brought about the original enactment of the interstate commerce act.

Your petitioners represent industries producing basic commodities moving in large quantities and for which the railroads are a necessary agency in distribution. These industries furnish over 50 per cent of the total volume of rail tonnage upon which the railroads are maintaining freight rates at their peak levels (except for the year 1921) without considering the effect upon the future development of such commerce.

If this condition were but temporary, it might properly be argued that the carriers could not be expected to adjust their rate structure in response to every change in commodity prices. But the price decline has continued for three years and has grown progressively worse each year. Prices may continue at present or lower levels for a substantial period of time unless an economic balance is restored. Increases in the price level and increased activity in business will depend upon many factors, but improvement will require the cooperation of rail carriers to the extent of sharing the burdens of industry so as to stimulate the movement of commodities which to-day rot in the fields, rest in the forests, and lie untouched in the mines. It is in the interest of the carriers themselves to maintain an equitable relationship between commodity prices and rail transportation charges, and as commodity prices improve, rail carriers should be permitted to share in the improvement through a readjustment of freight rates.

It is not without significance that the adjustment of freight rates to correspond to commodity price levels has been proceeding for some time in foreign countries. A recent bulletin of the Department of Commerce lists decreases in Argentina, Brazil, France, Mexico, Netherlands, Trinidad, and British Guiana.

V

Under conditions which prevail to-day the value of railroad property and the rate of return on railroad investment must reconcile themselves to the ultimate effect of freight rates on traffic and revenues

Rail transportation is of basic and fundamental importance to our national prosperity. The railroad transportation machine is a necessary part of our economic structure, and it can not be severed and considered alone. It is entitled to be recognized as essential to distribution, but it is not entitled to preferential consideration, particularly if such consideration operates to cripple and hamper the industries which produce the traffic upon which the railroads live.

The dollars which your petitioner pay to the railroads for transportation services are secured from the sale of commodities which move by rail. It requires approximately twice as much, in terms of commodities, to pay the rail freight charges to-day as it required during the period from 1923 to 1930, when the freight rate charges were substantially what they are to-day (except for the surcharges which have been added). Correspondingly the capital assets of your petitioners have depreciated in value and in the case of many basic industries are worth not more than one-third of what they were in the prior period. The decline in business has reduced the earning power of your petitioners and in turn depreciated the present value of their facilities and property. In like manner it must be evident that the property of the railroads used in the service of transportation has depreciated in value to the extent of the decline in the volume of tonnage transported. This destruction of values will continue as long as the policy of the railroads continues to be to maintain freight rates at a level which discourages the movement of traffic. For the railroads to assert, under prevailing economic conditions, that their properties are to-day worth more than $25,000,000,000, and for them to contend that present freight rates should be maintained in order to give them a return upon such valuation is to disregard fundamental changes which have taken place. To the extent that the freight-rate structure is adjusted in keeping with the adjustment of commodity price levels it will encourage a greater movement of commodities and should be a basic factor in economic recovery.

The failure to reduce the costs of rail transportation will result in the further disuse of the present rail facilities and further unemployment of railroad employees. Under present conditions the freight-rate level is unreasonable, and in many cases imposes an impossible burden upon the movement of the basic products of the farms, forests, and mines of the country, thereby resulting in diversion and diminution in the volume of traffic and consequent loss to the railroads. An adjustment of the freight rates to a reasonable level will hasten the return of normal traffic movement and will immediately stimulate the movement of those commodities on which the railroad freight charges are a major part of the price realized.

Wherefore, the undersigned petitioners do hereby memorialize and petition your honorable body to order the carriers by railroad engaged in interstate and foreign commerce to appear and show cause why an order should not issue requiring them to cease and desist from charging the present unreasonable and inordinately high level of freight rates upon all basic commodities and that an order issue requiring them to readjust their freight-rate levels (save and except in those cases where the rates have been reduced to meet competitive agencies of transportation) to meet the emergency which continues to confront the basic commercial industries of the country. It is respectfully requested that your honorable body investigate these charges and handle the same with the greatest possible expedition because of the destitute and almost bankrupt condition of the principal industries of the country.

Respectfully submitted.

PROHIBITION AND LAW ENFORCEMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present a number of memorials and communications in the nature of memorials in opposition to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, to modification of the Volstead Act, and to legalization of beer, and so forth, from citizens of Texas, and summary of such memorials and communications. I ask that these documents may lie on the table and that the summary be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorials and communications in the nature of memorials were ordered to lie on the table, and the summary thereof was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. Memorial from Mrs. Nora P. Gray and six other citizens of Harlingen, Tex.
2. Resolution in the nature of memorial by Workers' Conference Collins County Baptist Association, in session at Foot Baptist Church, December 5, 1932, representing 55 Baptist churches and 10,000 Baptist people.
3. Resolution adopted at mass meetings in 20 churches of Austin, Tex., on December 4, 1932, with total attendance of 4,770 citizens.
4. Telegram conveying sentiment of 65 citizens of Magnolia, Tex.
5. Telegram conveying sentiment of 46 citizens of Chester, Tex.
6. Appeal from 515 members East Dallas Baptist Church, Dallas, Tex., Rev. Edgar Parker, pastor.
7. Appeal from 200 members Women's Missionary Society, Oak Cliff Methodist Church, Dallas, Tex., transmitted by Mrs. A. C. Lemburg and Mrs. John F. Turner.
8. Appeal from 200 women, Federated Missionary Society, Robstown, Tex.
9. Resolution of Men's Bible Class of Methodist Church, Beaumont, Tex., with 60 members.
10. Letter in nature of memorial from 15 members of First Methodist Church, Orange, Tex.
11. Letter in nature of memorial representing 400 women, Highland Park Missionary Society, Methodist Church, Dallas, Tex.
12. Memorial from 50 citizens of Port Arthur, Tex.
13. Letter in nature of memorial from Womans' Christian Temperance Union of Beeville, Tex., with 60 members.
14. Memorials against legalization of beer from 40 citizens of Cleburne; 2 citizens of Commerce; 163 citizens of Lexington, Beeville, West, Hillsboro, Dime Box, and McCamey; 96 citizens of Georgetown and other Texas cities and towns; 188 citizens of Caldwell; 675 citizens of Fort Worth; 34 citizens of San Antonio; 100 citizens of McAllen; 215 citizens of Mexia; 82 citizens of Beaumont; 119 citizens of Edinburg; 32 citizens of Bovina; 142 citizens of La Feria; 296 citizens of Robstown, with signers from Houston, Sinton, Taft, and Corpus Christi; 50 members First Methodist Church, of Brownsville; 355 citizens of Houston, including members of Second Presbyterian Church; 75 citizens of Garwood; 150 citizens of Galveston; 18 citizens of Bangs; 38 citizens of Hollister, Chester, Woodville, Warren, Jasper, Pedigo, and Spurger; 400 citizens of Dallas; 41 citizens of Ballinger; 57 citizens of Austin; and 6,518 citizens of Amarillo, all in the State of Texas, and 628 citizens of other places in Texas.

WAGE CUTS IN THE STEEL INDUSTRY

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for printing in the RECORD and appropriate reference a news statement from the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press of February 5, 1933, by Mr. Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the board of directors of the National Steel Corporation, denouncing wage cuts. I agree with Mr. Weir when he says that we must stop this pressure on wages—that labor has done its part, and that a further reduction of wages would only produce decrease in the buying of steel.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press of February 5, 1933]

STEEL WAGE CUTS DENOUNCED BY E. T. WEIR

Further wage cuts in the steel industry were strenuously opposed by Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the board of National Steel Corporation, in an interview to-day.

Referring to rumors that another wage cut is contemplated, Mr. Weir was outspoken in condemning the idea, declaring that labor had done its part and that a further reduction would only produce decreased buying of steel.

"Steel manufacturers are not justified in even considering any further liquidation of labor. It would be unfair," Mr. Weir declared.

"We have gone, if anything, too far along those lines. It is true that the capital invested in the industry has suffered a very heavy reduction of its earnings, but labor has certainly borne its part of the burden," he added.

CHARGES FOR SHIPMENT OF CATTLE AND HOGS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I just received a very interesting letter in reference to the charges made to shippers of cattle and hogs, which it seems to me ought to be of interest to others for the purpose of disseminating existing conditions. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Appleton, Minn., February 6, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL,

DEAR MR. SCHALL: The Tri County Livestock Shipping Association, of Appleton, Minn., a cooperative concern, at their annual meeting held on January 28, 1933, passed a resolution urging that the Senators and Representatives of the State of Minnesota investigate the charges made to shippers of cattle and hogs to the Union Stockyards of South St. Paul.

I give herewith a statement of June 22, 1932, when they shipped a car of stock, containing 57 hogs and 6 head of cattle, weighing 19,755 pounds, and on this car they charged them $8.11 for yardage, 6 bushels of corn at 75 cents per bushel, 1 bale of hay at 94 cents, and 200 pounds of ground barley costing them $3.94, making a total cost of yardage and feed of $17.51. It is the understanding of this association that the profits of the stockyards company increased from $1,500,000 to $6,000,000 in the last few years.

They therefore urge that their affairs be investigated and have their charges reduced to the farmers more in line with the times. The farmer gets 10 cents per bushel for corn and 15 cents per bushel for barley, and about $4 per ton for hay, and it seems as though their charges are way too high; and an investigation is urged by this association.

I am writing now to you and Mr. SHIPSTEAD and wish that you would hand this letter to the Representatives of this State or have copy made and give to them.

Yours truly,

A. O. KREBS, Secretary.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 5469) to provide for the creation of the Morristown National Historical Park in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1162) thereon.

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 237) authorizing the erection in the Department of State Building of a memorial to the American diplomatic and consular officers who while on active duty lost their lives under heroic or tragic circumstances, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1163) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas:

A bill (S. 5600) granting an increase of pension to Laura I. Robinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 5601) granting a pension to Elmira F. Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5602) for the relief of James L. Barnett; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 5603) granting an increase of pension to Amanda Fess (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

(Mr. DILL introduced Senate bill 5604, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 5605) for the relief of Capt. L. P. Worrall, Finance Department, United States Army (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HULL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 251) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain incomes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 252) directing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1933, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 5329. An act to amend section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve," as amended by the act of March 2, 1929; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 10749. An act to authorize acceptance of proposed donation of property in Maxwell, Nebr., for Federal building purposes; and

H. R. 13521. An act to transfer control of building No. 2 on the customhouse reservation at Nome, Alaska, to the Secretary of the Interior; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 11735. An act to permanently set aside certain lands in Utah as an addition to the Navajo Indian Reservation, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12651. An act for the relief of the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians of Utah, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13770. An act to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 11816. An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 13655. An act to amend the act of May 10, 1928, entitled "An act to provide for the times and places for holding court for the eastern district of North Carolina" (45 Stat. 495); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 13817. An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931; to the Committee on the Library.

H. R. 13974. An act granting the consent of Congress to Bonner County, State of Idaho, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pend Oreille Lake at the city of Sandpoint in the State of Idaho;

H. R. 14129. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across that portion of Lake Michigan lying opposite the entrance to Chicago River, Ill.; and a bridge across the Michigan Canal, otherwise known as the Ogden Slip, in the city of Chicago, Ill.; and

H. R. 14200. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N. Y.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 14060. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg.; and

H. R. 14228. An act to change the name of "Roosevelt Island" to "Theodore Roosevelt Island"; to the calendar.

H. J. Res. 434. Joint resolution to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to provide additional facilities for the classification of cotton under the United States cotton standards act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT ISLAND

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask leave to call up for passage the bill (H. R. 14228) to change the name of "Roosevelt Island" to "Theodore Roosevelt Island." There is a similar Senate joint resolution on the calendar which has been favorably reported.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt, approved May 21, 1932 (Public No. 146, 72d Cong.), be amended as follows:

That wherever the name "Roosevelt Island" appears in sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act it shall be stricken out and the name "Theodore Roosevelt Island" shall be inserted in lieu thereof.

SEC. 2. In all public documents, records, and maps of the United States in which such island is designated or referred to it shall be designated as "Theodore Roosevelt Island."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate Joint Resolution 231, of similar title and text, will be indefinitely postponed.

PRINTING OF MANUSCRIPT ENTITLED "THE AMERICAN-MEXICAN FRONTIER: NEUCES COUNTY, TEX."

Mr. HATFIELD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 353), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted to the Senate Committee on Immigration on December 19, 1932, entitled "The American-Mexican Frontier: Neuces County, Tex.," by Paul S. Taylor, associate professor of economics at the University of California, be printed, with illustrations, as a Senate document.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 221. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Wilmot Castle Co.; and

S. 968. An act for the relief of certain employees of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 5357) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg., and it was signed by the Vice President.

PROHIBITION OF EXPORTATION OF ARMS OR MUNITIONS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will give his attention.

Mr. BORAH. The Committee on Foreign Relations reported out unanimously the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 229) to prohibit the exportation of arms or munitions of war from the United States under certain conditions. The joint resolution authorized the President of the United States under certain circumstances to lay an embargo upon the shipment of arms from the United States. The resolution afterwards passed the Senate. The Senator from Connecticut, who was interested in it, although I did not know he was interested in it, was absent. Later he entered notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed.

The situation with reference to this matter is very urgent. I want to appeal to the Senator from Connecticut, if he can within his discretion and judgment, to withdraw his notice of the motion and let the matter go to the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, when the resolution came from the Committee on Foreign Relations to the calendar I supposed that it would be brought up in the usual way. However, as I have the very strongest objections to it, and it would take me a considerable length of time to express them all, I asked the assistant floor leader on this side, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], if he would object to its consideration whenever it came up if I were not present. Unfortunately, he was ill at the time the Senator from Idaho brought up the resolution. The Senator from Idaho brought up the matter during the midst of a prolonged filibuster here, when very few Senators were on the floor. I myself was not present, and there were not more than five or six Senators, so I have been informed, who were present, and none who was particularly interested in the resolution or interested in passing it.

The Senator from Oregon was ill; otherwise it would have been objected to at once. It had not occurred to me that it was necessary to take my objection to anyone else.

The next morning, as soon as the Senate convened, I asked, in accordance with the usual practice when resolutions are passed by unanimous consent in the absence of one seriously objecting to their passage, that the resolution be returned to the calendar. During my eight years' service here that procedure has been followed over and over and over again, and I never knew any objection to be offered to it except on one occasion. When a resolution is adopted by unanimous consent, without notice being given of it, with very few Senators present, and with one in opposition to it absent, it has been the almost universal custom of the Senator securing its passage to permit it, on request, to go back to the calendar. That was all that I asked be done, but the Senator from Idaho objected to that procedure and suggested that my only recourse was to enter a motion for reconsideration, which I had realized was a recourse, and I did so.

Mr. President, when the time comes that we have not more important business to transact, I shall be glad to debate the resolution. It will take me some time to express my views concerning it, because I realize that there is a very large interest back of this measure. I have received letters from very distinguished people, presidents of universities, ministers of prominent churches, and heads of church organizations, protesting against my attitude on the subject. They seem to think that my only concern might be in the possible interest of some ammunition concerns in Connecticut.

Mr. President, my opposition to this measure is very deep-seated. It is based, in part, on a belief that the passage of such legislation would get us into serious difficulty and might lead to war with the United States instead of preventing war. I have an opinion from one of the most distinguished international lawyers in the United States in which he points out that it gives the President of the United States the power to be so unneutral as to lead us directly into difficulties with foreign nations even if not into war with them. That is one of my reasons for objecting to the consideration of the resolution.

I believe that had President Wilson had this power in 1914 and 1915, if the resolution had been in effect at that time, with the belief which he held and which he expressed in public, he would have prevented our selling arms and ammunition to the Allies at that time, and the war might have been lost long before we entered into it. That is a belief which is also held by other people.

I believe also, Mr. President, that this resolution is aimed directly at interference with the first rights of nations under international law. When I studied international law and later when I had the honor of teaching classes in it, my recollection is that the very first chapter in the textbook on international law dealt with the right of national self-preservation. That is the very first right of a nation. If a nation shall be attacked, it can not preserve itself without the use of arms and ammunition, and if it does not have factories of its own, as we have and as have some foreign nations, it must buy supplies from abroad.

I am opposed to selling arms and ammunition to revolutionists or groups who desire to overthrow some nation to which we have given recognition, and I am opposed to this Nation's saying to any other nation whose right to exist we have recognized, "You shall not buy the arms and ammunition which you believe are necessary for your self-defense."

Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the matter at this time. I have merely given a few of my reasons, which I hope at some time to express at length, why this resolution ought not to be passed; why the President of the United States ought not to have the power asked for in the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want to ask a question of the Senator from Idaho, and I thought the Senator from Connecticut had concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wish to add that I am very sorry the Senator from Idaho did not permit the resolution to go back to the calendar, where at any time he could call it up by an ordinary motion. I think that would have been in accordance with the customary procedure, and, in face of objection, he could have moved that it be considered. I think that would have been the normal procedure to have followed, but, under the circumstances, I have no recourse except to continue my motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed, and at some time, when we shall have the appropriation bills and other important measures out of the way, to ask that the motion be considered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I remember very well when this matter was discussed in the Foreign Relations Committee. I was then under the impression—and, I assume, perhaps it is still true—that the joint resolution related entirely to the controversy over the Gran Chaco, the difficulties between Bolivia and Paraguay in South America, and was designed in some fashion or other to bring about a settlement down there without any further loss of life and probably, also, to help the United States in discharging its responsibilities under the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. President, there has been brought to my attention recently some complaint against this resolution based on other grounds, and I should like to have the Senator's opinion about these new developments, if they are developments. For instance, it has been suggested, with the unsettled condition in the Orient at the present time and with the rather bellicose attitude of Japan toward China at least, and in some degree toward all the remainder of the world, that if the President of the United States were given this enormous power it might, in some fashion or other, draw us into an altercation with Japan, if that power, enormous as it is, were exercised in any way that might possibly be resented by Japan. I should like, if the Senator has any views on that subject, to have him express them. I have had a number of representations along this line, I may say to the Senator, and it is in no critical vein that I make the suggestion I have just made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the only matter that has been brought to the attention of the committee or of myself as urgent in regard to this joint resolution is the South American situation. My judgment is that the other matter has not entered into the mind of the Executive with regard to the execution of this resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What is the Senator's view about the possibilities along that further line by granting these broad powers?

Mr. BORAH. My view is that neither the present Chief Executive nor the incoming President would utilize the power conferred under the resolution in a way that would be likely to involve us in difficulty with either one of the situations, whether in the Orient or in South America.

Mr. President, it is necessary that somebody have some discretion and some power with reference to a situation of this kind. This is not an unusual proposal. We have granted the same authority upon numerous other occasions, and, to my knowledge, it has never been exercised in a way that subjected the United States to criticism. I can not conceive of the present Chief Executive's or the President elect's—and of course the President elect will be likely to have most to do with it under the present circumstances—exercising the power conferred in any other way than for the purpose of bringing about a peaceful solution of the controversy that is now going on.

Mr. President, I am not going to consume the time at present, but a little later I am going to undertake to get this joint resolution before the Senate. There is one way by which I can get it before the Senate and have it disposed of rather speedily, but I do not want to adopt that method if I can avoid it. The situation, however, is so urgent that I feel that it ought to be acted upon at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I will yield in just a moment. When it was suggested to me that the joint resolution go back on the calendar I realized that ordinarily such a request would be granted, and if the situation had been different in the Senate from what it was I would not have hesitated to accede to the request of the Senator; but I spoke to him about his attitude and asked him whether he wanted to offer an amendment, and so forth, and he said, no, that he did not want the joint resolution to pass. I did not feel that I could connive at a program which would undoubtedly defeat its passage at this session of Congress, and so, however much I might desire to accommodate the Senator from Connecticut, I did not feel that I was in a position to yield unless the Senator from Connecticut would agree to have the resolution considered at a certain time, limit the discussion, and have a vote upon it. If that could be agreed upon, I would be perfectly willing to have it go back to the calendar; but I do feel under some obligation, under all the circumstances, to urge its passage and take advantage of any situation that may secure its passage.

I did not know of anyone in the Senate who was opposing the joint resolution. No one had indicated to me that there was opposition to it. It received the unanimous support of the committee, and, under the circumstances existing to the south, I thought there would be no opposition to it. Therefore I called it up at the time I did.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield first to the Senator from Montana, who desired to interrupt me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in view of the urgency of the matter to which the Senator from Idaho has referred, it occurs to me that perhaps the Senator from Connecticut would be willing to indicate some limited time within which he would feel justified in allowing action to be taken on the joint resolution; that he would be willing to set some limit upon the time in which he would care to discuss this joint resolution, so that we might consider and dispose of it.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; I feel so deeply about this matter that, like the Senator from Idaho, I shall use every arrow in my quiver to defeat the joint resolution, which I believe is likely to lead the United States into war, into unneutral acts, and to destroy our sense of fairness in dealing with foreign nations.

The Senator from Idaho said he did not know of anyone in opposition to the joint resolution. It was currently rumored about the Capitol and about Washington that the effort of a certain Assistant Secretary of State to push this matter through had been checkmated at its source, and that the resolution would not come before the Senate. It was currently rumored also that there would be no message from the President conveying this joint resolution. The resolution came up unexpectedly, however, and was acted upon suddenly. The resolution was not only opposed by the Assistant Secretary of War but it was opposed by the Chief of Staff of the Army. We had the Chief of Staff of the Army on record before the Appropriations Committee only a few days ago in strong opposition to the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was informed that when it was mooted that this resolution would come before the Senate, the munitions factories in the United States, with their usual celerity, moved upon the powers that be to prevent any message from being sent in at all; and, I am informed at least, that that for a time delayed action upon the resolution; but I was not aware that there was any opposition anywhere from any source except those who were engaged in selling munitions of war. I had heard that they were opposed to it, but I knew of no other opposition, and not being particularly interested in their views, of course, I paid no attention to their opposition. I repeat that, except from that source, I knew of no other opposition anywhere in regard to it. That opposition always is at hand whenever any move of this kind is made in any respect whatever.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. I realized that that charge was going to be made; and I merely desire to say to the Senator that a Member of this body approached me on behalf of several ammunition factories, requesting that I withdraw my opposition and permit the matter to go through, because they did not believe that it would do them any harm, and they would like to see it go through. That is the communication which I have received from the arms factories. I happen to be particularly interested in the national defense, and in the rights of nations, and in international law as it exists at present; and my opposition to the joint resolution has not depended on any request from any ammunition factory either for or against the joint resolution. I am very strongly opposed to it in its present form, and when the time comes I shall give my reasons at length.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not mean to intimate that the Senator himself was acting by reason of the fact that the ammunition factories in Connecticut were opposed to the joint resolution. I simply said I was informed the arms manufacturers were opposed. I did not assume, of course, that the Senator from Connecticut was controlled by any such sordid or base motives.

OBLIGATIONS TO CERTAIN ENROLLED INDIANS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 167) to carry out certain obligations to certain enrolled Indians under tribal agreement, which were, on page 2, line 19, after "death," to insert: ": Provided further, That no interest on such refunds shall be payable prior to the time provided by law for the payment of interest in any such similar cases: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any person acting as attorney or agent for any claimant to receive more than a total of 5 per cent of the amount collected under the provisions of this act, and any person collecting a total amount from such claimant in excess of said 5 per cent shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both," and on page 2, beginning with line 20, to strike out all of section 2.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I am not familiar with the joint resolution, not being a member of the committee and having just heard of it. Does it relate to allottees?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. KING. Or to the disposition of the land of allottees?

Mr. GORE. No; it relates solely to interest on void and unconstitutional taxes which the Indians were required to pay.

The principal of the tax has been refunded. The interest has not been refunded. The law authorizing the return of the principal did not make provision for the return of interest. This measure authorizes the Government to return the interest, and one of the House amendments limits the fees to 5 per cent.

Mr. KING. Were the taxes paid to municipalities, or to the State of Oklahoma, or to the Federal Government?

Mr. GORE. Oh, no; they were Federal income taxes arising from exempt Indian allotments. The Government required the Indians to pay an income tax on their royalties. The courts held that the tax was void; that the income originating in a nontaxable source was not subject to tax. So the Government has already returned the principal, the amount of tax originally paid, but has not paid the interest. The bill passed the Senate some time since.

Mr. KING. How much is involved?

Mr. GORE. Oh, it is only a small amount. There are only a few Indians involved, and not a very large amount of money. I would not want to guess as to the amount, but it is inconsequential.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES GEORGIA BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up out of order, for present consideration, Order of Business 1254, Senate Joint Resolution 223, establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if it will lead to any discussion at all.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think it will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection if the matter does not lead to any discussion; but if it does I shall object.

Mr. GEORGE. The joint resolution is reported with an amendment reducing the authorized appropriation to $1,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 233) establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, on page 2, line 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission, to be known as the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, for the purpose of participation by the United States in the observance of the two-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Georgia colony, such commission to be composed of 21 commissioners, as follows: 9 persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, 6 Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and 6 Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The members of the commission shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the commission established by this resolution for actual and necessary traveling expenses and subsistence while discharging its official duties outside the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLICE PROTECTION ON INAUGURATION DAY

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on the clerk's desk there is a joint resolution which has been passed by the House of Representatives which provides for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the inauguration. It carries an appropriation of $25,000; and we have been advised in the District of Columbia Committee that it is exactly similar to the joint resolution which has passed in connection with all previous inaugurations in recent times. It is important that this measure should be given immediate effect because of the arrangements being made by the police authorities.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution passed by the House may be considered here now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 565) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1933 was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in said District from February 28 to March 10, 1933, both inclusive, including the employment of personal services, payment of allowances, traveling expenses, hire of means of transportation, cost of removing and relocating street-car loading platforms, for the construction, rent, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public comfort stations, first-aid stations, and information booths during the period aforesaid, and other incidental expenses in the discretion of the commissioners. Said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movements, and operating of vehicles of whatever character or kind during said period; and to grant under such conditions as they may impose special licenses to peddlers and vendors to sell goods, wares, and merchandise on the streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the District of Columbia, and to charge for such privilege such fees as they may deem proper.

SEC. 2. Such regulations and licenses shall be in force one week prior to said inauguration, during said inauguration, and one week subsequent thereto, and shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia, and in such other manner as the commissioners may deem best to acquaint the public with the same; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of any of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable for each such offense to a fine of not to exceed $100 in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than 60 days.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask another question about the measure. What is the necessity for haste in passing this joint resolution?

Mr. COPELAND. The necessity for haste is due to the fact that the local police department must bring on from Baltimore uniformed officers, and detectives from other cities, in order that there may be ample protection.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, perhaps we can pass the joint resolution while we are undertaking to explain it.

Mr. COPELAND. I had no desire to discuss it. We ask for an amendment which will strike out the authorization and make it actually an appropriation. It has been passed on by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt very much whether that can be done in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The House joint resolution provides for an appropriation.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 236, which deals with the same subject, will be indefinitely postponed.

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE

Mr. REED. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate bill 5339, to authorize the Secretary of War to deed certain properties to the State of Virginia in order to connect Lee Boulevard with the Arlington Memorial Bridge, and I submit a report (No. 1161) thereon.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, as I am sure it will lead to no argument.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in order to provide a connection between the Lee Boulevard and the Arlington Memorial Bridge, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to the county of Arlington, State of Virginia, for highway purposes only, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a strip of land through the southerly portion of the Fort Myer Military Reservation necessary for construction of a connection from the Lee Boulevard to the Arlington Memorial Bridge, consisting of a right of way not less than 100 feet in width; said deed of conveyance to contain a restriction against the construction of buildings, fences, or other structures within 110 feet of the center line of said right of way.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby further authorized to convey to the said county of Arlington for highway purposes only all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a strip of land for a continuous right of way approximately 60 feet in width within and adjacent to the southerly boundary of the Arlington Reservation from the intersection of said reservation line with the northerly line of the right of way to be conveyed under section 1 to the east line of McKinley Street.

SEC. 3. The lands to be so conveyed are approximately as shown on plat No. 104.2–166 in the files of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

SEC. 4. Upon the consummation of the conveyance herein authorized to the county of Arlington, State of Virginia, the jurisdiction of the United States over said lands shall immediately cease and determine and revest in the State of Virginia.

SEC. 5. That if at any time the lands herein authorized to be conveyed to the said county of Arlington, State of Virginia, shall cease to be used for the purposes herein specified, the title in and jurisdiction over the same shall revert to the Government of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, on the southern border of the Fort Myer Reservation there is an old street-railway right of way. The street-railway company has collapsed, and the right of way is not being used for that purpose.

The State of Virginia has built a broad, new boulevard up to the edge of the reservation, and there it has stopped. This bill authorizes the State of Virginia, at its expense and not at the expense of the Federal Government, to continue that pavement in toward the end of the Memorial Bridge. It will be of great advantage to the city; it will not cost the Federal Government anything; and the committee was unanimously in favor of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. If it leads to no further discussion, I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning the Senate was good enough to give me unanimous consent for the consideration and passage of a bill introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I have to confess that I stupidly sent the wrong draft to the desk. The proper draft would have given a right of way not more than a hundred feet wide. The draft which was sent to the desk contains the words "less than," so that it would provide for a right of way not less than 100 feet wide.

There was a further provision in the amendment which we intended to incorporate in the bill granting the President the power to take this land back at any time in case, in a national emergency, the Government of the United States should need it. That provision was omitted from the draft which was sent to the desk. As both those provisions are for the further protection of the United States, I now ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, may be reconsidered, in order that the amendment may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, the votes whereby the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed are reconsidered.

Mr. REED. I now ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I send to the desk may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in order to provide a connection between the Lee Boulevard and the Arlington Memorial Bridge, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to the county of Arlington, State of Virginia, for highway purposes only, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a strip of land through the southerly portion of the Fort Myer Military Reservation necessary for the construction of a connection from the Lee Boulevard to the Arlington Memorial Bridge, consisting of a right of way not more than 100 feet in width, said deed of conveyance to contain a restriction against the construction of buildings, fences, or other structures within 110 feet of the center line of said right of way.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby further authorized to convey to the said county of Arlington for highway purposes only all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a strip of land for a continuous right of way approximately 60 feet in width within and adjacent to the southerly boundary of the Arlington Reservation from the intersection of said reservation line with the northerly line of the right of way to be conveyed under section 1 to the east line of McKinley Street.

SEC. 3. The lands to be so conveyed are approximately as shown on plat numbered 104.2–166 in the files of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

SEC. 4. The deeds of conveyance shall contain a reservation reserving to the United States the right to resume possession and occupy said tracts of land, or any portion thereof, whenever in the judgment of the President an emergency exists that requires the use and appropriation of the same for the public defense, and also a further reservation that the title hereby conveyed shall revert to the United States and all rights hereby granted shall cease and be forfeited, unless the said county of Arlington shall construct the said highway and assume the obligations herein provided within three years from the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 5. Upon the consummation of the conveyance herein authorized to the county of Arlington, State of Virginia, the jurisdiction of the United States over said lands, subject to the conditions and reservations in said deed provided, shall immediately cease and determine and revert in the State of Virginia.

SEC. 6. That if at any time the lands herein authorized to be conveyed to the said county of Arlington, State of Virginia, shall cease to be used for the purposes herein specified, the title in and jurisdiction over the same shall revert to the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to convey certain properties to the county of Arlington, State of Virginia, in order to connect Lee Boulevard with the Arlington Memorial Bridge, and for other purposes."

ADVERTISING OF NONINTOXICATING BEER

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. There is pending on the Senate Calendar H. R. 13742, known as the beer bill. The Senate committee, in reporting the bill favorably, has substituted new provisions for the House provisions.

The House bill sought to repeal existing laws prohibiting the advertising of liquor. The Senate committee incorporated in its measure a provision preventing the advertising of intoxicating liquor in certain States.

Some of the minority members of the Finance Committee have taken up this advertising provision with the Treasury Department. They have prepared an amendment which eliminates from the Senate provisions the section preventing advertising.

I ask that a memorandum explaining the existing condition of the law and a proposed amendment be printed in the RECORD, and that the amendment lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The memorandum and amendment are as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WALSH OF MASSACHUSETTS IN CONNECTION WITH THE AMENDMENT HE PROPOSED TO OFFER TO H. R. 13742, KNOWN AS THE "BEER BILL"

The Volstead Act prohibits the advertising by any means of "liquor." The Volstead Act defines liquor as used in the act to include all beverages containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol.

The so-called "Reed bone-dry amendment," passed in 1917, before the eighteenth amendment took effect, prohibits the sending through the mails of any advertisement of "intoxicating liquors" to any place at which it is unlawful under local law to advertise such liquors. This act does not define the term "intoxicating liquors."

Both of these restrictions on advertising are in existing Federal statutes.

The House bill, providing for the manufacture, distribution, and sale of liquor containing 3.2 per cent, or less, of alcohol by weight, amends the definition of "liquor" so that it does not include beer, ale, or similar fermented liquors containing 3.2 per cent, or less, of alcohol by weight.

Therefore, under the House bill, the provision of the Volstead Act prohibiting the advertisement by any means of liquor would no longer prohibit the advertising of beer containing not more than 3.2 per cent of alcohol by weight, because the prohibition in the Volstead Act applies only to the advertising of liquor and, under the House bill, such beer would no longer be "liquor" within the meaning of the Volstead Act. However, the effect of the House bill on the Reed "bone-dry" amendment is uncertain. A doubt exists because this act does not define intoxicating liquors. This doubt should have been removed by a clear statement in the House bill that the provision of the Reed "bone-dry" amendment does not apply to the liquor authorized therein.

The bill reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and which is now pending in the Senate, provides in one section that nothing in the national prohibition act shall apply in any way to beer, wine, and fruit juices containing not more than 3.05 per cent of alcohol by weight; but there is another section in the bill which contains the so-called "Dill amendment," which prohibits the advertising of liquor authorized by the bill in dry States. Furthermore, there is the same doubt as to the effect of the Reed "bone-dry" amendment on the provisions of this bill, which amendment is not repealed.

The so-called "Dill amendment," providing for prohibiting the advertising of nonintoxicating liquors, such as beer and other liquors of alcoholic content of less than 3.05 per cent in dry States, would mean that all newspapers and radio advertising would be forbidden unless—which is not possible—it could be shown that a newspaper printed in a wet State never went outside the borders of that State into a dry State.

The amendment to be proposed by Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts would permit advertising, strikes out the Dill amendment of the Senate bill, and inserts language that removes the doubt concerning the Reed bone-dry amendment, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts to the bill (H. R. 13742) to provide revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquor, and for other purposes: On page 10, to strike out lines 15 to 25, both inclusive, and lines 1 and 2 on page 11, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"(c) Nothing in section 5 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1917, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 341; Supp. VI, title 18, sec. 341), shall prohibit the deposit in or carriage by the mails of the United States, or the delivery by any postmaster or letter carrier, of any mail matter containing any advertisement of, or any solicitation of an order or orders for, any of the following containing not more than 3.05 per cent of alcohol by weight: Beer, ale, porter, wine, similar fermented malt or vinous liquor, or fruit juice."

GEORGE WASHINGTON-WAKEFIELD MEMORIAL BRIDGE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, an organization known as the George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge are anxious to build that bridge across the Potomac River, connecting Maryland and Virginia. In order to do this, it has been necessary for the States of Maryland and Virginia to appropriate money to build approaches to the bridge. In the case of Virginia, I think it is necessary to build approaches for some 16 or 17 miles and two or three smaller bridges.

The work is ready to be commenced, but unfortunately we have not had an opportunity to get legislation considered which would permit the construction of the bridge. It has been approved by all the agencies of the Government. There is $3,000,000 worth of work that can be started as soon as this bill gets through.

I therefore ask that this extension of authority, which has expired in the meantime, to a completely new, business-like organization that is going to build the bridge, may now be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. What is the request?

Mr. TYDINGS. For the present consideration of Order of Business 1208, Senate bill 5431.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va., authorized to be built by the George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, its successors and assigns, by an act of Congress approved May 5, 1926, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 16, 1928, February 26, 1929, February 19, 1930, and February 6, 1931, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that this is an extension of the $14,000,000 bridge?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; it is a new bridge. No work at all has been done on the project. It will cost about $3,000,000, and is to be built between southern Maryland and Dahlgren, opposite Washington's former home at Wakefield. It is a private organization composed of men of the highest type.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it contain any authorization of an appropriation?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va."

APPLICATION OF MERCHANT MARINE LAW TO VIRGIN ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3950) to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes," as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States," which were, on page 2, line 4, after "United," to strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert "States, until the President of the United States shall, by proclamation, declare that such coastwise laws shall extend to the Virgin Islands and fix a date for the going into effect of same," and on page 2, beginning with line 9, to strike out all of section 2.

Mr. MOSES. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. One minute, Mr. President. Will not the Senator let this matter go over until to-morrow? I think the House amended the bill by striking out some provision in it.

Mr. MOSES. I am acting in behalf of the majority of the Committee on Commerce, which considered the bill here; but in view of the Senator's representations, I will withhold my motion for one day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will let it go over until to-morrow.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 12.40 p. m. having arrived, the clerk will call the roll for the purpose of ascertaining the presence of a quorum, which will be noted in the RECORD, in order that the Senate may proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to participate in the joint session to be held for the purpose of counting the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Copeland | Harrison | Moses |
| Austin | Costigan | Hastings | Neely |
| Bailey | Couzens | Hatfield | Norbeck |

| Smoot | Townsend | Walcott | White |
| Steiwer | Trammell | Walsh, Mass. | |
| Stephens | Tydings | Walsh, Mont. | |
| Swanson | Vandenberg | Watson | |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Senators, under the order of the Senate adopted in furtherance of the concurrent resolution providing for the counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States, the Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives. After the joint session shall have been concluded there, the Senators will return and resume legislative business.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by the Vice President, the Secretary of the Senate, the secretary for the majority, and the secretary for the minority, assistants of the Sergeant at Arms, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., and the Vice President resumed the chair.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 15 minutes past 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., at which time the Senate reassembled and the Vice President resumed the chair.

COUNT OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] is recognized.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I desire to report that the two Houses of Congress of the United States met in joint session at 1 o'clock this day for the purpose of ascertaining the result of the election held on November 8 last for the office of President of the United States and Vice President of the United States; that thereupon the certificates of the electors of the several States of the votes cast by them for those offices were opened by the Vice President of the United States and delivered to the tellers. On being examined it appeared that the votes of the electors of the several States had been cast in accordance with the list which will be sent to the desk at the conclusion of my statement.

The certificates show that the state of the vote for President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President of the United States is 531, of which a majority is 266.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, of the State of New York, has received for President of the United States 472 votes;

Herbert Hoover, of the State of California, has received 59 votes.

The state of the vote for Vice President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of electors appointed to vote for Vice President of the United States is 531, of which a majority is 266.

John N. Garner, of the State of Texas, has received for Vice President of the United States 472 votes;

Charles Curtis, of the State of Kansas, has received 59 votes.

I presume the concluding statement should be made by the Vice President of the United States, and, therefore, I send the list to the President of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT (reading):

The state of the vote for President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President of the United States is 531, of which a majority is 266.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, of the State of New York, has received for President of the United States 472 votes; Herbert Hoover, of the State of California, has received 59 votes.

The state of the vote for Vice President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for Vice President of the United States is 531, of which a majority is 266.

John N. Garner, of the State of Texas, has received for Vice President of the United States 472 votes; Charles Curtis, of the State of Kansas, has received 59 votes.

This announcement of the state of the vote by the President of the Senate shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States, each for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1933, and shall be entered, together with a list of the votes, on the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives.

[For tabulation of electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States, see House proceedings of this day, page 3639.]

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING SYSTEMS

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to call up and have considered at this time Senate Resolution 350 and Senate Resolution 351. I ask unanimous consent that those resolutions may be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. If their consideration will not lead to debate, I shall not object.

Mr. WHEELER. I am quite sure they will not lead to debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state what they are?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the first resolution be reported for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 350) submitted by Mr. WHEELER on the 7th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to submit, on or before April 15, 1933, to the Senate of the United States a detailed report of the savings that may be effected through the reorganization, centralization, consolidation, and/or elimination of accounting records, accounting and audit procedures, disbursing and collecting officers, and purchasing and warehousing activities of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I asked yesterday that the resolution should go over for the day. I have since examined it, and have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

REPORTS ON DEPARTMENTAL FUNCTIONS

Mr. WHEELER. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 351.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 351) submitted by Mr. WHEELER on the 7th instant was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the heads of all departments, independent establishments, and Government owned and/or controlled corporations be, and are hereby, directed to submit, on or before April 15, 1933, to the President of the United States and to the Senate of the United States a detailed report of all functions, including accounting, disbursing, collecting, purchasing, and personnel, performed by said departments, establishments, and corporations, together with the authority for the performance of each function and the annual cost thereof.

VETERANS' CLAIMS

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial appearing in the Palo Alto (Calif.) Times, published in Palo Alto, Calif., under the caption "Press is Misjudged Regarding Attitude on Veterans' Claims," may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Daily Palo Alto Times, Palo Alto, Calif., Monday evening, January 16, 1933]

PRESS IS MISJUDGED REGARDING ATTITUDE ON VETERANS' CLAIMS

For some unaccountable reason the newspapers never have succeeded in getting the fact across that mere publication of a news story does not imply indorsement or approval. Publication of the facts of a murder does not indicate editorial approval of the murder. Nor does publication of a speech, resolution, legislative bill, or motion imply sympathetic attitude toward the contents. Newspapers continually publish texts of addresses and communications which are flagrantly in opposition to the announced editorial views of the publishers. But despite that oft-repeated demonstration, evidences pop up every now and then that some readers take for granted that any quoted matter appearing in the columns is necessarily there solely for propaganda purposes of the publication.

An evidence of that sort is furnished to-day in a forum-column contribution from officials of two local veterans' organizations. The letter begins: "While the bitter controversy is going on between the National Economy League, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and the veterans, it has been brought to our notice that the press, subsidized by national advertisers, is effectually keeping the veterans' side of the argument from the public."

That statement is both erroneous and unfair. The press, to begin with, is not "subsidized" by advertisers of any sort—national or local. Moreover, neither the press nor the advertisers are in any sort of conspiracy on the question of veterans' relief. Furthermore, the press is not keeping the veterans' side of the argument from the public. The newspapers take the stories as they break. When veterans' organizations engage in a conspicuous or otherwise important activity, the stories are published. When opposition to the claims of veterans is presented importantly and conspicuously, that, too, is news, and naturally finds its way into the news columns. The papers are under no obligation to "balance books" on the news. They take the breaks as they come.

The correspondents in their forum-column letter to-day state: "Your paper (Times) published an article on December 19, 1933, followed by another on January 4, 1933, which stated that a saving of $400,000,000 in governmental expenditures could be made if the recommendations of the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Economy League were adopted by Congress." The inference from that quotation would be that those articles were expressions of opinion by the Times. Such was not the case. The first article referred to was an Associated Press dispatch from Washington reporting recommendations to Congress by the United States Chamber of Commerce. The second was a dispatch from Washington reporting a proposal by the chairman of the House Veterans' Appropriations subcommittee. Publication of the stories implied nothing regarding the paper's attitude.

Certainly there can be no disputing the fact that statements made so conspicuously and coming from such important sources were news. And is it not important from the veterans' own standpoint that such news be published? Failure of the press to include such news in its columns would evoke the complaint that pertinent information was being suppressed so as not to allow the compensation claimants the opportunity of combating their opposition.

In order to remove any idea that may still linger regarding any conspiratorial tie-in between the policies of the allegedly "subsidized" press, the national advertisers, and any organizations, the Times hereby declares its editorial stand on the subject of veterans' claims:

First. We believe that veterans whose disabilities are service connected are entitled to every cent which they have received, which they are receiving, and which they may receive from the United States Government.

Second. In many cases we believe that the compensation of such veterans is far below the amount to which they are justly entitled.

Third. We oppose any reduction in the amounts being paid to such veterans.

Fourth. We favor the reduction or the complete elimination of compensation which is being paid to veterans whose disabilities are not service connected. We do not believe that such veterans are entitled to compensation in the first place and we believe that every cent which is paid to them takes away from compensation which should be paid to veterans with service-connected disabilities.

Fifth. We oppose the hospitalization of veterans for disability not service connected.

Sixth. We oppose the payment in advance of the "bonus" or adjusted compensation. Our reason for this opposition is based on the belief that pressure for payment will jeopardize the payment of compensation to veterans with service-connected disabilities.

We believe that the present agitation for the reduction for all payments of every sort to veterans is caused, first, by the drive for the "bonus," second by the tremendous sums paid to veterans for disabilities not service connected, and, third, the enormous cost of hospitalization of veterans for disabilities not service connected.

Our attitude may be summed up in this statement: We believe that the country can not do too much for the veteran who was disabled in service and we oppose compensation and hospitalization for the veteran whose disability was not service connected for the reason that the cost of such payment and such hospitalization jeopardizes the chances of the veteran with service-connected disability to secure just and adequate compensation.

THE TARIFF OUTLOOK—1933

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by William L. Monro, a prominent citizen and manufacturer of Pennsylvania. I am in accord with Mr. Monro when he says:

The brunt of increased foreign competition will fall with crushing weight on American labor. A factory can close down, a furnace can be drawn, and a machine can stop to await the return of better days. But there is no such waiting for our workers if they are to live and we to survive.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

THE TARIFF OUTLOOK—1933

By William L. Monro

We meet this year in the midst of a considerable tariff uncertainty. I say this not at all as an alarmist, but rather as an undeniable fact which makes difficult all attempts at analysis of the future and complicates attempts to formulate a program and a policy. A large part of this tariff uncertainty is political in its origin and character. In less than six weeks the present part-Republican administration will give way to an administration overwhelmingly Democratic. In the next House of Representatives the Democratic Party will have a membership of 314, which means a majority of 193. The next Senate will be made up of 59 Democratic Members, giving the party a majority of 22. In both the House and Senate, in other words, the party's majorities will be clearly more than enough to carry out a strictly Democratic tariff program, but to say what this program will be requires more analytical vision than I confess I have.

The Democratic Party stands committed to a competitive tariff for revenue, coupled with a policy of tariff reciprocity with the rest of the world. The effective adoption of such a program would seem to call for a revision of the present Hawley-Smoot law, but I know of no better way to indicate the tariff uncertainty confronting us than to refer to the lack of agreement among two of the most prominent Democratic tariff leaders in Washington. Less than a year ago Senator HARRISON, of Mississippi, who will be the new chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, publicly charged that "the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill wrecked this country," and he added, "I will stand by that statement." Less than two months before Senator HARRISON made this charge, his colleague in the House, Congressman RAINEY, who may be the new chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, admitted that the Democrats did not dare reduce the rates in the Hawley-Smoot law for fear of permitting a flood of cheap foreign merchandise to come into this country. As a further indication of the prevailing lack of tariff agreement in official Washington, I might refer to the announcement two weeks ago that both Senator COSTIGAN and Congressman LEWIS (both former members of the Tariff Commission) will propose that the new administration reduce the rates in the industrial schedules to the levels of the Democratic Underwood-Simmons Act of 1913.

Despite this disagreement, however, and the uncertainty which it suggests, it seems to me extremely unlikely that we shall go through the coming year without congressional consideration of the tariff, and, therefore, despite the uncertainty and disagreement, I propose a brief analysis of the outstanding features in the existing tariff situation which I believe will necessarily play a large part in the tariff program with which we shall have to deal.

THE TEST OF A COMPETITIVE TARIFF

First, I refer again to the Democratic Party's commitment on the tariff. The party stands pledged to a competitive tariff for revenue, supplemented by a policy of tariff reciprocity with the rest of the world. There is likely to be some difficulty, it seems to me, in actually formulating a tariff program which will fulfill these two fundamental statements of purpose, but assuming this can be done, let us consider the result. We shall have a competitive tariff, which is what the Democratic tariff law of 1913 was. The test of such a tariff, according to both President Wilson and one of its sponsors, Congressman Underwood, is to be found in the volume of competitive imports which are allowed to come into our country to compete with the products of American industry, agriculture, and labor. President Wilson was particularly specific in explaining the principle of a competitive tariff. The theory of such a tariff, he said, is "to introduce in every line of industry a competitive basis, providing for a substantial amount of importation * * *." This, I think we must assume, still holds, and in this explanation of the underlying theory of a competitive tariff we have at least a good indication of the fundamental character of the tariff law which the Democratic Party stands pledged to give us.

This proposal for a foreign competitive basis for American industries and labor overlooks the fact that the industries of this country are, without exception, more highly competitive than in any other country in the world. It also overlooks the fact that the foreign competition which is to be invited into our markets is largely from industries that are operating in their own countries under trade agreements, cartels, and the like regulating production and selling prices, all by government sanction.

RECIPROCITY IN OPERATION

Presumably a new Democratic tariff law will reserve our century-old tariff policy under which our dutiable schedules have provided for a single rate of duty per commodity applicable to all imports regardless of their country of origin. Such a tariff policy means a program of tariff bargaining with foreign countries under which, in return for concessions and advantages granted our trade by a foreign country, we reciprocate by granting tariff concessions to our imports from that particular foreign country. This, of course, is but another way of saying that we shall reduce our duties on imports from those countries that give us tariff concessions on our exports. Query: If our rates have already been reduced to competitive-tariff levels, are they to be further reduced by this policy of international reciprocity and tariff bargaining, and is this policy of a competitive-reciprocity tariff to be inaugurated in the face of the wholesale drastic reduction in our rate structure which has been brought about by the world-wide depreciation in foreign currencies?

THE MENACE OF DEPRECIATED CURRENCY IMPORTS

No analysis of our tariff future is complete without a consideration of the increasing menace of depreciated-currency imports to our industries and our labor. I referred to this problem in my report to you a year ago, saying that 23 foreign nations were more or less completely off the gold standard; a survey of the Department of Commerce in December indicated that the number of such countries has increased to 44. A year ago, the maximum depreciation was about 30 per cent of par; this morning the Japanese yen is quoted at 20.75 cents on a par value of 49.85 cents—a depreciation of 58.4 per cent. I also referred to the fact a year ago that there is not a single provision in our tariff law to deal with this economic menace, and after a year of intensive effort, in which the Tariff League has participated to the limit of its ability and resources, we are still without a remedy against depreciated-currency imports, thanks to the refusal of Congress to act.

The menace, both actual and potential, of the unfair competition of depreciated-currency imports in our markets has reached such a point where I may say that many Democratic leaders in Washington are convinced of the need for congressional action. Further, I am informed that in the opinion of one of these legislators the failure of our efforts last spring and summer to secure remedial legislation was due in part to the lack of appreciation in the country generally of the menace of this unfair foreign competition in our markets. I think this probably was the case six months ago; in fact, I think it was probably the case up until about a month ago. But the last 30 days has brought a development on this score of tremendous importance. About a month ago the Hearst newspaper chain, impressed by the seriousness of depreciated-currency imports to our industries and our workers, started a popular campaign of truly heroic proportions in support of congressional action against these ruinous importations. This campaign by the Hearst newspapers is, in my opinion, a great public service to the American people. Here is a power that can educate and arouse the people to the seriousness of this unfair foreign competition in our markets; and the Congress never met that dares remain adamant to the demands of an aroused people.

SHORTER HOURS FOR LABOR MEANS INCREASED COSTS

Under these circumstances, action of some kind must soon be forthcoming, and we have therefore a most anomalous situation. The Democratic Party stands pledged to a downward revision of our tariff, but the party will actually assume control of our national policy confronted with the need for restoring the protective intent of the rate structure in the act of 1930. The party's course, it seems to me, should not be a difficult one to choose. With national and international conditions as they are, an abandonment of our protective-tariff policy at this time would result, I am convinced, in a setback of disastrous proportions. Even under good business conditions, we are faced with the serious problem of absorbing a surplus of labor.

Under the stress of the economic conditions of the past three years public opinion has moved far in favor of absorbing our idle labor through a reduction in the working hours per man per week. Such a program necessarily involves the question of wages as well as hours, if we are to maintain the American standard of living. To do this the employer and the employees must share the burden of increased production costs which will inevitably follow a reduction in the number of hours worked per man. To the extent that these increased costs result in higher selling prices it will invite increased importations of foreign-made competitive merchandise. This would decrease employment in this country, and I see no escape from the conclusion that a reduction in the working hours of labor, with its consequent increase in manufacturing costs, will require increases in the tariff if our rates are to equalize the difference between foreign and domestic costs.

I fully realize that we seem to have lost sight of this principle of cost equalization in the maze of economic arguments advanced in support of a competitive reciprocity tariff for this country. Cutting through the maze of discussion and propaganda, the economic case for any such tariff program rests on two principal arguments.

TARIFF REDUCTION FOR INCREASED EXPORTS—UNSOUND AND FALLACIOUS

The first of these arguments claims that a revival of our export trade and a restoration of it to something like the levels of 1928 and 1929 is the key to the return of prosperity, and that such a revival and restoration of our export trade can only be secured by a reduction in our tariff which will permit foreign producers to increase the sale of their goods in our markets. This argument is accepted at its face value by a great many people. It is publicly proclaimed by economic theorists, spokesmen for the automobile industry, bank and college presidents, and others. In short, the argument has widespread acceptance, and it is certainly not lacking in support of an apparently substantial character. Despite the impressive array of intelligence which supports and advocates it, however, I believe the argument to be thoroughly unsound and wholly fallacious.

TWO-THIRDS OF OUR IMPORTS NOW DUTY FREE

It is now generally appreciated that under our present tariff law about two-thirds of all our imports come in duty free. The importance of this lies not so much in the size of this percentage as it does in the fact that it is a fundamental principle in our protective-tariff policy to levy duties only on luxury articles and on foreign-produced merchandise that is competitive with the products of American labor, agriculture, and industry. This being so, it inevitably follows that a reduction in our tariff deliberately made so that foreign producers can take over a larger share of the American market would call for a reduction in the rates applicable to foreign-made merchandise which would compete with and displace in our markets the products of our workers, our farms, and our factories. And we are told that by increasing our imports—our competitive imports, if you please—the resulting increase in our export trade will more than make up for the unemployment of our workers and the idleness of our plants, which surely will follow an increase in competitive imports.

Now here is fallacy indeed; here, it seems to me, is a proposal contrary to common sense. Such a proposal proceeds on the naïve assumption that a reduction in our tariff on competitive imports will be automatically followed by world-wide reductions in foreign tariffs which are to-day one of the two outstanding causes of the decline in our export business. I called this assumption naïve; I would add that I consider it violent and wholly unjustified. International trade is, to a much greater degree than domestic trade, devoid of sentiment. Foreign nationals buy from us those things, and only those things, which we can sell them more cheaply than other producers can. I know of no greater proof of this than the fact that in the first quarter of 1931 England bought more wheat from communistic Russia than she did from her own Dominion of Canada. I say, therefore, that the export-traders' assumption that a reduction in our tariff will automatically be followed by a widespread movement in foreign countries to buy American goods is contrary to all known facts.

1 PER CENT EQUALS 10 PER CENT AND 2 PER CENT EQUALS 20 PER CENT

But overlook all this and consider the argument from a very simple statistical standpoint. For the past 30 years our export trade has amounted to about 10 per cent of our total annual production; not 10 per cent of our total domestic business, be it noted, but 10 per cent of what the Department of Commerce calls our total production of movable goods. The latest available figures are for 1929, and in that year our total production was valued at almost $53,000,000,000, while our total exports were valued at slightly over $5,000,000,000. The export-trade argument says we must lower our tariff to increase imports so as to increase exports. Suppose we were to do so and that we let in enough increased imports to cut our domestic production by only 2 per cent. Two per cent of $53,000,000,000 is over $1,000,000,000. To offset and make up for this 2 per cent loss to our producers calls for a 20 per cent increase in our export trade. This may all sound complicated, but it is plain arithmetic. So long as our domestic production is ten times as great as our export trade, every cut of 1 per cent in our domestic production calls for a 10 per cent increase in our export trade if we are to break even. Otherwise we sacrifice a part of our great domestic market for a mess of export porridge. Furthermore, we can only increase our export trade by engaging in a battle of prices in the world's markets with foreign producers who have the competitive advantage which comes from the lower wages, longer working hours, and the lower standards of living of foreign countries. In the face of these conditions, who is foolish enough to believe that having lowered our tariff and admitted an increased volume of imports that we can secure a corresponding increase in our export business?

WHO REALLY WILL PAY FOR INCREASED EXPORTS?

In the second place, the proponents of the argument that we must restore our export trade to some such proportions as prevailed in 1928 and 1929 seem completely to overlook the tremendously important fact that we ourselves financed our predepression export business. Thanks to the operations of our international bankers during the years from 1923 to 1928, the American people paid for the exports with which we filled the holds of almost every outgoing ship during the whole of the late-lamented boom years. In fact, as matters stand to-day, it can almost be said that we gave away most of the exports we shipped out in the predepression years, I believe that our export-trade advocates have the burden of telling us and the American people who really is going to pay for the export business we buy at the price of tearing down our tariff.

OUR 90 PER CENT DOMESTIC MARKET

Finally, the proponents of this theory that our return to prosperity is dependent upon an increased volume of export trade overlook the fact that we are ourselves our own best customers.

We regularly consume fully 90 per cent of our total production every year, and our prosperity depends upon this domestic trade to an infinitely greater degree than it does on our foreign trade. When this country is operating on a reasonably normal basis the wheels of industry are humming loudly, unemployment is at a minimum, wages are high, our people are living up to American standards, profits are being disbursed as dividends; in short, the country is prosperous, and it is prosperous because of the tremendous consuming capacity of our own markets. A return of our domestic consuming capacity is what we need, and not a greater increase in our export trade. During the last three years of depression many of our leading industries have planned for economies and greater efficiency, so that a production of only 35 per cent or 40 per cent of capacity means operation "in the black." Under these conditions I leave to you what their showing would be under an operation of 80 or 90 per cent of capacity. I say again that our return to prosperity does not depend upon an increase in our foreign trade. We need to open up again our unrivalled market. We need a revival of confidence. We need to revolt against our own timidity and dare to go ahead. Our future lies in a dependence on and within ourselves, and not in a dependence on foreign countries and foreign markets.

THE WAR DEBTS

The other principal economic argument advanced in support of the proposal that we abandon our protective-tariff policy grows out of the relation between our tariff policy and the pressing problem of international debts.

We are a creditor Nation to the extent of approximately $22,000,000,000, after deducting the $4,000,000,000 which is estimated to be the par value of the foreign holdings of American obligations. Of the total foreign debts due us, approximately eleven and one-half billion dollars are on account of the so-called war debts, while about fourteen and one-half billion dollars represents the total of the so-called private or commercial debts, most of which are the result of our international banking operations during the 10 years after the armistice. As regards methods of payment on account there is no difference between the intergovernmental war debts and the private debts. Both can be paid, if paid at all, in three ways: By the transfer of gold, by payment in services, and by payment in goods.

In view of this most important similarity between the war debts and the postwar private commercial debts, I have been impressed during the last year at the apparent lack of consideration of the ultimate disposition of these private debts. Practically all of the discussion concerning cancellation, reduction, and revision have related to the intergovernmental war debts, apparently on the theory that if these could be satisfactorily disposed of the private debts would take care of themselves. This may be so; in any case, with this much of a comment on the close similarity between the war debts and the private debts, I shall limit myself to a consideration of the war debts as these relate to our tariff policy. It will be useful at this point to refer briefly to the magnitude of the amounts involved at this time to accomplish the annual payments of the war debts. Under the terms of the funding agreements we have with the 15 nations obligated to us on account of the war debts the total of the payments due us for 1932 amounted to $246,000,000. For 1933 the total of the payments due us amounts to $280,000,000.

THE MEANS DESTROYS THE END

Obviously, substantial payments in gold are out of the question for the time being, leaving payment in services and payment in goods as the only two available methods. Of these two methods we are most concerned with the latter—payment in goods—and payment in goods means merchandise imports into the United States. To the extent that this merchandise is competitive with the products of our own workers, farms, and factories, it means that we displace American products and American workers with foreign-made merchandise, and displacing American workers inevitably means reducing their purchasing power and their demand for goods, both foreign and domestic. Thus, I fear that in taking payment for the international debts due us in foreign-made goods we become involved in a vicious circle. Our foreign debtors can pay us in goods only to the extent that our markets can and will absorb this foreign-made merchandise. And to the extent that this foreign-made merchandise is competitive with and displaces American-made goods, to that extent we reduce the capacity of our markets to absorb our debtors' products. The means, in other words, destroys its own end, for as our foreign debtors pay their debts to us by taking over an increased share of the American market, by the very process of doing so they destroy the market which is to absorb their merchandise.

Is the alternative, it will be asked, cancellation of these intergovernmental war debts? Not necessarily, in my opinion, but the alternative, I believe, does involve certain revisions and considerable readjustment. The English debt, as it now stands, is wholly out of line with the settlements made with all our other debtors. On the basis of simple fairness, if on no other, it seems to me the English debt should be reviewed and revised, and I think, too, that our consideration of the problem will have to go beyond England as a result of the international financing of the private loans by our bankers since the original examination of our debtors' capacity to pay on which the existing funding agreements are based.

FURTHER POSTPONEMENT OF PAYMENTS NECESSARY

In the meantime, I see but one solution—a further deferring of the annual war-debt payments, both principal and interest, until such time as our debtors can pay without crippling themselves. This does not mean, nor does it require, a return to the dizzy heights we reached in 1928 and 1929. A return to what I shall call the reasonably normal conditions of 1925, 1926, and 1927 would, I believe, provide us with a highly satisfactory working basis. During each of those three years, for example, it is estimated that American tourists in foreign countries spent on the average over $600,000,000—an amount more than twice the amount of the current annual payments on the war debts on account of both principal and interest. Most of these tourist expenditures were made in the very countries obligated to us on account of the war debts, and every dollar of these expenditures is as effective in the payment of these war debts as is the transfer of gold or payment in goods. Here, in this one item of the so-called invisible trade which runs heavily against us every year is a method of paying the war debts which I think has not been given its proper attention.

I shall summarize my whole consideration of this complicated problem concerning the relation between our tariff policy and the payment of the war debts by saying that I believe the Tariff League should oppose any proposed settlement of our international debts—both public and private—made at the expense of our labor and our industries at a time when our business is reduced to a minimum and our unemployment stands at an all-time high. I shall add to this what I said to you a year ago: If and when the problem narrows down to a choice of two alternatives—one the abandonment in whole or in part of the foreign debts due us, and the other an abandonment of our American markets to foreign-made goods in order that these foreign debts may be paid—it seems to me the choice is inevitable. At all costs we must protect our workers, our farms, and our industries from a foreign competition of such ruinous character that it would lead to economic chaos and possibly to social revolution.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion: We are confronted with a tariff outlook in which the continuance of our protective policy is at stake. Serious enough under the best of conditions, the abandonment of our protective tariff at this time seems to me like a leap into the unknown. For more than three years we have struggled with a series of economic reverses of almost overwhelming proportions, and we are threatened now with another in the form of increased foreign competition in our own markets. The brunt of this increased foreign competition will fall with crushing weight on American labor. A factory can close down, a furnace can be drawn, and a machine can stop to await the return of better days. But there is no such waiting for better days for our workers. They must work if they are to live and if we are to survive.

Our greatest need is for stability. Stability begins in the market, and the violent disturbance of our markets which would inevitably follow the enactment of a competitive-reciprocity tariff at this time would be, I repeat, a setback of disastrous proportions. The Tariff League, therefore, it seems to me, should urge upon our incoming administration, even to the point of pleading with its responsible leaders, the adoption of a tariff policy which will not open our markets to the low-cost producers and labor of foreign countries. This calls first for a legislative check on the growing menace of depreciated-currency imports, and it calls for the continued maintenance of our protective-tariff policy.

My final word is a single sentence quoted from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: "We do not want this market flooded with the products of cheap labor in other countries." That statement was made on January 9, 1932, on the floor of the House by Congressman HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, Democratic tariff leader and low-tariff advocate. I shall add to it only: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will make only a brief statement regarding the bill. The appropriations in the bill as it was passed by the House totaled $43,652,904.

The amount added by the Senate committee—that is, the net amount—is $164,940.

The amount carried by the bill as reported to the Senate is $43,817,844.

The amount of appropriations for 1933, the present fiscal year, was $67,183,684.35.

The amount carried by the bill as reported by the Senate committee is under the estimates for 1934 by $2,266,085, and, compared with the appropriations for the fiscal year 1933, represents a reduction of $23,365,840.35.

There are very few amendments to the bill, and I doubt very much whether there is any objections to the amendments which have been reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with, and the first amendment of the committee will be stated when it is reached in the reading.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Bureau of Indian Affairs, Industrial Assistance and Advancement," on page 18, line 10, after the name "Oregon," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$20,000," so as to read:

Insect control work, Klamath Indian Reservation, Oreg. (tribal funds): For continuation of forest insect control work on the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon, $20,000, payable from funds on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the Klamath Indians.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I offer due apology for discussing a subject not immediately related to the pending bill. Last week I had expected to address the Senate on the subject of tax-exempt securities, and I meditated a speech thereon of perhaps half an hour in length. It so happened, however, that on last Monday morning I was in conference with a body of distinguished gentlemen who fell into a discussion of the uselessness, indeed the futility, of protracted speeches in the Senate. So I began to plan to limit my remarks on the subject of tax-exempt securities to five minutes.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury estimated in his report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, that on December 31, 1931, there were outstanding in the United States $22,536,000,000 in securities that are exempt from taxation so far as the normal income tax and the surtax are concerned. These figures given out by the Secretary of the Treasury are by no means an exaggeration. Here, therefore, Mr. President, is a tremendous reservoir of wealth, possessed largely by men and women of vast property, that is not paying its due proportion and share of the taxes to maintain the Federal Government, whilst the men and women who toil and do not possess large property must pay income taxes.

Recently it has been proposed in Congress and elsewhere "to broaden the base," so as to make the income tax apply to still larger numbers of persons of small means, as a way out of the Treasury deficit. I respectfully point to this vast reservoir of wealth, $22,536,000,000, which is exempt from the normal income tax and the surtax.

Some time ago I introduced a joint resolution, being Senate Joint Resolution 224, to provide an amendment to the Constitution under which hereafter no more tax-exempt securities shall be issued. I realize that it may be some time before such an amendment could be adopted and become a part of our Constitution. Happily, however, it is within the power of the Federal Government to decline further to issue tax-exempt securities, and, happily, it is within the power of every State and every county and every municipal corporation to decline hereafter to issue tax-exempt securities; and, therefore, the remedy is within their own hands. If people complain that this already vast reservoir of nontaxable securities continues to increase in volume, they have but themselves to blame.

It is well, Mr. President, to remember that every time the Federal Government issues a tax-exempt security, every time a State, a county, or a municipality issues a tax-exempt security, a double burden of taxation is thereby immediately placed upon some other person.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. KING. I recognize that my able friend from Arizona has been a student of this question, and I am inclined to defer to his judgment; but I challenge his attention to the fact that many representatives of States—and one of them wrote me a letter, which I received this morning—learning of the movement looking toward a constitutional amendment that would subject municipal and State securities to taxation, protest against it upon the ground that so long as the States may sell their securities free from the burden of taxation they can get a much larger amount for the bonds which they issue than if those bonds were subject to taxation. They say, too, what they lose in taxes and what the Federal Government loses in taxes the States as well as the Federal Government are more than compensated by the advantageous disposition which they may make of their securities. They can sell them above par, and they can reduce the rate of interest perhaps from 4 or 5 or 6 per cent down to 2 or 3 per cent.

I have been constrained to accept that view in the past, and I know that many able men who do not like this tax exemption have felt that perhaps, taken by and large, there was a sort of equilibrium maintained between the advantages and the disadvantages. Furthermore, there has been a sort of hostile feeling toward the Federal Government saying to the States, "We are going to tax your securities." There might arise a period when the Federal Government would want to tax the States out of existence or to limit their authority, to the extent that they might do by taxation, and thus the States would be unable really to issue securities for the maintenance of their governments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, reciprocating the compliment the able Senator from Utah was so kind as to pay to me—the Senator is a member of the Senate Committee on Finance, and is a closer student of the general subject of finance than am I; it so happens, however, that for some years I have given the subject of tax-exempt securities close consideration; and now in vindication of my assertion that most subjects before the Senate may be discussed in 5 or 10 minutes, the able Senator from Utah has in three or four minutes said about all that may be said in opposition to a refusal hereafter to issue tax-exempt securities. The able Senator, in a few sharp sentences, gave all the arguments that may hereafter be, or that have heretofore been advanced in favor of tax-exempt securities.

Mr. President, admitting for the sake of the argument that there might be a reciprocal balance—there is still another factor in this question, and it is a factor that Bismarck called an "imponderable." I tell you, Mr. President—respectfully, of course—that the American people, finding the depression long, are short in temper; and the longer the depression lasts, the shorter will be their temper.

We are obliged to confront an "imponderable." When people realize that this citizen with his breast-pockets bulging with nontaxable securities and that citizen with a safety deposit box filled with nontaxable securities have the same protection under the Government as does the man who pays taxes, it does not require a close observer to realize that there is a feeling that an unfairness exists.

It is like the old-time railroad passes: Every time a passenger rode upon a free pass the next passenger who came along and paid fare was required to pay for the transportation of the free passenger. It is an inexorable law that can not be escaped, denied, or dodged; and in my judgment, the issuance of tax-exempt securities should cease. It is time to set in motion some movement looking toward the refusal of the States and the refusal of the Federal Government hereafter to issue tax-exempt securities.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the argument which is frequently made, that through the issuance of these tax-exempt bonds money is raised at a lower interest rate, which in effect pays the taxes by a lower interest rate. What has the Senator to say about that?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know that the able Senator from Iowa was in the Chamber when the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] made the same point.

Mr. BROOKHART. No; I did not hear it made.

Mr. ASHURST. I said in reply that, in my judgment, that is the only argument that can be made for tax-exempt securities. Assuming it to be sound, there nevertheless remains this "imponderable," which for a century has disturbed and will continue to disturb our people, to wit, the sense of unfairness in permitting one class of persons to escape taxation, to have their breast pockets bulging with nontaxable securities and their strong boxes almost bursting with nontaxable securities, while upon the other citizen a double burden of taxation is thereby placed.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, another question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield further?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]—who, I hope, will be our next Secretary of the Treasury—said recently that the interest rate on these Government loans should have been reduced long ago.

I have had a feeling myself that Mr. Mellon's whole administration has been a plan to maintain high interest rates. I have felt all the time that he could have reduced the interest rate on these Government bonds, because every issue since he has been Secretary of the Treasury has been oversubscribed. I have felt that always they were put out at an interest rate higher than tax-exempt bonds ought to carry. If the public authorities would hold down the interest rates, there would be still more merit in that argument, would there not?

Mr. ASHURST. When you take me into the field of finance, I do not feel at ease in measuring blades with men like the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and other Senators. It so happens, however, that I have given this subject of tax-exempt securities a particular study for some years, and I am convinced that the country ultimately will see the injustice of issuing tax-exempt securities.

In conclusion, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks a copy of my joint resolution; an article from Scribner's Magazine for January, 1933, by Henry Hazlitt entitled "No Taxes to Pay"; also an article from the Chicago American written by Mr. R. P. Vanderpoel, its financial editor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 224

Joint Resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain incomes

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

"SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of such State."

NO TAXES TO PAY

(By Henry Hazlitt, in Scribner's for January, 1933)

A curious situation arises in the tax exemption of Government property itself. It is, of course, perfectly justifiable for a city not to tax its own property. The only possible objection to this type of exemption is an indirect one. It occurs when a city is operating, say, a subway or an electric-light plant in competition with a private plant and figures its costs without making any allowance for taxation. This, of course, is merely a bookkeeping difficulty and can be easily straightened out. But a more complex situation occurs when there is a great deal of tax-exempt Federal or State property in a city. This may sometimes bring added business to the city and—if part of it is a handsome post office, for example—may sometimes be a cause for local pride. But a large amount of Federal or State property in a city may bring no equivalent local benefit—it may even, if it happens, let us say, to consist of a Federal or State prison, damage business and property values. As a result the taxpayers of that city will, in effect, be contributing more than their proportionate share to the upkeep of the Federal or State Government.

Perhaps the chief reason that this whole matter of local tax exemption has hitherto attracted so little real attention is that it has been until recently comparatively small. Up to 1920, for example, the tax-exempt real estate throughout the United States was not more than 10 per cent of the total. But recently the seriousness of the problem has been growing, and one of the most striking examples of that seriousness can be found in the situation in New York City. In 1930 the value of New York City real estate was assessed at a total of just under $20,000,000,000, and of this more than $5,000,000,000 was tax exempt. Of this tax-exempt property $3,345,000,000 was Government owned, $913,000,000 represented new buildings put up under the postwar State housing law, and of the $860,000,000 of other privately owned tax-exempt property remaining $419,000,000 was religious property and $37,000,000 was the property of fraternal and benevolent organizations. The expiration since 1930 of the exemption of new buildings under the State housing law has still not greatly improved matters. Though the city's total tentative 1933 assessments have been reduced to $18,225,000,000, there has been an increase of $313,000,000 in exempt Government-owned property and of $102,000,000 in exempt privately owned property apart from new housing, with the result that the amount of tax-exempt property in New York City is still more than 25 per cent of the total. In the State of New York as a whole $6,700,000,000 in real estate is tax exempt.

It is important to stress the extent of this local tax exemption, for local taxes—practically all of which are levied on real estate—are equal to State and Federal taxes combined. But the tax exemptions under Federal laws are even more remarkable in some respects than the local exemptions. The Federal Government, for example, begins by exempting from income taxation the same type of institutions that most of the States exempt from property taxation. Thus the Federal revenue law and the laws of many of the States exempt from the income tax labor and agricultural organizations; fraternal orders operating under the lodge system; corporations; funds or foundations organized for "religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals"; farmers' cooperatives; and many other types of organization. We also exempt from taxation that part of an individual's income—provided it does not exceed 15 per cent of the total—that he gives to various religious and charitable organizations. This becomes, of course, a powerful fund-raising argument on the part of these organizations. An individual in the highest income brackets is called upon to pay up to 63 per cent of his income in Federal taxes and, perhaps, an additional amount in State taxes. In New York State, for instance, this additional tax amounts to 6 per cent, which means that the individual in the highest brackets pays up to 69 per cent of his income in taxes. The various charitable organizations, in appealing for funds, can, therefore, point out to this individual that for every $100 he gives them he is really only giving away a net amount—to him—of $31, because taxes would take the other $69 in any case.

Among exemptions in the Federal field, however, most attention has been directed to the tax-exempt bond. Prof. E. M. Patterson, in a recent article in the New Republic, has sought to show that the effect of the tax-exempt bond as a source of tax evasion has been greatly exaggerated. On December 31, 1930, the total outstanding issues of Federal, State, and local bonds, including those wholly exempt from the normal income tax and surtax of the Federal Government and those exempt only from a normal income tax, were $32,803,000,000. Professor Patterson proceeds to show that these bonds have largely gravitated into the hands of insurance, surety and bonding corporations, banks and trust companies, business corporations, and charitable institutions rather than into the hands of wealthy individuals. The Federal Trade Commission in 1924 estimated that at the end of 1922 there were $31,921,000,000 wholly and partially tax-exempt securities outstanding, of which only $4,450,000,000 were owned by individuals whose taxable incomes exceeded $10,000. From 1922 to 1929, inclusive, estates subject to the Federal estate tax showed a very low proportion of holdings of tax-exempt securities. The highest average percentage shown in any year was 8.68 per cent in 1925.

These figures are enough to show that up to the present the tax-exempt bond has not become a real menace to our income tax system. They do not prove, however, that it will not become a real menace in the future, and they do not prove that it is not vicious in principle. Why, we may ask, have not wealthy individuals bought tax-exempt bonds in the quantities we might expect them to? The answer is not a simple one. The purchase of Federal, State, and municipal bonds is virtually compulsory with many types of institutions, and these absorb them almost automatically. Other institutions invest in such bonds merely because they are moved by conservatism, and State and Federal bonds seem to them the safest of all securities. The wealthy American, on the other hand, usually derives his wealth from some particular line of business or industry with which he and his family have been associated for years. As he draws more profits from that industry, he tends to put them back into it in order to draw out still more profits. His ownership is either direct or represented largely in common stock. His rate of return on his investment, even on his new investment, was until recently very large. He is connected with his business sentimentally. And his temperament and environment make him nearly always an inveterate gambler.

That is why he had not, up to 1929, put his money largely into tax-exempt securities. But will this situation continue indefinitely? The period of high tax-exempt bond issues and of high income taxes correspond, up to 1929, with the "new era," the era of huge and often fantastic industrial profits; the era in which common stocks, in the course of a decade, could increase 1,000 per cent or more in their market values. Certainly there seemed little incentive, while this was going on, to put one's money in tax-exempt bonds, the return on which was comparatively very low and the capital value of which did not increase at all. But what may happen now that the situation has reversed itself—now that the rich have seen their industrial profits turn to heavy deficits, now that they have seen their common stocks melt away on the average to one-fifth of their value in 1929, while the only securities that have held their value have been United States Government bonds, and while income-tax rates have returned to their war-time levels? Can all this occur without profoundly altering the mental habits of the wealthy Americans? There are probably very few among them now who do not wish that they had had their money in Government bonds—for the sake of safety of principal alone. And their regret would deepen if many of them made a cold calculation—which the "economic man" does not always do—of the real return that a tax-exempt bond would have yielded them. Under present Federal income-tax rates individuals with incomes over $100,000 receive from a 4 per cent tax-exempt security the equivalent of a return of 9 to 11 per cent on a taxable security, depending on the size of their incomes; on a 5 per cent exempt security they receive the equivalent of 11 to 13½ per cent.

Whatever may be said of the comparative harmlessness of the tax-exempt bond up to the present, it remains vicious in principle and always a potential threat to our tax structure. Even if it were true at present that the Government saved more in interest charges by making its bonds tax exempt than it lost in taxes by the same act, the tax-exempt bond could still be defended only from the narrow standpoint of government fiscal policy, and not from the broader standpoint of general social policy. For the tax-exempt bond offers immunity precisely to those "unearned incomes" that ought to pay, and in Great Britain do pay, a higher rate than "earned" incomes. And even from the narrow fiscal standpoint the case of the tax-exempt bond is far from established. For almost no individual or institution buys a tax-exempt bond for its tax-exempt feature alone, unless it believes that it will thereby save in taxes more than it loses by accepting a lower interest because of the tax-exemption. And if its calculations prove to be correct, then the Government is losing on net balance exactly what the holders of the bonds are gaining on net balance. (Actually this total governmental loss is being shifted from the State and local governments to the Federal Government.)

We come finally to the most widespread example of tax exemption—the Federal and State income taxes on individuals. In 1930 the number of persons paying Federal income tax was 2,000,000, or hardly more than 1½ per cent of the whole population. Even under the severe new law a married man with two dependents pays nothing on a net income of $3,300, and less than 1 per cent on a net income of $4,000. Not until his income goes above $25,000 does he pay as much as 10 per cent of it in income tax; from that point on, of course, it is scaled up rapidly until it approaches its maximum, Federally, of 63 per cent. Not more than 60,000 persons pay more than 10 per cent of their incomes in Federal taxes, and this small group—1 person in every 2,000—pays four-fifths of the income tax. An even smaller group, made up of those with $50,000 net income or over, numbering about 30,000—or only 1 in every 4,000 of our population—pays nearly three-quarters of our income tax. This hardly seems to bear out the frequent contention that our capitalist Government is controlled solely in the interests of the wealthy.

In Great Britain, by contrast, 5 per cent of the population pays income tax; a married man with the equivalent of $5,000 net income pays more than six times what he would have to pay in this country. Possibly a fairer comparison of the proportion of the population paying income tax is not the actual number of income-tax payers but the number of persons income taxes are paid for. Assuming that the average income-tax payer in the United States pays for three persons, the percentage of the population directly interested in income-tax rates may rise to as high as 5 per cent. But a tax system under which 95 per cent of the population does not pay the Federal tax on which chief attention is concentrated is not one that encourages public pressure for Federal economy.

I do not intend, because of these figures, to support the paradoxical thesis that in American taxation it is the poor who exploit the rich. It has been calculated for one thing that the highest 5 per cent of income receivers in the United States receive one-fourth of the entire national income; and, wholly aside from broader considerations, it would not pay the Government purely from a fiscal and administrative standpoint to extend the income-tax "base" very greatly. Moreover, if most politicians publicly support the poor against the rich in drawing up income-tax rates, because they know where their votes come from, privately their actions may favor the rich against the poor, because they know where their campaign contributions come from. This type of favoritism may make itself felt in various ways. For example, in the cities, even if the rich individual or corporation can not manage to secure a specially low assessment in return either for a direct bribe or a campaign donation or because he has a friend in politics, he can at least afford to hire lawyers and experts to contest his tax assessment and to get it reduced.

Tax favoritism is, of course, one of the means by which the great city political machines maintain themselves in power. In Chicago the assessments are notoriously inequitable. The New York World-Telegram published on October 10 last the results of a survey of 193 pieces of property in New York City which had been sold, appraised, or mortgaged since July 1. It found that 106 pieces of property sold or appraised for a total of $15,726,471 had been assessed at $20,836,000; while, on the other hand, 83 properties with a market value according to actual sales or appraisals of at least $12,995,049 were assessed at only $9,159,700. It found, as might be expected, that extreme cases of overassessment by the city were largely among small properties. Assuming that its samples were representative, it concluded that owners of 43,000 Manhattan properties will pay $40,000,000 taxes next year that should be met by owners of 34,000 underassessed properties.

These figures, it is true, take us out of the field of exemption and favoritism intended and created by the law itself. But they are enough to indicate that the unfavored taxpayer must help to support, in addition to those whom the law intentionally excuses, those who escape their just burden through lax administration or downright corruption. During the new era we did not worry very much about what such luxuries were costing us. We were rich; what did we care about a few hangers-on? But now that our wealth and income have shrunk appallingly, while taxes remain either where they were or higher, it may begin to occur to us that the farmers, for example, which we tax very heavily, are, to put it no more strongly, at least necessary to the welfare of the United States. It may even occur to us that every time we exempt somebody from taxation we are putting an added burden on everybody else. It is time to take a look at the privileged. It is time to examine the army of the tax parasites. It is time to ask a few of these strong men, dressed up as dear old ladies, to carry their own bundles.

By R. P. Vanderpool, financial editor

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST, of Arizona, has proposed a constitutional amendment prohibiting the United States or any State or local government from issuing any more tax-exempt securities.

Governmental procedure in the United States is so cumbersome that it seems unlikely that this proposal will be enacted into law, at least in the next few years. Yet, in our opinion, it is so basically sound that we believe it should be given enthusiastic support.

The manner in which great wealth has been hoarded in tax-exempt securities is one of the evils of this generation, coming into bold relief during the current depression.

DEBTS AND CREDITS

We hear much of the huge debts of our Federal, State, and municipal governments; we hear little of the other side—that of the owners of these securities, who furnish the credit to these governments in an effort to avoid paying taxes on their incomes.

They did not fully understand at the time they granted the credit that part of the taxes would be shifted to their backs. Despite their success in evading direct taxation through purchase of tax-exempt securities, when they did begin to feel the pinch it was this same class that led the hue and cry for governmental retrenchment and lower taxes.

A POOR ARGUMENT

The argument for tax-exempt securities has been that they enabled governments to finance themselves more cheaply. But it has been a false economy. The Government has failed to realize the true cost through reduced income-tax revenues of the money it has borrowed.

This has tended to encourage Government extravagance. At the same time it has enabled certain individuals and corporations—the very ones who should be bearing a heavy tax burden in these critical times—to escape all direct payment and, by crawling into their shells, as so many of them have done, to a large extent indirect payment.

THEY DO PAY

It may be said in passing that they do pay a penalty. This comes through the prevailing economic situation, which has reduced values of practically all material things. Moreover, unless a turn comes in the fairly near future, it is quite likely to cause a collapse in Government credit and a coincident decline in the value of tax-exempt securities.

Something unperceived by those with a few or no resources is that while they may be suffering at the moment because of the general economic conditions, their future prospects are being much improved by what is transpiring.

AUTOMATIC CONFISCATION

We mean by this that an incident of the economic phenomena now taking place is that there is automatic confiscation of wealth through deflation. This wealth, in the form of values, is being taken away from individuals and becomes available for redistribution in the expansion period that will succeed the contraction years through which we have been passing.

This line of reasoning is more easily followed if the contraction and subsequent expansion are carried to extremes. For example, if values for material goods all but disappeared, the inequalities of wealth would be largely leveled and in the subsequent period of recreation of values opportunities would be much greater than in periods of stability.

OPPORTUNITIES

It is in periods of opportunities that those with the greatest initiative and greatest ability are successful.

Of course, it is also true that in such periods the unscrupulous, the manipulators, and the exploiters also operate. It is the task of government to curb these. The efficacy of government can be largely judged by its success in doing so.

The failure of government in this respect during recent years is being made conspicuous by the exposures of the last few years, particularly 1932.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, may I ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. The school districts in the States and the cities and towns, as well as the States themselves, all have the right under the Constitution to issue these tax-exempt bonds; and, of course, the Congress can not prohibit or modify or control that in any way. Does the Senator think they get at present a sufficiently lower interest rate to warrant the tax-exempt feature?

Mr. ASHURST. I think that hereafter, if we continue to issue tax-exempt securities, there might be a lower rate of interest by reason of the tax-exempt feature, but I do not believe that that has been the case heretofore. I am not at all convinced, after a study of some time under the eye of experts, that securities—Federal, State, Government, or county—have until lately been sold as a direct immediate consequence of their tax-exempt feature. I think the tax-exempt feature may have a tendency in the future to make such securities salable, but I do not believe that heretofore the fact that they were tax exempt promoted the activity of the market very much in respect to such bonds. Of course, there may have been isolated instances where tax-exempt features did promote a sale thereof, but if the bonds were good the tax-exempt feature cut but small figure.

Mr. BROOKHART. When the Treasury offers a bond issue and gets a subscription of fifteen or sixteen times the amount of the issue, does not that indicate that the interest rate is very attractive, and could be reduced?

Mr. ASHURST. That has happened lately, indeed.

Quite true during the war the issues of bonds were oversubscribed, and not because of their tax-exempt feature; I admit that in the future—that is, from now on—the tax-exempt feature will be a factor in selling bonds.

EMPLOYMENT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ON SLEEPING CARS, ETC.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I desire to take just a moment to discuss a bill I wish to introduce.

From time to time, in riding on the trains of the country, I have been impressed with the fact that colored men are the most satisfactory kind of porters we have ever had on the railroads. I am impressed now with the fact that some of the railroads, particularly in the country west of Chicago and also on some of the trains here in the East, are supplanting the colored men by the use of Japanese and Filipinos. These Japanese and Filipinos work for such exceedingly low wages that it is impossible for the colored man to live on such a wage; and the low wages of porters have already forced their standard of living below what it should be.

I am told that the railroads have attempted to use 2 Filipinos or 2 Japanese on a Pullman car to handle the work regularly done by 1 colored porter; that they can hire two of them more cheaply than the wages, low as they are, that are now paid to the one colored porter; but that they are unable to get Japanese or Filipinos who can do the work satisfactorily. They are not big enough nor strong enough physically to do that work.

In light of the fact that the colored men not only are highly acceptable as porters to the traveling public but that the colored porters look upon that work as a kind of work which they can properly do, it seems to me that we should by law protect them against the menace of the low-wage employee in the form of the Japanese and the Filipino. All we need to do is to require the railroads to employ American citizens as porters on our trains.

I therefore have prepared a bill which I desire, if I may have unanimous consent, to introduce at this time and have printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 5604) to require the employment of American citizens on observation cars, club cars, and sleeping cars used by railroads in interstate commerce was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all employees of observation cars, club cars, and sleeping cars used in interstate commerce by any railroad company within the United States shall be American citizens. Violation of this act shall be punishable by a fine of not less than $1,000 or imprisonment of officials guilty of such violation for not less than 90 days, or both, for each offense, and each day of such violation shall constitute a separate offense.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13710) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appreciate the desire of Senators to dispose of the appropriation bills pending in Congress before this session ends. There are many measures before us that require consideration before the 4th of March. The appropriation bill which is now under consideration carries large amounts for various governmental activities. One of the important provisions of the bill deals with the Indian wards of the Government and with the policies and activities of the Indian Bureau. Nothwithstanding the importance of this and other appropriation bills I feel that it is my duty to discuss at some length the provisions of the measure before us relating to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

For many years I have been criticizing the policy of the Government in dealing with the Indians, and have attempted to trace historically the dealings of the Government with the Indian tribes that have inhabited this Republic. I have examined into most if not all of the treaties negotiated between the United States and the Indian tribes and the hundreds of statutes which have been enacted by Congress relating to the Indians. I have attempted to ascertain what disposition has been made of the boundless territory which the Indians once possessed and what has become of the hundreds of millions of dollars received by the Indians for the lands which have passed from their ownership and possession, and from royalties, revenues, and receipts derived from such lands. I have also given no little study to the work of the Indian Bureau for many decades, with a view of determining whether as the instrument of the National Government, it has been a faithful trustee, or has dissipated Indian funds, and failed in the discharge of duties imposed by treaties and by laws.

THE GOVERNMENT A FAITHLESS GUARDIAN

Mr. President, I have been compelled to the conclusion, as a result of my researches and investigations, that our Government has been a faithless guardian of its wards and that the agencies which it has set up to deal with the Indians have failed to perform the duties imposed upon them by law. I regret that Congress has not evinced that interest in the Indians and in their protection that treaty obligations required. As I have stated, the Indians are the wards of the Government and are therefore entitled to the highest degree of consideration. There are not only legal and binding obligations resting upon the Government from which it may not honorably escape, but there are also moral obligations which are of commanding force. The duties of a trustee to his cestui que trustent are clearly recognized by law, and the courts, and when their jurisdiction is invoked they are quick to respond to the demands of those whose lives and property are under the control and jurisdiction of trustees. A trustee who squanders the inheritance of his ward or who is indifferent to the latter's welfare, merits the condemnation of all who desire justice, and subjects himself to the corrective power of the courts.

DRASTIC REORGANIZATION NEEDED

Mr. President, as a result of my study of the Indian question and the treatment accorded the Indians and the policy now being followed by the Government in dealing with them, I have reached a definite conclusion that there must be a radical change in the attitude of the Government toward the Indians and a complete reorganization of the Indian Bureau. Many laws relating to the Indians must be repealed; others must be modified; and sound, sane, and rational and humane policies must be adopted for the purpose of protecting and preserving the Indians and promoting their welfare. It is remarkable that the National Government, which has been so responsive to the cries of distress and to humanitarian appeals, should be so deaf and callous to the cries of the Indians and to the moral and legal responsibilities resting upon the National Government as their trustee and guardian.

From the days of the Pilgrim Fathers to the present time, the Indians seem to have been regarded by many as objects of legitimate prey; they have been treated as trespassers and outlaws, and unwelcome and illegal occupants of territory which the white man desired. Treaties have been imposed upon them by chicanery and fraud and often as the result of military force; and many treaties that have been made have been shamelessly violated, and measures ostensibly designed for the protection of the Indians have been converted into weapons of destruction.

Mr. President, the history of the Indians during the past hundred years is a tragic one, and the record of the Government and Government agencies toward the Indians is blotted and blurred and calls for the condemnation of just men everywhere. Many investigations have been made by committees and by disinterested groups of persons who desired to learn the facts concerning the Indians. Their findings and conclusions warrant a verdict that the Indians have been robbed, plundered, and despoiled of the greater part of their inheritance and subjected to cruel and inhuman treatment.

Mr. President, the criticisms which have been made from time to time by persons interested in the Indians and those who desired their just treatment have been disregarded by the Government and the Indian Bureau, and the latter has continued in its old archaic way with a contemptuous disregard of moral and legal obligations. It is quite likely that nothing can be said now that will result in changing the policies of the bureau as at present constituted, or will bring about economies and imperatively needed reforms. The Indian Bureau is a petrified, crystallized machine, indifferent to criticism, hostile to reforms, ambitious for authority, demanding increased appropriations and a rapidly expanding personnel.

As I shall show before concluding my remarks, the expenses of the bureau have been greatly augmented during the past few years, the number of employees have been multiplied, and more than one-half of the stupendous sum taken from the Indians and from the Treasury of the United States annually has been consumed by the employees of the bureau.

THE LONG STRUGGLE FOR REFORM

Mr. President, for a number of years I have been attempting to secure reforms and compel a reorganization of the bureau and to secure the adoption of plans that would protect the Indians and advance them along the pathway of civilization. I have been disappointed in the efforts made by others and myself to accomplish these results, but I can not help but believe that sooner or later the old bureaucratic methods will be thrown into discard; inefficient and callous employees will be separated from the service, and policies put into effect that will save the Indians and protect the residue of their property against the exploitations of the Government and the whites.

It was believed by many persons that under Mr. Hoover's administration important reforms would be introduced into the Indian Bureau, that waste and extravagance would be eliminated, economies introduced, and measures adopted looking to the material welfare of the Indians, and also to their moral, cultural, and spiritual development. But those who expected these results have been sorely disappointed. One looks in vain for improvement in the Indian Service during the past four years. I repeat, the same old policies are pursued, the same ruts are followed, and the same disappointing results obtained. The policy of the Indian Bureau is worse than laissez faire; it diminishes the Indians' resources and leaves them less fortified to meet the struggle for existence or to take a place in the industrial life of the communities in which they live. I shall show later in my remarks, that with the mounting demands of the Indian Bureau for appropriations and its attacks upon the diminishing resources of the Indians, a huge bureaucracy has been created which fails in its duty to the Indians and consumes more than 50 per cent of the enormous annual appropriations in meeting the salary requirements of the army of employees. A year ago I discussed the Indian situation and made a number of suggestions which I believed would be of benefit to the Indians, and introduced a bill, which, if it had been enacted into law, would have made an important contribution to improving the Indian administration.

THE ECONOMY EFFORT BY CONGRESS DEFEATED

I believe that Congress has intended during the past few years to reduce the extravagant expenditures of the Indian Bureau, but the fact is that its expenses have doubled during the preceding seven fiscal years, and this enormous increase has been incurred largely in paying higher salaries and the compensation of an increased number of employees. These expenditures, exclusive of payments to the Indians from their own funds, in the fiscal year 1926 were $13,991,470. But in 1932 the expenditures amounted to more than $27,000,000 in addition to per capitas disbursed by the bureau from tribal funds and from indefinite appropriations.

After a debate lasting several days, and in the face of uncompromising resistance on the part of the Indian Bureau, whose officials demanded even larger appropriations and denied that any reductions or economies were possible, some slight changes were made in a number of items of appropriation carried in the bill. These reductions approximated $1,250,000. Before the bill was presented to the Senate I appeared before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and presented conclusive evidence of the unjustifiable demands made by the Indian Bureau and the unwarranted appropriations appearing in the bill under consideration by the committee. The Secretary of the Interior made, but did not support, some recommendations for economies. The officials of the Indian Bureau, as I have indicated, were violent in their opposition to any suggested reforms or reductions in the bill under consideration. I pointed out to the committee, as well as to the Senate when the bill was reported to this body, that the Indian Bureau through every preceding year had, in addition to the appropriations carried in the general appropriation bills, spent money with a lavish hand from other sources, but which, of course, reduced the tribal funds and assets belonging to the Indians. In other words, not satisfied with the large appropriations specifically provided by Congress, the bureau dipped its hands into tribal funds and into invisible sources of supply, and used the amounts so obtained in bureau activities. At the time referred to, I analyzed in detail the record for the fiscal year 1929, which showed that Congress in the regular appropriation bill for that year appropriated $16,466,000 for the Indian Service, and in addition $1,781,122 had been specifically authorized in deficiency bills, thus making a total specifically appropriated by Congress of $18,247,122. But the bureau had actually spent, in the fiscal year 1929, $21,635,478, or $3,388,356 in excess of the total of specific appropriations. Contained within this expenditure total of 1929 was $1,734,247 in excess of all appropriations whatsoever, including the so-called indefinite and continuing appropriations. This part of the overexpenditure, $1,734,247, had been simply lifted by the Indian Bureau out of tribal trust funds, with no appropriation either specific or indefinite by Congress. In addition, the bureau in 1929 had paid out in per capita payments $10,952,626.

At the expense of repetition, in order that this fact may be driven home, I challenge attention to the fact that after the specific appropriations have been made by Congress, the Indian Bureau has uniformly, for years, created large deficits and has come back to Congress with demands that they be met. Unfortunately, these demands, too often without consideration, have been granted. As a matter of fact, in nearly every instance these deficits ought not to have been created and Congress ought to have refused to meet them. There is a Federal statute prohibiting deficits, and, as I recall, there is a penalty attached to officials who create the same. It would have a salutary effect if this statute were invoked and officials of the Government made to understand that they may not violate this law by engaging in activities beyond those authorized and incurring obligations beyond those for which appropriations are made.

As stated above, I also presented during the discussion a statement of the actual expenditures of the bureau for the fiscal year 1929 as reported by the bureau to the House Appropriations Committee. These hearings for 1931 show expenditures totaling $21,635,478, or $3,888,356 in excess of the Treasury and tribal fund appropriations made in the regular and deficiency appropriation bills.

THE BUREAU'S INVISIBLE APPROPRIATIONS

I presented a tabulation at that time showing how the Indian Bureau obtained in excess of $3,388,356, all of which had been expended largely for salaries and additional employees. A part of the bureau's total overdraft—$1,654,100—had been obtained from the so-called indefinite and continuing appropriations, and I should add in passing that these reservoirs from which funds were taken do not appear either in the regular or in the deficiency bills and are, in effect, invisible appropriations. I condemn such a system which permits funds to be taken and expenditures made of the character in question. Neither Congress nor the public can know or control, under this system, the aggregate amount expended in the maintenance and operations of the Indian Bureau or where such a system prevails in any other Federal organization within which it is found. It is a vicious system and an unsound and dangerous policy and leads to extravagance and bureaucratic autocracy. I also demonstrated that the bureau had spent from the Indian tribal funds $1,734,247 in excess even of the indefinite and continuing or invisible appropriations.

Mr. President, I ask that that tabulation which I presented last year may be printed in the RECORD. It illustrates the singular, adroit, and indefensible methods employed for the purpose of securing funds for the bureau in excess of those provided in the regular or deficiency appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Fiscal year 1929

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Total appropriation in regular bill for 1929: | | |
| From Treasury | $14,024,009 | |
| From tribal funds | 2,442,900 | |
| Total | | $16,466,909 |
| Total deficiency appropriation for 1929: | | |
| From Treasury | 1,476,684 | |
| From tribal funds | 304,438 | |
| Total | | 1,781,122 |
| Total "indefinite appropriations," for purposes other than per capita payments, appropriated under continuing authorizations | | 1,654,100 |
| Grand total of appropriations for other than per capita payments | | 19,901,231 |
| Actual expenditure (other than per capita payments) in 1929, as reported by the Indian Bureau in the House hearings for 1931 | | 21,635,478 |
| Expenditure in excess of total of special and indefinite appropriations | | 1,734,247 |
| Total tribal funds appropriated (special and indefinite) for other than per capita payments | | 4,401,438 |
| Total actual expenditure of tribal funds (other than per capita) | | 5,110,263 |
| Tribal funds expenditure (other than per capita payments) in excess of all appropriations | | 708,825 |
| Per capita payments estimated for 1929, in the Budget for 1929 | | 17,681,000 |
| Per capita payments actually made in 1929, as stated in the Budget for 1931 | | 10,952,626 |
| Per capita payments were less than estimated per capita payments in amount of | | 6,728,374 |

Summary: For purposes other than per capita payments the bureau spent $1,734,247 more than the total of all appropriations.

It spent from tribal funds $708,823 more than all tribal fund appropriations.

It paid in per capitas to the Indians $6,728,374 less than the Budget estimates of such payments.

Tribal revenue fell below estimates during the year. Hence per capitas were sharply reduced. But the amount spent for other than per capita payments was increased.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the consideration of the appropriation bill a year ago I further stated that the Indian Bureau would not be restricted to appropriations made or adopt measures of economy, and that efforts of Congress to effect reductions would be in vain because of the indifference of the bureau to the attitude of Congress.

THE BUREAU NOW CIRCUMVENTING CONGRESS

I stated that the Indian Bureau would circumvent congressional measures either by obtaining increased appropriations through deficiency bills or by drawing upon Indian tribal funds outside of any appropriations authorized in the bill under consideration.

Mr. President, my predictions have been verified. Even before one-half of the fiscal year 1933 has run there will have been large expenditures or commitments outside of those authorized in the 1933 appropriation bills.

I dwell on the facts because they serve to demonstrate afresh the incorrigibility of the Indian Bureau and the futility of the efforts of Congress to curb Indian Service expenditures under the system of accounting, budgeting, and appropriation which has prevailed for many years.

During the time when the regular appropriation bill was under consideration, I am informed, some Indian Bureau officials freely stated that they expected to obtain corrections, as they saw them, of the Senate's "economy madness," through deficiency bills. And in fact they did obtain, in the deficiency bill for 1932, an increase of $719,978. Many of the Indian Service items which were thus appropriated in the deficiency bill were of a character which previously had been considered and rejected by one or the other of the Houses of Congress.

However, the more striking fact in the situation does not relate to the well-known abuse of effecting pretended economies in the regular appropriation bill, to efface them a few weeks later by means of deficiency bills.

The Indian Bureau estimated and requested appropriations for a total expenditure in the fiscal year 1933 of $24,709,619.

I refer to the report of the House subcommittee on the Department of Interior appropriation for the fiscal year 1933, page 24, which demonstrates the correctness of what I have just stated. The bureau received authority in regular and deficiency appropriations for a total expenditure of $24,141,403, of which $2,190,262 were to be taken from Indian tribal trust funds.

Mr. President, when our distinguished Vice President was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, and later when he was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, the appropriations for the Indian Bureau rarely exceeded six or seven million dollars and the number of Indian wards then under the control of the Government was larger than at the present time, but bureaucracy's growing appetite for power is never satiated, and even when helpless wards are under bureaucratic control they must suffer because of the ambitions of bureaucratic organizations for authority and increased salaries and appropriations. As evidence of the disregard of the bureau to the limitations in appropriation bills I invite attention to the fact that though the appropriation made by Congress for the fiscal year 1933 was $24,141,403, yet before November of 1932 had come the bureau had either expended or obligated the stupendous sum of $24,609,160. Congress had authorized as stated a total expenditure from tribal funds of $2,190,262, but the bureau before October 1 of that year had spent or obligated $2,658,019 from tribal funds. I should add that these figures which I am submitting are exclusive of per capita payments to the Indians from their own funds. I repeat, Mr. President, that before three months of the fiscal year 1933 had passed the bureau in actual expenditures or in obligations had overreached the congressional authorization in the amount of $457,757, this amount being taken from the tribal trust funds. Not satisfied with the enormous amount appropriated by Congress, this voracious bureau proceeded to take from the tribal funds within three months after the appropriation bill had passed nearly half a million dollars.

THE BUREAU'S PAY ROLL IN 1933

Mr. President, I have referred to the increase in the number of bureau employees and the burden which this imposed upon the Government and upon tribal funds. In support of this statement I ask to submit a tabulation showing the salaries for the fiscal year 1933, the total number of bureau employees, the total number of Indians, the bureau's pay roll on account of each Indian, and the ratio between bureau employees and Indians.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

Tabulation showing the total of Indian Bureau salaries for the fiscal year 1933, total number of bureau employees, total number of Indians, the bureau's pay roll on account of each Indian, and the ratio between bureau employees and Indians

|---|---|
| Salaries of permanent employees | $10,481,647 |
| Less deductions on account of furloughs | 865,448 |
| Net salaries of permanent employees | 9,616,199 |
| Salaries and wages of irregular employees | 1,249,003 |
| Total net salaries and wages | 10,865,202 |
| Total of permanent employees | 6,353 |
| Total of irregular employees estimated on whole-time basis at $1,000 per year | 1,249 |
| Total average number of employees | 7,602 |
| Total of Indians on reservations and at jurisdictions (report of Indian commissioner for 1932, p. 34) | 194,331 |
| Indian Bureau pay roll on account of each Indian | $56 |
| Ratio of bureau employees to Indians | 1 to 25 |

Mr. KING. This table shows the salaries of permanent employees were $10,481,647. I might add, in passing, that that is double the appropriations for the entire bureau a few years ago, and I submit that the record will show that there are fewer Indians now and their condition is worse than at a time when the entire expenses of the bureau were approximately $5,000,000 per annum.

With reference to the statement just made concerning permanent salaries, I should add that for the fiscal year 1933 there were deductions on account of furloughs as shown by the table, so that the net salaries of permanent employees were $9,616,199. However, the salaries and wages of irregular employees totaled $1,249,003, giving a total of $10,865,202 as net salaries and wages. The number of permanent employees was 6,353. I was advised this morning by one of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs that there is one Federal employee for every 23 Indians and one employee for every 6 children in the schools. The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1932 (p. 34) states that there are only 194,331 Indians on the reservations and under Federal jurisdiction. It appears, Mr. President, that as the appropriations for the Indian Bureau increase the number of Indians decrease. I suppose we should be satisfied, because the decrease of the Indians is marked by a large increase in the number of Federal employees and thus furnishes jobs for white citizens. I emphasize the fact, Mr. President, that nearly 50 per cent of the enormous appropriations made for the Indian Bureau are devoured by this army of Federal employees.

Mr. President, I have here a list of new positions created in the Indian Bureau since June 30, 1929. As I am advised, it is not a complete list, nor does it include the new positions created in the Alaskan Indian service. The list, however, shows 915 new permanent positions, and the total salaries for the new employees amount to $1,745,490 per annum. These new positions were created and these new appointments made, as I am advised, by and under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. These new appointments demonstrate the extravagance of the bureau and the apparent determination upon the part of those controlling it to build up a more powerful bureaucracy. I condemn the action of the Indian Bureau in adding to the salary list to be paid from tribal funds or out of the Treasury of the United States this enormous sum of $1,745,490.

I should add that this list does not include the irregular employees, which are enormous, nor does it show salary increases.

Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from Commissioner Rhoads, of the Indian Bureau, dated January 18, 1933, in reply to an inquiry which I had made, in which he states that the total of salaries paid to permanent employees of the Indian Bureau, outside of Alaska, in the fiscal year 1932, was $9,963,109. The table which I have offered for the record shows that the gross total of such salaries in the present fiscal year, 1933, is $10,481,647, an increase of $920,390 over the fiscal year 1932.

Mr. President, the figures which I have submitted showing the expenses of the bureau and the number of employees and the salaries paid, furnish incontrovertible evidence that the Indian Bureau must be reformed. This demand for reformation is reinforced by an investigation of the condition of the Indians and their lack of progress and development and protection at the hands of the Indian Bureau and the Government. Senators will recall the prolonged discussions when the appropriation bill for 1933 was before this body, in which the unsatisfactory administration of the bureau has developed and its waste and extravagance demonstrated. I think Senators will believe from the apparent concessions made that the bureau would effectuate reforms, liberalize its policies, and effect important reorganizations. The facts which I have given, as well as others which, if time permitted, I should like to present, demonstrate that no economies have resulted and that no important changes in the plans and policies of the bureau have been brought about.

DECEPTIVE BUDGETING BY INDIAN BUREAU

Mr. President, I invite attention to the inaccurate and in effect the misleading reports of the Indian expenditures appearing in annual budgets. I have referred to the fiscal year 1932 and the appropriations carried in the bill for that year. The Director of the Budget, reporting in the Budget for 1934 on the bureau's "actual expenditures" from tribal funds in the year 1932, states the actual expenditures as $3,056,046. (See Budget for 1934, pp. 344–5.) The question arises, What did the bureau actually expend from tribal funds in the fiscal year 1932? It expended, not the amount reported by the Budget Bureau, but $3,748,689, as shown in the tabulation of Indian Bureau expenditures, printed in the House appropriation hearings for 1934, at page 496. The discrepancy therefore is $682,643; and as in every year without exception, the over-expenditures are adverse to the Indian tribal funds.

I am informed that the bureau now explains the discrepancy for the year 1932 by claiming that its own tabulation of expenditures of Indian trust funds is in error through the improper inclusion of some payments for the operation and maintenance of irrigation projects on Indian reservations. The explanation, if accepted, does but reinforce the need for an overhauling of the bureau's system of accounting and of record for the uses of Indian and Government moneys.

Permit me to restate the facts: Congress, I think, made a serious effort to curtail the Indian Bureau's expenditures in the current fiscal year; but this effort was circumvented, first through a deficiency bill, and second through a draft by the bureau against tribal funds in the amount of $457,757 in excess of the appropriated amount. So much the Budget reveals, and the facts apply only to the first quarter of the fiscal year. Already through the deficiency bill and overdrafts against tribal funds the bureau by October 1 last had brought its total expenditures to a level only $200,459 below that total which it had requested of Congress at the beginning of the fiscal year and which Congress had endeavored to reduce by more than $1,000,000. I do not wish to be understood as stating that the bureau's overdraft upon Indian tribal funds for the current fiscal year is no more than $457,757. That is the amount which the Budget reveals. The experience of every preceding year indicates that the facts will greatly exceed the Budget indications. I have pointed out that for the fiscal year 1932 the Budget totals of tribal funds alleged in the Budget to have been spent in that year were less than the actual figure of $719,978. Mr. President, that error is not a unique or sporadic one, but a repetition of errors of like character which it is believed are often made. I shall give additional facts regarding other fiscal years before I have finished.

BUREAU'S LARGE OVERDRAFTS OF PRIOR YEARS

In the three fiscal years 1926, 1927, and 1928 the Indian Bureau furnished Congress with a definite statement as to the amount of Indian tribal funds which it proposed to use for purposes other than per capita payments; the aggregate of the funds thus earmarked for proposed use by the bureau, and so reported to Congress, was $4,359,000. In other words, notwithstanding the liberal largess and indeed unwarranted appropriations by Congress for bureau maintenance, the bureau in these three years notified Congress that it proposed to dip its hands into Indian tribal funds and to take therefrom $4,359,000 for bureau maintenance. It must be obvious to Senators and the country that the course of the bureau if unchecked will within a few years exhaust all tribal funds, the aggregate of which was between six and seven hundred thousand dollars since 1887; and it seems certain that if the course of the bureau is unchecked within a short time, not only will the tribal funds be depleted but the allotted lands will have passed into the hands of the whites; and the Indians, the wards of the Government, wards who possessed lands and property worth billions, will be houseless, homeless, and propertyless. Their vast patrimony will have been squandered and they will have no means of support. This tragic picture does not reflect credit upon the Government in dealing with its helpless wards. But the facts proved to be far more extreme than the bureau's announcements to Congress had been. The reports of the Comptroller General are available for the three fiscal years 1926, 1927, and 1928, and they show that the Indian Bureau spent for its own maintenance $12,803,449 instead of the $4,359,000 which the bureau had reported to Congress that it was going to spend. That is to say, during these three years the bureau misled Congress and expended from Indian tribal funds $8,444,349 in excess of its estimates as made to Congress, or an average of $2,814,783 in each of the three years.

Mr. President, it would be superfluous to dwell at greater length upon these figures and facts which condemn the Indian Bureau, if they do not condemn Congress and the Government itself. It seems to me that these facts furnish a grave indictment against the administration and against our system of dealing with the Indians.

INDIAN BUREAU SALARIES AND INDIAN TRUST FUNDS

Mr. President, before concluding my remarks I shall show that the Indian Bureau has dissipated Indian tribal funds in the amount of hundreds of millions of dollars in the last 45 years; that it has spent on its own maintenance in excess of $110,000,000, that is, in addition to the large appropriations made as gratuities from the Treasury of the United States; and that in the fiscal year 1932 it used for its own maintenance 76 per cent of the total tribal income of all Indians of the United States. I emphasize this fact, that notwithstanding the large appropriations made by Congress for bureau maintenance, the bureau consumed 76 per cent of all the tribal income for that year. In the case of 99 of the 103 tribes possessing tribal funds or incomes, the bureau in 1932 spent for its permanent salaries 87 per cent of the total income of these 99 tribes, and for all of its uses, in the case of these 99 tribes, the bureau drew from the aggregate tribal funds an amount more than twice as great as the aggregate tribal income of that year. The aggregate tribal income was $916,956; the tribal funds spent for the bureau's permanent pay roll totaled $802,521; an additional $384,055 was taken for the bureau's so-called "irregular" pay roll; and the total bureau draft against the residual tribal funds was $1,871,717. The overdraft against the tribal income was $954,761, or 104 per cent. No per capita payments to Indians are included in these totals. The residual funds of these 99 tribes had been reduced to $5,236,944. Some of the tribes, with their funds wholly exhausted, had actually been placed in debt to the Government for Indian Bureau salary expenditures. The process pointed to early and complete ruin for the tribes.

At the present time, however, I am chiefly concerned with again reminding the Senate that it is pursuing a phantom when it seeks economy at the hands of the Indian Bureau, under existing policies and the system of accounting, budgeting appropriation, and financial control.

I sincerely hope that one of Mr. Roosevelt's first administrative acts will be to select as director of the Indian Bureau a person who has some knowledge of the mistakes and follies and abuses of the bureau and who possesses ability and courage to deal with an archaic and unjust and decrepit system for the control of the Indians and their property. Reform is imperatively needed in the Indian Bureau. The whole system under which it operates should be changed, the dead timber thrown out, and a complete reorganization from top to bottom put into effect. Only by this heroic course can the Indians be saved, their property protected and preserved, and the Indians put on the pathway of advancement materially, morally, and educationally.

So long as tribal funds exist, and so long as there are tribal incomes derived from the sale of lands, timber, and natural resources, so long as Congress shall desist from changing the Indian system, the Indian Bureau will continue to spend what it wants to spend, with practically no reference to what Congress directs that it shall or shall not spend. The bureau will continue to ignore the limitations which Congress writes into the yearly appropriation acts. It will continue to use Indian capital as a means of financing its own activities, drawing upon authorizations, real or fictitious, which do not appear in the appropriation bills, and achieving totals of expenditure largely in excess of the authorized totals.

Mr. President, as a result of the unsuccessful effort of last year to restore the statutory requirement of an annual accounting for tribal funds, the Indian Bureau this year has placed in the appropriation hearings an imperfect report on the tribal funds as of the fiscal year 1932. I have practically completed an analysis of this report in relation to the Budget, and at some date during the present session of Congress I shall offer these data for the RECORD.

THE NEEDED ACCOUNTING AND BUDGETING REFORMS

Mr. President, on April 7 last I introduced a bill whose fundamental object was to bring Indian Service expenditures genuinely within the control of Congress. All future expenditures in Indian Service were required to be specifically appropriated.

Under the system of accounting and bookkeeping employed by the bureau it is impossible to determine from what particular or specific fund appropriations are taken. One of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate stated to me that in attempting to discover from what fund or funds a certain appropriation relating to an agency emanated or was drawn, it was learned that there were 60 or 70 funds or parts of funds or sources of supply from which had been drawn various amounts, the aggregate of which was a large amount. It is obvious that under such an administrative or accounting system, extravagance, waste, and inefficiency inevitably result.

The bill which I introduced likewise directed that a functionalized accounting system be installed, to show the past and intended uses of Indian Service money at Washington and in the several reservations or jurisdictions, by functions. The General Accounting Office was directed by the bill to proceed with the installation of the accounting system.

The bill likewise provided for an annual accounting by the Indian Bureau, to Congress, of the uses made of Indian tribal funds. This accounting had been mandatory until the calendar year 1928, in which year the statute directing the making of an annual accounting had been repealed through the insertion, in an omnibus bill, of language excusing the Indian Office from making its annual report.

The bill was intended as a first step and, in fact, a condition precedent, to the enforcement by Congress of economy upon the Indian Bureau. The bill was resisted by Commissioner Rhoads and Secretary Wilbur, first through a delay in the making of the requisite Executive report on bills. Finally, they made their report and they condemned each and every clause of the bill which I had introduced (S. 4338). They made no proposal of alternative reforms in the system of accounting, budgeting, or appropriations.

THE TARDY CONVERSION OF THE BUREAU

Subsequently, this important matter was taken under advisement by the Senate Indian Investigation Committee and that committee, on the 10th of last month, made a report to the Senate, stating with clearness and fullness the imperative nature of the reform which I attempted to initiate last year. The investigation committee recommended in its report a substitute text for the Indian appropriation bill as a whole, and incorporated, in the last seven paragraphs of the proposed substitute text, the substance of the bill which I had introduced. I am now advised that at this very late date, the Interior Department and Indian Bureau officials are prepared to accept the changes.

This reported willingness of the bureau to accept this needed reform is a hopeful sign, but the letter and the spirit of the plan should be put into operation at once in order to secure for the next fiscal year the benefits that will flow therefrom. I regret, however, that the bill before us indicates that the Appropriations Committee has not accepted the measure offered by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THE SENATE COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. President, because of the importance of this matter and the comprehensive manner in which the investigation committee has dealt with it, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD certain paragraphs from the report of the Senate Investigation Committee made by the committee to the Senate on January 10 last, dealing with the need for a changed system of accounting, budgeting, and appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter is as follows:

The body of this report consists of a proposed substitute bill, which could be enacted as a substitute for the subject matter of the pending appropriation bill for the Interior Department (H. R. 13710, submitted to the House of Representatives December 15, 1932), beginning at page 9, line 24, to and including page 55, line 18. In elucidation of this proposed substitute bill, the subcommittee briefly explains as follows:

The substitute measure, to the beginning of the seventh from its last paragraph, consists of the appropriations bill for the Indian Service, as reported to the House of Representatives by its Appropriation Committee December 15, 1932, but with the numerous general-fund appropriations aggregated into one lump-sum appropriation from the Treasury and appropriation of the specifically appropriated tribal funds, including Indian moneys, proceeds of labor. The various indefinite appropriations, not included in the annual appropriation bill, are left unchanged. All of the substantive provisions of the House bill are preserved through a series of limitations upon the use of the lump sums.

The concluding seven paragraphs of the proposed substitute draft contain new subject matter, here summarized, and more fully discussed in the course of the present report:

(1) The Secretary of the Interior is granted a 10 per cent leeway, with respect to all of the limitations contained in the proposed bill. In cases of extraordinary emergency, he may exceed this 10 per cent leeway.

(2) All expenditures of the Indian Service, including those authorized by indefinite appropriations (which total $3,304,122 in the curernt estimates) are brought within the new accounting and reporting requirements of the substitute draft.

(3) All expenditures of the Indian Service are directed to be segregated by functions, within the District of Columbia and within each several jurisdiction or place of the Indian Service; and under such changed functional segregation, it is directed that tribal funds be reported separately from other appropriations.

(4) There is established a requirement of annually reporting the amount, income, and uses of the tribal funds of the several tribes.

(5) There is established an obligation on the Indian Service to render accounts, upon request of the individual Indian or the tribe, of trust moneys, belonging to such individual or tribe, as are held under the trusteeship of the bureau.

(6) The General Accounting Office is directed to transmit to Congress an annual report of the audited expenditures of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The subcommittee has at various times recommended reorganization of the Indian Service and economies in the various branches of the service. The cost of the Indian Service (exclusive of per capita payments to Indians but including approximately a million dollars transferred to the Indian Service on account of Alaska) increased from $13,991,470 for the fiscal year 1926 to $27,055,696 in the fiscal year 1932, or a more than 100 per cent increase in 6 years. Undoubtedly much of this increase was justified by increases of education, medical, and social services in these years, but the Government is now facing the necessity of curtailment in general. During this same period, due to the rapid shrinkage of Indian tribal income, the expenditure of Indian trust money for the maintenance of the Indian Bureau consumed a rapidly increasing proportion of the whole tribal income, until the percentage of the total tribal income used by the Indian Bureau in the year 1932 reached a total of 93.3 per cent.

Beginning with the appropriation act for the current fiscal year, Congress somewhat reduced the appropriations for Indian Service, although against the energetic opposition of the Indian Bureau, but the total of appropriations in the pending bill for 1934, plus indefinite appropriations, is $22,465,704, or $8,474,234 in excess of the total of actual expenditure in 1926. This 60.6 per cent increase does not include future deficiency appropriations.

Under the existing system of accounting and of Budget estimates Congress is largely helpless in the matter of enforcing intelligent, discriminating economies. A description of the method by which appropriation bills are drafted will serve to make the situation evident.

The appropriation bills for the Indian Service are derived from, and rest upon, the Budget estimates submitted by the Director of the Budget. These estimates are finally determined by the Budget Bureau, usually after much conversation, and embody precedents established by a very large number of appropriations made in prior years.

The estimates are supplemented before the Appropriations Committees of Congress by verbal testimony of the Interior Department and Indian Bureau officials.

The appropriation bill of each year, as introduced and enacted, has carried into effect the Budget estimates with their petrifaction of anterior appropriations. The pending appropriation bill, as passed by the House, contains 175 separate appropriations, which in turn are broken into subappropriations and limitations to the number of more than 400. The pending first deficiency bill (H. R. 13975) reported to the House of Representatives December 30, and drawn on the same plan as the regular Interior appropriation bill, carries special appropriations of amounts as low as $2.71 for purchase and transportation of Indian supplies, $4.26 (reimbursable) for irrigation, $7.37 for industry among Indians, and other like appropriations.

As stated, this large number of appropriations, subappropriations, and limitations represents the accretion of precedents established by appropriation acts through many years gone by—precedents whose justification is nothing except the fact that they were once enacted.

Inasmuch as the Budget estimates are not functionalized and are not presented by jurisdictions, tribes, or places of Indian Service, it is impossible for Congress to obtain from these estimates a true picture of the facts of past expenditures or the intended uses of the sought-for appropriations. When the numerous appropriations in the bill are studied, either in sequence or in their totality, it is found that they do not give an intelligible picture of the work to be performed or of the distribution of funds to functions or places; there is much overlapping; appropriations for identical types of use and even identical functions are scattered amid different parts of the bill; and, finally, when all of the 175 appropriations are totaled they are found to be substantially less than the amount of money which the Indian Bureau actually intends to spend and does spend. With respect to this last item, and as an example merely, the Indian Bureau spent in the fiscal year 1929, over and above all regular and deficiency appropriations, including indefinite and continuing appropriations, $1,734,247 of trust funds, and in addition, from indefinite appropriations not contained in the appropriation bill, it expended $1,654,100, a total in excess of the regular and deficiency appropriation acts of $3,388,347, this excess being taken from tribal funds. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 12, 1932, p. 10416.)

To the above details must be added the practice, of long standing, of reappropriating in the annual supply bills unexpended balances.

The total effect is to cause the appropriation bill to be almost hopelessly confusing. Even if the Budget estimates represented a genuine effort to forecast the expenditures in their detail, the above unsatisfactory situation would exist unaltered, because, as stated above, the Budget estimates rest upon a system of accounting which is neither functional nor geographical, whereas it should be both.

Until a changed and simplified accounting, Budget estimate system, and appropriation bill can be achieved it is the subcommittee's conviction that neither Congress nor the President can effectively deal with the needed economies in Indian Service expenditures. Reductions of appropriations, if horizontally applied to the 175 separate appropriations, or applied to individual appropriations which are not designated either for functional or geographical uses, can indeed reduce the Government's cost, but reductions thus achieved would cause material harm to the needed Indian services.

It is to meet the above situation as a whole that the subcommittee has proposed the substitute draft herein, which in its essence is an extremely simple device.

As stated, the subcommittee herein proposes no substantive change of the appropriation bill as reported to the House, other than the substitution of a lump sum conditioned by limitations which reproduce every substantive detail of the bill as reported to the House. Concerning increases, decreases, or changes of the total sum or of the limitations, the subcommittee at this time makes no recommendation whatever. It is, however, pointed out that the mere substitution of a lump-sum appropriation for the 175 special appropriations would result in a great reduction of bookkeeping detail; inasmuch as by the present system numerous special funds have to be set up in the agencies, at the Indian Office, and in the office of the Comptroller General, and every expenditure which is made must be entered against the appropriate one of these numerous and, in some instances, omnibus special appropriations.

But as specified above, the substitute draft, in its seven final clauses, in part establishes and in part lays the foundation for drastic changes in the direction of flexibility, simplification, and effective congressional control, which changes would become fully effective in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1935.

The strategical change proposed in the suggested substitute draft herein would be the requirement that all expenditures of the Indian Service should be segregated functionally within jurisdictions and in the District of Columbia; reports of which functionalized expenditures would be made to Congress by the Indian Bureau and the Comptroller General as directed in the substitute draft. Neither of these offices at present makes such a report or is in a position to make it.

With such reports before it, Congress would be enabled to judge the Budget estimates in the light of the actual experience of the preceding year; and the Budget estimates could be presented in a form functionalized, localized, and supported by the detailed record of the preceding year and years.

In the light of such information, it would become possible to formulate the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1935 with intelligible limitations directing the uses of funds for actual functions and in jurisdictions and places specified in the bill.

The language of the substitute draft likewise would insure that the uses of tribal funds, by functions and places, would be explicitly stated by the Indian Bureau, and thus could be protected in the appropriation bill.

Through the above accounting and reporting, the several million dollars of invisible appropriations expended by the bureau each year would be brought effectively within congressional control.

The subcommittee recommends immediate adoption of its suggested substitute draft, including the substantive changes found in the last seven paragraphs thereof.

The subcommittee points out that the 10 per cent leeway clause, suggested herein, is precedented by numerous items which from year to year have appeared in the Indian Service appropriations and in the appropriation bills of other departments.

The new administration, which takes office March 4, will live for one year under the appropriation act to be enacted prior to March 4.

If reorganizations of the Indian Bureau are to be made effective, or substantial economies are to be achieved or even intelligently considered by the incoming administration, it is necessary that it be empowered to the extent of the proposed 10 per cent leeway and that it be supplied with the essential information attainable only through the changed system of accounting as herein proposed.

ACCOUNTING FOR INDIVIDUAL FUNDS

The subcommittee, at hearings at a large number of reservations, has become accustomed to endless queries and complaints by individual Indians and by tribes of Indians, having to do with their stated inability to obtain from the Indian Bureau an accounting for their money, individual and tribal, which is held and administered under trust.

The amount of such funds is large, frequently being in excess of $100,000,000 at a given time, and payments in excess of $20,000,000 a year frequently are made from such funds to the Indian or in one way or another in his behalf.

The subcommittee considers that it is of elementary necessity for the Indians, whose funds are in the hands of the Indian Bureau as trustee, to be able to obtain an accounting or satisfactory reporting when they ask for it. Therefore, the subcommittee has proposed in its suggested substitute draft the following language: "On demand therefor, itemized reports or statements of the Indian moneys held in trust shall be rendered to the individual Indian or the tribe involved."

To accomplish the aforementioned desirable objectives, it is earnestly recommended that the proposed substitute draft of that portion of the Interior Department bill for 1934, dealing with Indian Service appropriations, beginning at page 9, line 24, to and including page 55, line 18 (H. R. 13170, December 15, 1932), be accepted by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and substituted for the above-mentioned portion of the Interior Department appropriation bill.

REFORMS MUST GO DEEPER THAN FINANCE

Mr. KING. But too much may not be expected from the Indian Bureau even though the reforms called for in the bill which I offered and in the report of the committee were carried into effect. There must be a fundamental change in the structure, policies, and plans of the bureau as well as a different approach by the bureau to the entire Indian question. While it is important to bring the appropriations within the control of Congress and to establish a just, intelligible, and honest system of accounting, further important steps must be taken and the very fabric of the Indian Bureau changed.

The facts which I shall now bring to the attention of the Senate are of importance to the Indians, even though an annual saving of $8,000,000—which is the amount that could easily be saved under a proper administration and with beneficial results to the Indians—were disregarded. If the Appropriations Committees and Congress would accept the recommendations of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], as well as other recommendations which have been made, the bill before us now would contain $8,000,000 less for expenditure by the Indian Bureau, without any disadvantage to the Indians and in many respects with resultant benefits to the Indians.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. I yield for a question.

Mr. BROOKHART. Where does that $8,000,000 go under the bill, if it does not go to the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. KING. First, may I state that more than $10,000,000 of the appropriation for the bureau goes to pay the salaries of the employees of the Indian Bureau. As I stated a few moments ago, there is at least 1 bureau official for every 25 Indians, and 1 bureau official for every 6 children attending a boarding school.

Mr. BROOKHART. Most of that expense does not relate to the Indians, does it?

Mr. KING. The $10,000,000 for salaries is paid to Federal employees in the Indian Bureau and they are dealing with the Indians, directly or indirectly. A considerable part of it is expended by the employees here in Washington. The bill before us carries approximately $21,170,000 for the Indian Bureau for the next fiscal year, more than half of which will go to pay the salaries of the employees of the bureau; and, as I have pointed out, the bureau will spend a much larger total.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator says that $21,000,000 is expended for the Indian Bureau.

Mr. KING. Yes; and I assert that it will expend a larger sum during the next fiscal year. When the last appropriation bill was before the Senate I showed that 52.4 per cent of the entire appropriation was required to pay the salaries and travel expenses of persons employed by the bureau; 50.9 per cent went for salaries alone. I also showed that during the first year of Mr. Rhoad's administration the salaries of Federal employees were increased 17 per cent, and before the end of the next year, 25 per cent, and that a large number of employees were added to the bureau pay roll.

BOARDING SCHOOLS AGAINST DAY SCHOOLS

Mr. BROOKHART. What part of that goes for boarding schools?

Mr. KING. A considerable portion of the entire appropriation is for boarding schools, but as I demonstrated when the last appropriation bill was under consideration, the boarding schools are failing in their purpose; they are costly and do not produce the beneficial results that follow day schools. I showed that Doctor Ryan, who recently came to the Indian Bureau, as well as others whose judgment is of value, recommended a change from boarding schools to day schools. First, because of the superior advantages and the greater benefits to the Indian children, and second, because of the immense economies that would result.

Mr. BROOKHART. Would the day schools be just as good?

Mr. KING. They are infinitely better than the boarding schools. I think that has been demonstrated and is the considered judgment of those whose opinions upon this matter are worthy of consideration. If the Senator is interested in this matter, and I know he is——

Mr. BROOKHART. I am interested. I inquired into the Indian affairs several years ago.

Mr. KING. I am glad to know that, and I commend to the Senator the report made a number of years ago by what is known as the Merrian board or commission. This commission was appointed, as I recall, at the request of the Interior Department to study the Indian question. Doctor Ryan was a member of the commission, and wrote that part of the report dealing with Indian schools. I read the report very carefully several years ago, and I recall that a change was recommended in the school system, a change from the boarding schools to the day schools. A year ago; when the Indian appropriation bill was before the Senate, I secured an amendment by which $500,000 was taken from the boarding-school item and added to the amount to be expended for the operation and maintenance of day schools. I am told that the results have been highly beneficial. The costs per capita of the school children have been reduced one-half, thus permitting a larger number of Indian children to be placed in schools, and the progress of the children in the day schools has been very much greater than those in the boarding schools.

Mr. BROOKHART. There are some day schools now, are there not?

DEMORALIZATION BY THE BOARDING SCHOOLS

Mr. KING. Yes; there are a considerable number, costing more than $700,000; and, as I have indicated, the maintenance of day schools has a far better effect upon the children. It permits them to have contacts with their families and tends to develop a higher morale. Under the boarding-school system the children are dragged from their homes and sent from hundreds to thousands of miles away. In most instances they are not permitted to visit their homes or see their parents for years. When released from the boarding schools, there are few if any opportunities for them in the vicinities of the schools, and they return to the homes from which they were, in many instances, forcibly removed.

During the intervening years changes have taken place, and in many instances upon their return they find themselves more or less estranged and isolated. This produces a spirit of discouragement and even demoralization. Experience has demonstrated that the boarding schools have not produced satisfactory results either educationally, culturally, or morally. I emphasize these points, but it is also important to remember that the boarding-school system is extravagant and costly and, as I have stated, does not bring corresponding advantages. I stated before the Senator came into the Chamber that in the boarding schools there is one Federal employee for every six children. Millions have been spent in unnecessary buildings; costly experiments have been carried on; impractical and visionary persons have been employed, as well as persons lacking in understanding of the Indians or sympathy with the young children torn from their homes. The aggregate result of which has been that the boarding-school system has been found to be defective and wanting in those essential things so necessary for the building of Indian character and for preparing the children for useful service in life.

I call the Senator's attention to the contrast between the Indian Service of the United States and that of Canada. I discussed this matter in some detail a year ago and brought the attention of the Senate to reports which I had received showing the superior system the Canadians have employed in caring for their Indian wards. Under that system the Indians made great progress industrially and educationally, and Canada has found that day schools obtain beneficial results.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, on that subject has not the Indian Bureau authority under the present law to change the policy?

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly the Indian Bureau could recommend to Congress abandonment of the boarding-school system and the establishment of day schools among the Indians, I have no doubt that Congress would quickly respond to a recommendation of this character. The report of Doctor Ryan to which I have referred is a recommendation of day schools as against boarding schools, but the Indian Bureau has resolutely opposed the abolition of the boarding schools. I should say, however, that it has indicated that there should be a gradual increase in the number of day schools, which would mean a diminution in the number of boarding schools. However, when I attempted a year ago to have incorporated in the appropriation bill appropriations for more day schools and fewer boarding schools, fierce opposition was encountered at the hands of the bureau. However, with the support of Doctor Ryan progress was made, and $500,000, as I have stated, which was to be devoted to boarding schools, was transferred to the day-school category.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does the Senator expect to offer an amendment to this bill to increase the number of day schools?

Mr. KING. I have an amendment to propose reducing the appropriation for boarding schools $1,000,000 and applying $500,000 of the same to the establishment of day schools. Five hundred thousand dollars used for day schools will care for more children with better results than $1,000,000 expended in boarding schools. However, my proposal will be opposed by the committee and of course meets with opposition at the hands of the Indian Bureau.

THE CONTRAST WITH CANADA

With reference to the Canadian Indian policy: I pointed out in my address a year ago that the Indian population of Canada is steadily increasing; that the Indian land holdings are kept intact and are increasing; that the Indian tribal funds are increasing; that Canada distinguishes between capital and income, and as I have said, as a trustee insists upon investing capital for capital-production purposes. I also showed that the Canadian Indians have access to whatever there be of health, educational, agricultural, and economic service made available by the Dominion or its Provinces to any citizen.

I contrasted the Canadian situation with that in the United States; and I stated that Indian land holdings in this country since 1887 had shrunk from 133,000,000 acres to only 47,000,000 acres at the present time, almost entirely through the actions of the guardian Government regardless of Indian consent. I also pointed out that here, in contrast to Canada, Indian tribal funds have melted away to the amount of a loss of more than $500,000,000 since 1887.

It is pertinent to remark that if we had adopted the course of Canada this $500,000,000 would have been regarded as capital, because it was such, instead of being treated as income and dissipated. A capital investment of $500,000,000 would have found the American Indian far advanced along the path of economic independence. In my address I also stated that Canada does not employ Indian trust funds for the maintenance of its Indian Service, whereas our Indian Bureau since 1900 has expended more than $110,000,000 of Indian tribal trust money for its own salaries and conveniences, and I also pointed out that the Canadian Indian administration on a per capita basis was less than 38 per cent as expensive as our Indian administration on a per capita basis. The record shows that our Indian Bureau spends two and six-tenths times as much on a per capita basis as the Canadian Indian Bureau.

THE CONTRACT WITH MEXICO

I also referred to the Indian policy and the Indian administration methods of Mexico. There, as I indicated, the government had achieved an efficiency with economy, even more striking than that in the case of Canada. The per capita cost of schooling Indian children under our Indian bureau methods in the bureau's boarding schools was $429 per child as estimated in the budget for 1933. In Mexico the per capita schooling cost does not exceed $17 per child per year. The landholdings of the Indians in Mexico are being enlarged, and so effective are the services rendered on Indian reservations or communes, and so interested and concerned are the Indians in the government and in their relations thereto, that they are willing to pay taxes not only at a rate equal to the taxes paid by the owners of large plantation estates but indeed at a higher rate. I might add that the administrative unit through which the Mexican Government renders its Indian services is the Indian tribal group itself, organized into a cooperative landholding company called an ejida. The ejida is comparable to the Pueblo

Indian tribal organization and landholding system still going forward happily and successfully in New Mexico. But Mexico has reinforced the ejidas, which are, in their essence, holding companies, cooperative societies, credit unions, and marketing organizations of the Indians, with technical assistance in the form of rural credit, agricultural organization and guidance, assistance in the development of health programs, normal schools where the young men and women of the tribes are trained to become leaders of their own villages, communes, and neighborhoods, and generally with a very high grade of modern rural-life service. So effective as a stimulus to self-help has the Mexican system proved to be that for much of the time since the ejidas were established, about half of the 6,000 Indian schools have been financed by the ejidas themselves, even the salaries of the teachers being paid by the Indian beneficiaries of these schools. I am informed that the per capita cost of Indian schooling in Mexico is a little less than $18 a year, compared to the per capita cost under our Indian Bureau of more than $300 a year.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator explain briefly the difference between the day school and the boarding school? I may not catch the full idea.

Mr. KING. In the case of boarding schools, I presume the Senator has visited some of them.

Mr. BROOKHART. I have visited some of the day schools, but not any of the boarding schools.

Mr. KING. I attempted to explain the difference, but perhaps did not make the matter clear. The bureau has established a number of boarding schools—more than 70—some of which are remote from the homes of Indians. The Indian children are taken from their parents, often by force, and sent to remote points where buildings have been erected by the Government to house the children and in which the boarding schools are conducted. In many places extensive buildings have been erected at a considerable cost. Many of these schools, I believe, ignore the backwardness of the Indian children, the difficulties under which they are trained, the character of education and training which they should receive. A very costly system has been adopted which calls for a large expense—costly buildings and costly administrative methods. A large administrative personnel is employed, and apparently an effort is made to absolutely remove the children from all contacts with their parents and tribes, but at the same time there is a failure to fit the children for places in the industrial or economic life of the country. The children, as I have stated, are detached from their homes and their parents, and it is obvious that this situation, when surrounded as they are by strangers and by white people, will have important results, not always for good, in the character and behavior of the children. The children are more or less captives and lack that freedom so necessary for proper development of children. My information is that animosities and resentments are developed and that many of the children when they are released from these boarding schools exhibit a feeling of anger, if not hostility, toward the policy and the Government and persons connected therewith.

THE EXAMPLE OF THE LEUPP BOARDING SCHOOL

The bureau has not only constructed buildings too costly, but it has not always acted with wisdom in selecting the points for the establishment of the schools. For instance, the bureau spent more than a million dollars in buildings at what is called the Leupp Agency. The buildings were constructed at a low point, close to the banks of the Little Colorado River. Everyone familiar with the situation knew that floods frequently came and that by erosion the river banks were washed away. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] stated in the Senate's Indian Committee meeting held at this place that he had objected to the establishment of the school at the place which I have mentioned. The floods did come and those at the agency were compelled to flee. The children were thereupon taken to distant points and placed in other boarding schools. In these boarding schools expensive methods were adopted, nurses were employed, and doctors and a large retinue of employees, the cost per child per annum being around $400. Now the Indian Bureau is seeking to continue this Leupp boarding school and is asking for more money for a renewed effort at flood protection.

I think the report of Doctor Ryan condemns a policy which drags the children from their homes, takes them from their parents, and sends them to distant points hundreds, and in some instances thousands, of miles away. The effect of such a system is most unsatisfactory upon the life and character of the children. Experience has shown that day schools established at or near the homes of the children, where they can come in contact with their parents and friends and those of their tribe, produce superior results. The boarding schools have been the result of a misconception of the needs of the Indians and the character of training and education which they should receive, but they have furnished jobs for thousands of employees, and the millions of dollars annually expended in building and maintaining them are of material advantage to the towns and cities near by, inhabited by white people. Too often the influence of white communities has determined the location of schools, and the inhabitants of these sections are eager to have large appropriations made for the Indian schools and their maintenance.

In the discussion a year ago I called attention to the fact that chambers of commerce and business men and bankers in some sections demanded larger appropriations for Indian agencies, and objected to economies which were being recommended for the protection of the Indians. I regret to state, but it is a fact, that communities inhabited by white people have greatly profited from the extravagance of the Indian Bureau and have been active propagandists in favor of liberal and still more liberal appropriations to be expended upon Indian reservations and upon Indian schools.

Mr. BROOKHART. What about the course of study in the boarding schools? Do they have vocational studies and studies of that kind over the day schools?

Mr. KING. My information is that the instructions given at the day schools produce better results than those imparted at the boarding schools. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], chairman of the Senate's Indian Investigating Committee, has visited most if not all the boarding schools as well as most if not all of the day schools. He and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], all recommend that a change be made, not precipitately, from the boarding school to the day schools. I believe it is their considered judgment that from every point of view the change will be beneficial. Certainly the day schools have yielded better results, and it is conceded that the cost of the boarding schools is more than double the cost of day schools.

Mr. President, in my address a year ago I devoted some time to a discussion of the unjust and destructive system enforced by the Indian Bureau in connection with land allotment. Under this system the bureau has caused the destruction of the Indian landholdings, and if persisted in, the system will, with mathematical precision, continue to disinherit all of the allotted Indians until they are wholly disinherited.

The allotment system is an elaborate paternalistic, bureaucratic control; it involves each allotted Indian, his land, his funds, his operations of lease, sale, or transfer, and even the making of his will. It provides jobs for several thousand Indian Bureau employees, and imposes costs upon the Government of not less than $3,000,000 per year of administrative expense, with the sole result of stripping from the Indian his land while destroying his personal morale and his community life.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator recur for a moment to the school matter? What would be the loss, if any, if we changed from the boarding school to the day school?

Mr. KING. There would be no loss; there would be a gain, a saving, of approximately $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. BROOKHART. The same equipment could not be used, could it?

Mr. KING. No; many of the buildings, of course, would revert to the States or be abandoned, the same as this million-dollar equipment down in the Leupp region on the Little Colorado River will have to be abandoned because of the erosion of the soil as the water advances down the canyon.

INDIAN DAY SCHOOLS IN OKLAHOMA

In further explanation to the Senator from Iowa, I may cite an example of Indian day-school work under the Indian Bureau in Oklahoma. On October 12 last, the day school and teachers' cottage at Kallihoma, Okla., were completed. The Indians themselves constructed these two buildings and the total cost to the Government was only $929. A group of Indian men gave their labor for two months to the construction, and only one white carpenter was employed for part of the time. The teachers in charge are Indians, one a full-blood Choctaw and the other a Chickasaw. The school is operated as a community center, with all sorts of adult-education and neighborhood-improvement work going on as part of the school activity.

Among the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma, there are now nine rural day schools, all taught by Indian teachers. Numerous reports concerning these schools are in the Indian Bureau's files, and they show that the schools are all-round community institutions which not only provide the regular day-school training for the children, but which carry out agricultural and gardening campaigns, fruit-canning campaigns, and club activities dealing with various rural-life problems. Among the activities are community sings, and the supervisor of Indian education for Oklahoma testifies that the Cherokees, who are the Indians attending these schools, have remarkable musical talent, notably greater than that of the white people. These schools likewise are health centers.

In all of these special schools the teachers are Indians. The schools are operated by the Indian Bureau with the active help of the county school superintendent of Pontotoc County, Okla.

INDIAN DAY SCHOOLS IN ALASKA

The economy and practicability of day schools for Indians are demonstrated when we turn to the Indian service of Alaska. If there is any region where the boarding school would be a necessity, that region is Alaska. The Indians are widely scattered. Communications are difficult. The winters are long, excessively cold, and dark.

But the development of Indian education in Alaska is a recent event, and as a consequence there are only 390 Alaskan Indian children in boarding schools, while there are 4,089 Alaskan Indian children in day schools. There are 4 small boarding schools and 101 day schools. The cost of the boarding schools in Alaska is $337 for each child, while the cost of the day schools in Alaska is $89 for each child.

If the situation in Alaska were transposed to the Indian Service in the United States, and the children now being cared for in Government and mission schools and by the payment of tuition to the public schools were redistributed, so that the proportion of the children in Government boarding schools to those in day schools became identical with that now prevailing in Alaska, the result would be as follows:

There would remain in Government boarding schools 2,561 children. There would be transferred from Government boarding schools to day schools 17,862 children. The net saving, in the fiscal year ahead, would be $4,626,228.

But in fact, the day school in the United States is far more practicable than in the Alaskan Indian service, so that actually a larger number of children could be transferred from the boarding schools and a greater saving could be accomplished. The saving ought to go above $5,000,000 a year.

THE EXTRAVAGANCE OF OVERCENTRALIZATION

In my address of April 11 of last year I showed the enormous centralization of the Indian Bureau and its increasing drafts, to meet the salaries of bureau employees, upon the Federal Treasury and the tribal funds. I have received a letter under date of January 18 from Commissioner Rhoads stating that the Washington office pay roll of the Indian Bureau for 1933 is $459,433. The aggregate pay roll, when the agencies are included, is, for the current fiscal year, $10,865,550, exclusive of Alaska. There are only 195,000 Indians under the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau, and the salaries of the bureau are 50 per cent of the entire appropriation and amount to approximately $55 or $56 for every Indian under the control of the Government. Contrast this figure with that of Canada. There the Indian Bureau has jurisdiction over 108,000 Indians. Its total pay roll for the fiscal year 1931 was $179,317. This amount covered all central-office salaries and all agency salaries, exclusive of schools and medical service. The Canadian policy is a condemnation of the inefficient and extravagant Indian policy of our Government. Our Indian Bureau is paternalistic and bureaucratic and pretends to do through paid employees all and everything which human beings normally do for themselves. Coupled with this paternalism is the Indian Bureau's policy of monopolizing the Indian Service and of duplicating, through pigmy services of its own, the work of the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Reclamation, the work of the State agricultural, educational, health, and welfare departments, and even the work of the courts.

BUYING INJURY FOR THE INDIANS

Under this inferior and devitalizing policy the Indians are supplied a greatly inferior service, and millions of dollars per annum of the taxpayers' money and of the Indian tribal funds are expended on needless duplication of these services. These mounting Indian Bureau costs have produced no benefits for the Indians but have resulted in definite and fatal injuries. The costly boarding-school system represents injury, the costly allotment system represents injury, and the expensive centralizing of the bureau with its duplications on a little scale and in a low-grade fashion contributes to the injurious results. The system is indefensible and is the worst in the whole field of government. I stress these matters for the purpose of compelling, if I may, attention to the imperative need of a radical reorganization of the Indian Bureau. Such a reorganization must result in effective economy, and unless it be accomplished the cause of the Indians becomes more hopeless each year.

THE PETITION OF 600 FRIENDS OF THE INDIANS

Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to a remarkable document which was submitted, as I am advised, under date of January 28 to President-elect Roosevelt. It was signed by more than 600 of the country's leading educators, physicians, churchmen, social workers, and Indian welfare workers. Among the signers appear such names as those of President Robert M. Hutchins, of Chicago University; Mr. George Foster Peabody; Dr. Haven Emerson, of Columbia University; and Miss Edith Abbott, of Hull House, Chicago. The document states that—

> * * * So great is the Indian distress in many tribes and so rapid is the shrinkage of Indian property held in trust by the Government, that we do not believe we are exaggerating when we suggest that your administration represents almost a last chance for the Indians.

Mr. President, I present a copy of this communication containing the names of some of those who signed it, and ask permission to have the same inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President elect of the United States.

DEAR MR. ROOSEVELT: The undersigned, educators, social workers, and citizens, earnestly petition you to give especial consideration to the situation of the Government's Indian wards.

In justification of our request, we point out that the Indians are dependent on the United States Government and are at its mercy in ways and to an extent true of no other elements in our population. They are wards of the Government; their property is held and administered under the Government's trust; their personal lives are almost completely subject to control by the Government as their guardian.

They depend on the Federal Government for nearly all of the services—economic, educational, social, and human—which other populations receive through many Federal departments, through the State and county governments, through the private welfare agencies, and through their independent actions of organized self-help. These services, as supplied to Indians, have been improved in current years, but the needs and the difficulties of the Indians remain extreme, even tragic.

The Government, as trustee, has not been thrifty with the Indians' estate. On the contrary, the Indian-owned lands have dwindled with extreme rapidity from an acreage of 133,000,000 in 1887 to an acreage of only 47,000,000 at the present day. The system of property administration, not yet reorganized, insures in its very structure the continued shrinkage of Indian lands, with the complete ultimate disinheritance of more than two-thirds of the Indians still holding property under Government trust. A comparable dissipation has taken place, and is continuing, with respect to the Indian-owned natural resources and the funds derived from their exploitation.

We urge upon your attention the intense contrast between the present situation of the Indians in the United States and in our neighboring countries, Mexico and Canada. In both of these neighboring countries Indian property is increasing, not diminishing; the cultural rights of the Indians are carefully respected; and the Indians are helped to take their full place in the political, professional, social, and economic life.

So great is the Indian distress in many tribes, and so rapid is the shrinkage of Indian property held in trust by the Government. that we do not believe we are exaggerating when we suggest that your administration represents almost a last chance for the Indians.

The task of guardianship and trusteeship over the 230,000 Indian wards and their property is one of immense complication. Numerous and difficult technical procedures are involved. An extensive and conflicting body of statute law encumbers the trusteeship and guardianship services, while at the same time the Indian Bureau is vested with discretionary powers over Indian property, with immunity from court review, to an extent dangerous to the Indians and to the national honor.

There is required, we venture to suggest, not only an Indian administration of extraordinary determination and technical ability but a reorganization of the Government's system of Indian affairs, including an extensive reconstruction of Indian law.

In the light of these facts, we respectfully but most earnestly urge that in appointing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs and in filling the coordinate positions affecting the Indians, outstanding ability shall be sought for and experience and technical knowledge and equipment be emphasized. If there are any appointments in the Government service which deserve to be lifted above the political considerations, the appointments to the Indian Bureau are such. They are the appointments of guardians and trustees over wards who are, by our own statute law, made wholly dependent upon the Government and placed wholly at its mercy. They are appointments for the governance of the whole of a minority race which has suffered immeasurable past wrongs at the hands of our own Government.

We make no suggestion regarding persons. But we respectfully urge that the appointments be considered from the standpoint of the Indians themselves and in the light of the solemn obligations of trusteeship and of guardianship.

Very respectfully,

Robert M. Hutchins, Chicago, president University of Chicago; George Foster Peabody, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Hampton Institute, etc.; John A. Ryan, D. D., Washington, director department of social action, National Catholic Welfare Conference; Bishop Hugh L. Burleson, New York, National Council of the Episcopal Church; Haven Emerson, M. D., New York, professor, department of public health administration, Columbia University; Mrs. H. A. Reeve, Philadelphia, president International Federation of Home and School, formerly president National Congress of Parents and Teachers; Miss Edith Abbot, Chicago, professor, school of social administration, Chicago University; Dr. John R. Haynes, Los Angeles, regent, University of California; Virginia C. Gildersleeve, New York, dean, Barnard College; Percy Jackson, New York, Eastern Association on Indian Affairs; Lewis Meriam, Washington, chairman survey of Indian administration, Institute of Government Research; John Collier, Washington, executive secretary American Indian Defense Association; Nathan R. Mr. KING. Mr. President, a moment ago I stated that this bill carried $8,000,000 for the Indian Bureau which was unnecessary and that it would result in more harm than good to the Indians. I shall attempt to give some facts in support of this statement.

I have stated the main instances of waste coupled with damage to the Indians. They consist of the bureau's schooling system, its autocratic and unreviewable paternalism, which searches and enmeshes even the personal life of each Indian, and its duplication of other Government services. I shall deal with these in their turn.

MORE ABOUT THE SCHOOLING WASTES AND FAILURES

Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a table which gives the statistics of the number of children in Indian boarding schools in the years 1917, 1929, 1931, and 1932, and the estimated number for the fiscal year 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Comparison of attendance figures at Indian boarding schools for sample years from 1917 through 1932, and estimated number who will be in attendance in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, for which the pending appropriation bill makes provision [1]

| | 1917 | 1929 | 1931 | 1932 | Estimated for 1934 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Government boarding schools | 22,200 | 21,939 | 21,256 | 21,687 | [2] 20,423 |
| Mission boarding schools | 5,100 | 3,022 | 6,286 | 7,351 | [3] 7,351 |
| Total | 27,311 | 24,715 | 27,532 | 29,028 | 27,773 |

[1] References: Annual reports Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1917, 1929, 1931; House hearings on Interior Department appropriation bill, 1934.

[2] This total is arrived at as follows: The pending budget is estimated for an average attendance (at Government boarding schools) of 19,230. Experience has proved that the actual attendance exceeds the advance-estimated attendance. The excess for non-reservation boarding schools in 1932 (the last year of completed record) was 6.2 per cent. Applying this correction to the estimate, the total of 20,422 is obtained as the probable average attendance at Government boarding schools in the fiscal year ahead.

[3] No estimates available. In view of increase of attendance at mission boarding schools from 1929 through 1932, it is here assumed that the attendance at these schools in 1934 will be not less than the attendance of 1932.

CONCLUSIONS FROM THE ABOVE TABLE

Disregarding qualitative facts and taking into account only quantitative facts, the boarding schools have not been diminished since 1917. If attention be given only to the Government boarding schools as distinct from mission boarding schools, the decrease in attendance from 1917 to 1932 was 2.2 per cent and the decrease from 1929 to 1932 was 1.2 per cent. The decrease from 1929 to the estimates hereunder, for Government boarding schools exclusively, in the fiscal year 1934, totals 7.1 per cent; but when all the boarding schools are considered, there is found an increase, from 1929 to the estimated total for 1934, of 18.3 per cent.

The cost to the Government, on a per child basis, for the Government schools, increased approximately 63 per cent from 1917 to the Budget estimates for 1934. The 1934 Budget estimates aggregate $7,059,000 for children in Government boarding schools numbering 19,230, which total of children should be corrected to 20,422.

Mr. KING. I shall briefly refer to the matter just inserted in the RECORD. The estimate for the fiscal year 1934 shows the total number of children in the boarding schools to be 20,422.

Mr. BROOKHART. How many are in the day schools?

FOR EACH SEVEN CHILDREN—ONE EMPLOYEE

Mr. KING. I will refer to that in a moment. The total cost for the boarding schools as estimated for 1934 is $7,059,000 and the cost for each child for the year is $346. But the costs will be greater and will be met from deficiency appropriations and tribal funds. The total salaries and wages, after deducting for legislative and administrative furloughs, amount to $3,870,909. It appears therefore that the salary expenditure for each child is $189. It will be perceived that more than half of the cost is for salaries of employees, the number of the regular employees being 2,761, and the number of irregular employees 225 on a whole-time basis at $1,000 per year. Thus the total number of employees in the boarding schools is 2,986. This gives a ratio of Government employees to children of 1 to 6.9.

THE COMPARISON WITH DAY SCHOOLS

Mr. President, these figures I have obtained from the Indian Bureau and they show the total number of children in the day schools, as estimated for 1934, to be 5,960 at an estimated total cost for the day schools of $739,000. The per capita cost is therefore $124, or approximately one-third of the per capita cost of the boarding schools. The total salaries and wages are $459,940.

The statistical tabulation shows that in 1917 there were 27,311 children in the Indian boarding schools and that in 1929 there were 29,028; the estimated number for 1934 is 27,773. I have here in tabular form information as to salary costs, and so forth, to which I have just referred, and ask that the table be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Indian Bureau boarding school and day school costs, with salary totals, per capita costs, and salary expenditure occasioned by each child in school

| Number of housekeepers | 113 |
| Total of employees | 355 |
| Ratio of Government employees to children | 1 to 16.8 |

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the following conclusions are warranted from the figures submitted. Disregarding qualitative facts and taking into account only quantitative facts, the boarding schools have not been diminished since 1917. If attention be given only to the Government boarding schools as distinct from mission boarding schools, the decrease in attendance from 1917 to 1932 was 2.2 per cent, and the decrease from 1929 to 1932 was 1.2 per cent. The decrease from 1929 to the estimates for Government boarding schools exclusively as distinct from mission boarding schools in the fiscal year 1934 totals 7.1 per cent; but when all the boarding schools are considered there is found an increase from 1929 to the estimated total for 1934 of 12.3 per cent.

The cost to the Government on a per-child basis for the Government schools increased approximately 63 per cent from 1917 to the Budget estimates for 1934, a large part of which, of course, was caused by the increase in the number of employees. Living costs have gone down since 1917.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. What class of Government employees are the ones that the Senator thinks are in excess?

THE WHOLE INDIAN SERVICE IS OVERMANNED

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is not a division or subdivision in the entire Indian Bureau service that is not overmanned. With economy and efficiency the entire work of the Indian Bureau could be performed with one-half of the employees. There are a large number of so-called farmers who should be separated from the service, and if one of the recent employees, Mr. Cooley, were given authority to deal with the agricultural activities of the bureau he could with one-fifth of those engaged in so-called agricultural work accomplish far better results than are now obtained. Similar results, as well as advantages to the Indians, would result if like reductions were made in many of the divisions and groups in the bureau.

In the District of Columbia there are entirely too many employees. In all of the reservations, and there are more than a hundred reservations, the number of employees is entirely too great. The Senator may recall the bureau's expenses upon the Klamath Reservation. It was shown that the Indians protested against the enormous number of employees. The number of Indians in the reservation was comparatively small yet the number of employees was large and 30 automobiles were furnished for their benefit. Work was given to white employees in the construction of unnecessary roads and in other activities of but little benefit to the Indians. My recollection is that there were more than 30 buildings upon this small reservation to accommodate the white employees. An unnecessarily large force of men was employed to look after the forests, and I might say in passing that the Indian Bureau entered into unfair and improvident contracts with white lumbermen for the cutting of timber upon the reservation, and costs, which should have been borne by those having the contracts, were superimposed upon the Indians. Two intelligent Indians visited me this morning and stated that there were loaded upon them and their reservation a large number of civil-service employees; that many of them were not needed at all and that those whose services were of some benefit were needed only a portion of the year. The bureau, however, paid for the entire year, thus increasing the costs to the Government and to the Indians.

WASTES BY INDIAN IRRIGATION SERVICE

Mr. President, I proved in a number of addresses which I have delivered in the Senate in connection with Indian appropriation bills that this inefficient and extravagant Indian Bureau has expended more than $54,000,000 in the construction of so-called reclamation projects, and that $34,000,000 will be required to complete according to the unsound, ill-considered, and indeed foolish plans and projects upon which so large a sum has been expended. I shall refer to some of these projects before concluding my remarks. I might add at this point, however, that in my opinion more than $30,000,000 has been wasted in these so-called reclamation projects. They have been built largely for the benefit of the whites and have proven disadvantageous and, in many instances, disastrous to the Indians.

Mr. President, I desire to briefly discuss some of the causes of the destruction of the Indian wealth and present some facts showing the destruction in the holdings and property of the Indians.

THE DESTRUCTION OF INDIAN WEALTH BY THE GOVERNMENTAL TRUSTEE

I do not believe that any Member of this body can point out a state of affairs involving a trusteeship over property—whether trusteeship by the Government or by a private agency—that is comparable to the trusteeship of the Indian Bureau over the property of the Indians.

In the first place, it is a trusteeship which carries with it in addition an unreviewable guardianship power over the person, as well as an unreviewable trusteeship power over the property, of the interested party. A part of this guardianship consists in the absolute control over the uses of such income as may be paid to the beneficiary of the trust.

As a trustee over property, I submit that the Indian Bureau has powers unprecedented and unique and employs these powers in ways that are unprecedented. Among these powers is immunity from court review and freedom from the requirement of rendering accounting to the supposed beneficiaries of the trust.

THE UNPRECEDENTED TRUSTEESHIP

The Indian Bureau, as a trustee, is not required by law to distinguish between the corpus of the estate and the income from the estate, and it makes no distinction. It consumes, as income, capital assets in the amount of millions of dollars a year, and it distributes, as income, capital assets which under a normal trusteeship would be reinvested to preserve or increase the corpus of the estate.

I shall, in a few moments, give evidence of the well-nigh incredible abuses, with entailed instructions of Indian life and property which continue to flourish under this anomalous scheme of trusteeship and guardianship.

In 1914 an important survey of the Indian Bureau's trusteeship operations was made by the National Bureau of Municipal Research in behalf of the President's Economic Commission and of a joint committee of the House and Senate. This report (as a result, I presume, of Indian Bureau influence) was never made a public document. It was not even permitted, so far as I am advised, to go into the Library of Congress, according to a signed statement of Dr. Frederick A. Cleveland, director of the survey. Excerpts from this important document were privately printed by the Bureau of Municipal Research in September, 1915, and I desire to quote two paragraphs from a summary there given. I quote these paragraphs because they are descriptive of the situation at the present hour:

> * * * behind the sham protection which operated largely as a blind to publicity, have been at all times great wealth in the form of Indian funds to be subverted; valuable lands, mines, oil fields, and other natural resources to be despoiled or appropriated to the use of the trader; and large profits to be made by those dealing with trustees who were animated by motives of gain. This has been the situation in which the Indian Service has been for more than a century—the Indian during all this time having his rights and properties to greater or less extent neglected; the guardian, the Government, in many instances, passive to conditions which have contributed to his undoing.
> And still, due to the increasing value of his remaining estate, there is left an inducement to fraud, corruption, and institutional incompetence almost beyond the possibility of comprehension. The properties and funds of the Indians to-day are estimated at not less than one thousand millions of dollars. There is still a great obligation to be discharged, which must run through many years. The Government itself owes many millions of dollars for Indian moneys which it has converted to its own use, and it is of interest to note that it does not know and the officers do not know what is the present condition of the Indian funds in their keeping. Every community bordering on Indian lands still has in it persons who are using every influence at their command to obtain official action, to the end that they may get possession of Indian lands. Great corporations maintain lobbyists and unprincipled agents with a view of getting concessions, leases, and legislation which are favorable to their own selfish purposes, but unfavorable to the Indian. * * *

I now proceed to detail some of the results of the trusteeship of the Indian Bureau over the property of the Indians.

The accessible facts are incomplete because the records of the Indian Bureau are incomplete and imperfect to a baffling extent. No comprehensive data of precise accuracy exists. The Indian Bureau, after 1928, ceased publishing its estimates of the Indian wealth as the result of criticisms which pointed out that about half of the total estimate was a mere guess, unsupported by statistical facts, while the other half was largely founded on statistical estimates, which had fluctuated excessively and were not consistent from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.

However, uncontroverted facts are at hand, accurate within a small percentage, and derived from records furnished by the Indian Bureau itself, and their effect is overwhelming. They show a reduction of the Indian estate by more than three-fourths since 1887.

FORTY-FIVE YEARS AGO AND NOW

I have examined reports of Commissioners of Indian Affairs covering many years, and they bring convincing evidence that the policies of the Government and the Indian Bureau have been injurious rather than beneficial to the Indians under the control of the Government. I have taken at random the reports of J. G. C. Atkins, who was Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1887. They would perceive that the Indians were better off in that year than they are to-day, notwithstanding the hundreds of millions of dollars expended allegedly in their behalf since then. This report could well serve as a model as well as a reproach to the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs and to the present Secretary of the Interior, as well as to Congress.

It is a careful, blunt, honest statement, and its narrative sections are supported by a mass of interesting statistics, tabulations, and comparative statements. The commissioner states that the total Indian lands in 1887 were 133,694,985 acres. I mention this because we are regaled by statements emanating from the Indian Bureau of the wonderful agricultural development of Indian lands and the excellent irrigation systems provided the Indians and the success achieved in teaching the Indians agricultural pursuits. The facts will show that their condition as agriculturists is worse than it was in 1887, before the Government had expended tens of millions of dollars for alleged agricultural development—expenditures which are to be continued in the present appropriation bill.

My information is that in 1930 the total area owned by the Indians was 47,000,000 acres. In other words, within a limited period their holdings have been reduced 65 per cent. Can it be contended that their interests were properly guarded when they suffered a loss so stupendous?

POPULATION THEN AND NOW

Commissioner Atkins reports that the Indian population under Federal jurisdiction in 1887 was 243,229. To-day the Indian population under Federal jurisdiction is but 194,000. I emphasize what I have heretofore stated, that the Indian Bureau under Commissioner Atkins expended but a little more than $5,000,000 annually in caring for 243,229 Indians, while the present administration in the current fiscal year is spending largely in excess of $24,000,000 for bureau maintenance alone.

I repeat that when there were more than 343,000 Indians under the care of the Government, and at a time when Vice President Curtis was chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee of the House the appropriations made for all of the activities of the Indian Bureau did not exceed $6,000,000. Now, with the number of Indians under the Government's jurisdiction greatly reduced and the Indians in a worse condition than they were then, the Indian Bureau expends from $25,000,000 to $35,000,000 per annum, a portion of which comes from the Treasury of the United States and the residue from the diminishing tribal funds of the Indians.

As shown by Commissioner Atkins, the acreage actually cultivated by the Indians in 1887 was 237,265 acres, but as I have indicated, notwithstanding the millions expended by the bureau allegedly for irrigation projects and in behalf of the Indians, they are now cultivating but approximately 133,000 acres under all the projects. The irrigation projects initiated and carried forward by the bureau have cost more than $54,000,000 gross, and will require more than $30,000,000 for their completion. Later I shall discuss somewhat in detail the costs of these irrigation projects and the unsound and extravagant methods employed by the bureau in initiating, constructing, and maintaining the same.

Again referring to Commissioner Atkins's report, the excess of Indian births over deaths in 1887, as reported by the agency physicians, was 1.116 per cent. In the year 1926 the Indian deaths in the total registration area exceeded births by 200, an excess of deaths over births in the amount of six-tenths of 1 per cent.

The Indian death rate is higher than the death rate of the general population at the present time in the amount of 10 to 20 per thousand of population, varying by reservations, which means that it is twice as large as the general death rate. The continuing death and disability rates among the Indians are fully discussed in the printed hearings held on Senate Resolution 341 on February 25, 1927, and in the chapter on health found in the report on Indian administration by the Institute for Government Research. This report, as Senators know, was made at the request of Secretary Work, by Mr. Meriam, Doctor Ryan, Doctor Edwards, and other persons of ability chosen because of their special qualifications. It was intended that the survey should deal particularly with the general conditions of the Indians, especially the conditions of their health, schools, and so forth. This report, which I have before me, consists of a large volume containing hundreds of printed pages and is a mine of information concerning the conditions of the Indians.

THE TRIBAL FUNDS CONSUMED SINCE 1887

Commissioner Atkins reports that in 1887 the tribal funds and Government cash liabilities to the Indians totaled $28,778,931. At that time the Indians were entirely free from debt to the Government or to any organization or individual.

Now, though the tribal funds in the intervening years have been replenished in the amount of at least $500,000,000, pursuant to treaties with the Government and through the lease and sale of tribal assets, the total amount of tribal funds to their credit is less than it was in 1887 and the Indians are owing, as claimed by the Indian Bureau, more than $35,000,000 to the Government.

It is evident if the present policy of the bureau is continued the tribal funds owned by the Indians will be exhausted and with the loss of their lands most of them will inevitably be charges upon the Government. Instead of the Indians having been made an independent and self-sustaining part of our population they have been deprived of much of their property and denied opportunities to equip themselves to fit into their surroundings and into the economic life of our country.

Mr. President, let me briefly refer to some of the methods under which the Indian lands have been lost and trust funds dissipated.

As I have just stated, during the intervening years since 1887 there have been large accretions to the tribal funds which have gone into the general reservoir from which the bureau has annually drawn varying amounts, from five to ten million dollars, and as I have stated, millions of dollars in addition have been appropriated each year from the Treasury of the United States, which the taxpayers were compelled to meet. The appropriations from the Treasury, together with tribal funds belonging to the Indians, have been expended by the Indian Bureau to an amount of more than $500,000,000 during the past 45 years. How little there is to show for this stupendous appropriation is manifest to those who have given even a superficial study to the condition of the Indians, over whom the Government is presumed to exercise a benign guardianship. I can only say that no inconsiderable part has been wasted and profligately expended. The results, to those who are interested in the Indians and in the good name of the Government and who desire to see it discharge its moral and legal obligations, must be exceedingly disappointing.

I shall now discuss more fully the dissipation and misappropriation of Indian wealth of all forms, which has taken place since 1887, and which is continuing unchecked.

THE SHRINKAGE OF INDIAN LANDS

In 1887, the Indians owned, under government trust, 133,695,000 acres. In 1930 they owned, under government trust, 47,311,089 acres.

The gross reduction of Indian land area was 65 per cent between 1887 and 1930. The actual reduction, in terms of surface values, was much greater. Of the residual lands, 18,600,000 acres were desert or semidesert lands in Arizona and New Mexico, unirrigable and without commercial timber, and 7,390,000 (at a minimum) were lands in Nevada, California, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, and Utah, without commercial timber, not irrigable, partly semidesert and partly available for grazing, but not farming. The total of such land, whose surface value does not exceed $2 per acre, was 25,990,000 acres, or 55 per cent of the remaining Indian lands. The diminishment of the surface value of Indian-owned lands from 1887 to 1930 can be conservatively estimated as 80 per cent. It is the more valuable lands which, through action by the Government itself, not of the Indians, as regards 95 per cent of the total of alienation, have passed from Indian ownership. The controlling methods of alienation have been as follows:

First. Sales, nearly always under virtual compulsion, by the Indian tribes to the Government; the purchase price being paid into tribal funds and the resale price, after disposal to whites by the General Land Office, being paid into the Treasury of the United States. The total of such practically forced sales, from 1887 to 1930, was 56,444,911 acres. What total was paid to the Indians by the Government is nowhere summarized; the payment went to tribal funds under Government trust and has all been consumed by the Indian Bureau for its own maintenance and by per capita payments made to the Indians as described below. The total of resale price paid to the general treasury through the General Land Office from 1887 to 1929 was $46,011,151; part of which sum represented the resale of Indian lands "ceded to the Government" prior to 1887. A substantial part of the lands sold (under duress) to the Government by the tribes is now contained within the public domain, the national forests, and national parks, not having been resold. (References: Statistical Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1887; table of residual Indian lands as of June 30, 1930, unpublished, prepared by the Bureau of Indian Affairs; table of Public Land Office, showing cash receipts from the disposal of public and Indian lands to June 30, 1929; Winter's Four Hundred Million Acres, published 1932, p. 336).

Second. Sales by individual Indians who have received fee patents to allotted land, the purchase price being paid to individual unrestricted Indians.

Third. Sales by the Government itself, of allotted land held in trust and of the trust allotted land of deceased allottees, the purchase price being held by the Government in trust for individual Indians.

Through the second and the third methods which I have described, 29,939,000 acres of Indian land had passed to whites between 1887 and 1930. This total is furnished by the land office of the Indian Bureau, December 22, 1932; the same communication supplies details as to a part only of the alienations. Through fee patenting, subsequently to 1906, 4,853,700 acres of the Indian allotted land have passed out of Government trust and to a 98 per cent total, approximately, out of Indian ownership. Through sale by the Government as trustee, between 1903 and 1932, 3,657,902 Indian trust-allotted acres were sold to whites, the total receipts being $37,698,613, paid into individual funds held in trust by the Indian Bureau. The balance of the 29,939,026 alienated acres, or 21,427,334 acres of allotted land, either was fee patented or sold through unsegregated transactions between 1887 and 1903, or was fee patented or sold through unrecorded transactions since 1903.

Mr. President, I digress to state that in my opinion the present commissioner and his assistants have not approved the accepted policy, which has resulted in the alienation of so much of the Indian lands. They have undoubtedly been bound by archaic laws and rules and regulations which they inherited from the past. I believe, however, that if these officials had emphasized the injurious consequences by which the Indians are losing their lands and had asked for legislation to correct the situation, Congress would have responded.

In brief, the Indians have lost, since 1887, 29,939,026 allotted acres, plus 56,444,911 acres of ceded and surplus land bought by the Government through practically forced sales; and the cash payments for the above, plus the cash derived from the lease and sale of mineral, oil, and other subsurface values, the sale of timber, and the lease of tribal and allotted surfaces, has likewise been consumed—consumed by the Indian Bureau for its own maintenance in the amount of more than $150,000,000 since 1887.

THE ALIENATION OF HEIRSHIP LANDS

The remaining trust-allotted lands pass into the class of heirship lands at a speed necessarily increasing with each year; and it is only the collapse of the market for agricultural and grazing lands at any price which now saves many millions of heirship acres from passing to whites. In spite of the collapsed market the Indian Bureau has sold to the whites, in the years 1930–1932, 224,792 acres of Indian allotted land for an average price of $13.33 per acre. (Commissioner's report, fiscal years 1930–1932.)

Mr. President, Congress ought, before it adjourns, enact a law that will interrupt this destructive alienation policy which will inevitably result in all allotted lands in the very near future passing into the hands of white people.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. According to the Senator's statement, one would incline to the belief that it is almost as hard to be an Indian as it is to be a farmer.

Mr. KING. It is not difficult to understand the disadvantages under which the Indians labor and the failure of their guardian to properly administer their trust funds. No doubt the farmers, as the Senator indicates, have had their troubles. My sympathies go out to both the farmers and the Indians.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will permit me, I think the Senator deserves a great deal of credit for bringing out these things as he has done in every session of Congress, calling the attention of the people of the United States to the shameful way in which our wards have been treated by the Government.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator for his complimentary reference to my efforts in behalf of the Indians. I am afraid, however, that I have greatly irritated some Senators as well as other persons because of my persistent efforts for more than 10 years to protect the Indians and to bring about reforms in the Indian Bureau. I have believed that unless a radical change was made in the policies of the Government in dealing with the Indians, the latter would soon be dispossessed of all their property, and without homes or property would be a heavy charge upon the Government. I regret there is so little interest taken by Senators and by the public in the Indian question and in those matters affecting their welfare and development. I can not help but feel that the Government has been derelict in its duty toward the Indians and that it should now deal with this question in a just and humane way and try to rectify some of the wrongs that have been committed and prevent the inevitable disasters that threaten all the Indians of our country.

As I have stated, notwithstanding there has been no market for Indian holdings, the bureau has sold to the whites during the years 1930 and 1932, 224,792 acres of Indian allotted lands at an average price of but $13.30 per acre. That fact is shown by the report of the Indian commissioner for the fiscal years 1930 and 1932.

INDIAN IRRIGATED LANDS SACRIFICED

As for the irrigated lands of the Indians, the acreage of these lands owned by whites increased in the amount of 96.2 per cent between 1924 and 1932; and in 1932, 69.1 per cent of all the irrigated land on Indian reservations was in white hands, either through lease or through ownership.

To Indians land is life. The annihilation of the Indian landed estate under the Indian Bureau system is a racial catastrophe—and moves toward its end with the swiftness of a catastrophe when viewed even in the short historical perspective of 45 years.

THE DESTRUCTION OF INDIAN CASH ASSETS

The cash derived from the sales of Indian land, from the payment of tribal claims under Court of Claims adjudications, and from the exploitation of Indian natural resources has been deposited in tribal and individual accounts under Government trust. These funds in the main have been and are properly a part of the corpus of the Indian estate, being to 90 per cent of their total nothing but capital values turned into liquid assets. But they have been and are uniformly treated as income, not capital, and are consumed each year by nonproductive uses.

I emphasize again the difference between Canada and the United States. There the capital of the tribes is not used. Here we are destroying the capital of the Indians, and the result can not be otherwise than calamitous to the Indians.

In part these uses have been and are the salaries, houses, automobiles, and so forth, of Indian Bureau employees and other items of current maintenance of the Indian Bureau.

In part these uses have been per capita payments made to individual members of the tribes. With these per capita payments we must now deal. Not the fact of per capita payments but the manner of their administration by the Indian Bureau is one of the darkest of the continuing scandals of the Indian affairs system.

THE RUINOUS METHOD OF PER CAPITA PAYMENTS

The per capitas are paid into individual accounts under Indian Bureau trust. In Oklahoma these accounts and the affairs of the recipients of per capitas are under the joint control of the Indian Bureau superintendents and of the local guardians who are a peculiarity of the Oklahoma situation. Outside Oklahoma the control is with the bureau superintendency alone. In the case of ward adult Indians and of minors and orphans the control is arbitrary and unlimited, and in all cases it is practically unaccountable and unreviewable.

Per capita payments exceeding $300,000,000 since 1912 have created only a negligible amount of capital value, and they have cruelly demoralized the Indian recipients. The reasons are well understood; and as they lie at the heart of Indian affairs situation, they are here stated.

First. Indian thrift is tribal; it is a conservatism and foresightedness of the community. The per capita payments have been made to individual Indians whose tribal and community life has been dismembered and, in a large number of instances, totally destroyed by the Government's deliberate and continuing policy. The detached Indian is typically not thrifty, foresighted, nor even a consecutive worker.

Second. Just as the tribal and community life has been dismembered or crushed and is still proscribed, so, equally, the individual Indians are prohibited from organizing in any of the modern manners for mutual aid, for the making of capital investments or the management of such investments when made.

Ward Indians may not enter into contracts except with the Secretary of the Interior's consent. He, practically, must become the contracting party in behalf of the Indian. Similarly, debts incurred by ward Indians are not legally collectible. The trust-administered properties are wholly controlled by the bureau. Any organization which the Indians may form exists only through bureau sufferance and subject to rules and regulations or arbitrary action of the bureau. The bureau by law "approves"—that is, selects—the attorneys who may represent the Indians. So on through scores of inhibitions whose total effect is that here described.

The Indians who receive per capita payments are wards of the Government and are subject to the laws prohibiting the making of contracts by or with the Indians, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, and to all of the other restrictions of personal liberty and business enterprise elsewhere described in this memorandum, which constitute in their aggregate a denial of the constitutional rights to Indians. The Osage Indians, for example, recipients of royalties which aggregated $243,138,671 from 1915 to 1932, are members of a tribe whose institutions have been proscribed by statute as in the case of other Oklahoma Indians; they are not possessed of any form of modern business organization nor, except under rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior which have never been forthcoming, can they become possessed of such organization. No Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Indian Affairs has at any time expressed a desire to extend such facilities to the Osage Indians either by regulation or by statute; the local interests of Oklahoma, which have battened upon the Osages, would furthermore have bitterly resisted such an attempt by the Secretary or commissioner if made. It has been intended and accepted that the Osages should dissipate their so-called income, which actually has been their capital. In the last three years the income from the depleted Osage oil field has collapsed.

Identical facts have held good of the per capita payments derived from whatever source by the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma and of the Menominee Tribe of Wisconsin, the Klamath Tribe of Oregon, and so forth.

THE INDIANS COMPELLED TO SPEND WASTEFULLY

A more sinister factor must now be mentioned. The per capita payments to individual Indians have, in an overwhelming majority of instances, been paid into accounts controlled by the Indian Bureau, or by the bureau in conjunction with the local guardians in the case of Oklahoma Indians. The management of the individual accounts thus created has been one of the major activities of the Indian Bureau in the jurisdictions with large individualized incomes. The procedures of the bureau and its superintendents have been, as they are, arbitrary to a practically unlimited extent. Indians have typically found that they could receive the cash from their per capita payments if they spent it as directed by the bureau agency or local guardian, and not otherwise. Hence, in large measure, the extravagances of Oklahoma Indians who have purchased expensive cars and magnificent houses; who have paid fantastic prices to lawyers, undertakers, and mercantile agencies of all varieties.

The above factors explain the dissipation of Indian capital values through per capita payments, and they indicate some of the basic structural faults of the Indian affairs system of to-day.

THE BUREAU HAS DEVOURED THE TRIBAL TRUST FUNDS

Congress and the Indian Bureau have used the Indian capital assets for Indian Bureau maintenance, and the expenditures have been lavish. They have totaled more than $110,000,000 since 1900, and this misappropriation of the Indian estate—its diversion to unproductive administrative uses—continues to-day and is eating up a larger proportion of the available liquid capital than in 1920 or 1910. The bureau used for its own maintenance (exclusive of per capita payments) $30,930,540 of Indian tribal funds in the seven fiscal years 1926–32, inclusive. It used in the fiscal year 1932 76 per cent of the total tribal income of 1932.

No part of the Indian Bureau's trusteeship operation is more subject to criticism than its handling of the trust funds of the Indian tribes. These funds have totaled $500,000,000 since 1887. They have consisted, to more than 90 per cent of their total, of capital values turned into liquid form: Cash derived from sales of land, from payment by the Government of judgments in the Court of Claims, from the sale of timber, oil, and minerals. A proper trusteeship would have adhered to the distinction between capital and income and would have reinvested the capital to conserve the principal of the estate.

The Indian Bureau has made no such distinction but has consumed or distributed, year by year, all of the capital values which it was able to convert into liquid shape. Never, either to the Indian Tribes or to Congress, has the bureau made an accounting for its use of these hundreds of millions of dollars. The records are imperfect and are not compiled. Suits for accounting by the Indian tribes would probably be defeated through the absence of records. But I have secured the exact facts for certain typical years and I now present them. They show, among other things, a deliberate and systematic deception of Congress in the matter of the uses of tribal funds on the part of the Indian Bureau.

THE INDIAN TRUST FUND RECORD SINCE 1926

The years which I shall deal with are the fiscal years 1926, 1927, and 1928. I omit prior fiscal years because the totals and the classifications of tribal-fund expenditures are not accessible. I omit the succeeding years because, beginning with the calendar year 1928, the Indian Bureau ceased to make to Congress even the meager reports on Indian tribal funds which it had previously made. The bureau in 1928 secured the repeal of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 123–159), by whose terms the reporting of tribal funds to Congress had been mandatory. After reciting the facts as to the fiscal years 1926, 1927, and 1928, I shall deal with the fiscal year 1932.

The tribal-fund balance on July 1, 1925, was $21,109,687. The tribal cash deposited in the Treasury from that date to July 1, 1928, totaled $68,581,661. The cash balance of July 1, 1925, added to the deposits of the three years thereafter, made a total of $89,691,348.

The balance of tribal funds on July 1, 1928, was $24,056,226. In other words, the bureau through these years consumed or disbursed the whole of the so-called tribal income—of tribal capital converted to liquid form.

Now I call attention to a fact which is duplicated in every fiscal year down to and including the present.

The act of May 18, 1916, whose repeal was secured by the Indian Bureau in 1928, required the bureau, in reporting to Congress on tribal funds, to state what amounts it proposed to disburse from tribal funds in the fiscal year in question. The bureau did so state, dividing its proposed expenditures into per capita payments to the Indians and payments from tribal funds for Indian Bureau support.

In the three fiscal years whose record I am now reciting, the bureau informed Congress that it was spending, or was proposing to spend, for its own salaries and other bureau costs, a total of $4,359,100 from tribal funds. And in no one of the reports for any of the fiscal years in question does the bureau divulge what it was actually spending, and had spent, and was intending to spend, for its own maintenance, from tribal funds.

The actual expenditure of the Indian Bureau for its own maintenance, taken from tribal funds, in these three fiscal years, as revealed by the reports of the Comptroller General, was not $4,359,100, but $12,803,449. The bureau's overdraft against tribal funds, taken by it and spent for its own sustenance, exceeded the acknowledged amount, in these three years alone, by $8,444,399.

At this point I may state the total which the Indian Bureau has taken from the Indian tribal capital and spent for its own maintenance since 1926. In the seven fiscal years, 1926–1932, the bureau thus expended—misappropriated, as I think—$30,930,539 of the Indian tribal assets. In the fiscal year 1932, the total of Indian assets which the bureau was able to convert into cash was only $4,015,278, and of this sum the bureau used, for its own salaries and maintenance, $3,068,608, or 76 per cent of the total. There remained, of Indian tribal funds for all tribes, after the proposed expenditures from these funds for the fiscal year 1933 had been deducted, only $11,591,215. But as I have already explained, the bureau in the case of 99 out of the 103 tribes possessing tribal funds took for its own uses, in 1932, more than twice the entire tribal income of that year, and reduced the funds of these 99 tribes to $5,236,944.

Thus, with the diminishment of Indian wealth under bureau ministration, and with the diminishment of the bureau's ability to turn Indian assets into cash, the point has at last been reached where the Indian Bureau—the trustee—is devouring for its own salaries and upkeep more than 76 per cent of the Indian tribal cash, leaving less than 24 per cent for the Indian owners of the money, and in the case of 99 of the tribes is devouring the whole income, leaving nothing for the Indians themselves, and actually putting them into debt to the Government for the Indian Bureau's salaries.

The fiscal year 1933 probably will bring the Indian Bureau's consumption of the total of tribal cash to 100 per cent; the Indians will get nothing at all, and the bureau will proceed to consume the pittance which remains of tribal funds.

THE WASTAGE OF INDIAN NATURAL RESOURCES

Third. I refer now, Mr. President, to the natural resources of the Indians. Under pressure of exploiting interests, and in order to obtain revenue for its own use and those per capita payments for Indians which are promptly devoured by the local white communities as above described, the Indian Bureau has steadfastly pursued a policy of getting immediate revenue through exploitation of oil and gas, timber, and agricultural and grazing land, tribal and allotted, without up to the last three or four years even professing to be concerned with the husbanding of the properties. On the contrary, it was a definitely stated policy of the Indian Bureau, as voiced by an important official of the bureau in 1919, to liquidate the Indian properties at an early date. The frank testimony on this point, given before the Indian Investigation Committee of the House of Representatives, had immediate reference to the Indian forests but was a deliberate statement of general policy toward Indian natural resources.

The professions of the conservationist have been made by officials of the Indian Bureau since 1929, but the facts of record have not at any point supported their professions. Reference is here made, for purposes of definiteness, to the reports of the Senate subcommittee on Indian investigation, dealing with the timbered reservations of the Klamaths in Oregon and of the Mescalero Apaches of New Mexico and other reservations possessing natural resources.

Subsequently to making its report on the Klamath Reservation and on the devastations proceeding at that reservation in 1930, the Senate subcommittee has accumulated hundreds of pages of testimony, which drives any unprejudiced reader to the conclusion that the forestry division of the Indian Bureau is in practice the agent of lumber companies and while sheepmen, indifferent not alone to timber and soil conservation but to the plain obligations resting upon the Government as trustee.

A CONCRETE CASE OF PRESENT MISUSE OF INDIAN FUNDS

I refer, Mr. President, in support of this statement to the printed hearings, volume 13 and volume 22 of the special committee headed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], and also to the report, submitted by that Senator on December 22, 1931, in which serious criticism is directed against the bureau for its handling of the timber reserves. I ask permission to have inserted in the Record a number of excerpts from that report, and I shall indicate to the reporter the excerpts to be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

The excerpts referred to are as follows:

On a previous occasion, when reporting on the Klamath Agency of Oregon, the subcommittee pointed out that the tribal estate of many of the Indians, turned into cash through the sale of natural resources, is being rapidly exhausted by the Indian Bureau.

The Mescalero Apache Reservation of 472,200 acres is occupied by 696 Apache Indians. Its chief values are its timber and its grazing range. At the time of the subcommittee's hearings (May 4, 1931) a meager ration was being supplied to 31 of their aged and infirm Indians. The Indian Bureau provides schooling on the reservation for 107 Apache children and an additional 17 attend public school; 38 children from the reservation are at distant boarding schools. A hospital is maintained by the Indian Bureau with an average attendance, as stated to the subcommittee at the hearings, of 12 to 14; but in addition to his duties at the hospital the doctor answers sick calls from the Indians.

The Indian agency's activities in the matter of Mescalero Apache property have to do (a) with the timber, and (b) with the livestock, particularly the tribal herd, which has dwindled from 7,500 in 1928 (House appropriation hearings for 1930, p. 1205) to 3,000 in 1931. The timber income and tribal-herd income alike are absorbed by the expenses of the agency. In addition, $10,000 from the tribal fund was spent for water development in 1930 and $10,000 in 1931. The income from the sale of timber has been, through each successive year, used up by the Indian Bureau for administration. The income from leases of tribal lands has been similarly used. The income from the rapidly diminishing tribal herd likewise has been used for Indian agency maintenance. The whole tribal estate, in practical effect, with the exception of the area used for grazing 1,000 head of cattle, 18,000 sheep, and 10,000 goats, is treated as belonging to the Indian agency, not to the Indians, and its yield of income and principal are being consumed in agency salaries and other Indian agency costs.

The reservation superintendent, Mr. P. W. Danielson, when testifying before the subcommittee on May 4, 1931, repeatedly affirmed that the total of tribal funds annually used by the agency was $55,000. Reference, however, to the Indian Bureau's detailed reports of expenditures established that the bureau's draft against the Mescalero tribal fund has fluctuated between $70,000 and in excess of $110,000 through successive years. (House appropriation hearings, Interior Department appropriation bill, p. 704.) In addition, the bureau has obtained from Congress a gratuity appropriation for this reservation of $64,309 for 1928, $76,186 for 1929, $97,661 for 1930, and $87,390 for 1931. In the fiscal year 1930 the total expenditure at the Mescalero Apache Reservation was $208,436.22. The tribal funds used by the Indian Bureau in 1930 totaled $110,774. (House appropriation hearings, Interior Department bill, fiscal year 1932, p. 704.) The per capita expenditure, nominally in behalf of each Indian then resident on the reservation, was $306. Out of the tribal fund there was contributed for each Indian $163 to the maintenance of the Indian agency, and the Government, through gratuities, contributed an additional sum of $143 per capita. Indian agency salaries, as distinct from irregular labor, totaled $70,280, or $103 for each Indian, according to the tabulation of expenditures for 1931, which was made a part of the subcommittee's hearings at the Mescalero Agency.

Indians have been led to believe that they are tax exempt, but the Mescalero Apaches are not tax exempt in the sense that their tribal funds are used for the purpose of the agency administration. If the American people as a whole paid an average per capita tax equal to the per capita contribution of the Mescaleros to reservation costs in 1930, the tax fund would total more than $20,000,000,000 a year. If Government in all its branches, national and local, were supported as lavishly, on a per capita basis, as is the Indian agency on the Mescalero Reservation, the tax fund would total more than $36,000,000,000, or more than a third of the aggregate national income.

It has been stated above that the Mescalero Apaches received, in return for their heavy contribution, supplemented by the Government's heavy contribution, but little of tangible service from the Indian Bureau. More than three-quarters of a million dollars of Mescalero Apache trust money has been used by the Indian Bureau in 10 years. There are fewer than 700 Indians. The large expenditures, as explained above, do not represent per capita or other cash payments made to the Mescalero Indians, except that in 1930 $22,013.12 of tribal funds was loaned to individual Indians and applied on their store debts; hence it can not be asserted that the Apaches have squandered their money. As one example of conditions on the reservation, the subcommittee found, within a quarter mile of the agency headquarters, an Apache woman more than 80 years old. This old woman was one of the 31 receiving, twice each week, a small ration paid for from the tribal fund. Her home was a set of poles with a canvas around the poles, and when it rained the rain came in. The place was not ditched, and for weeks before the subcommittee's arrival, this old woman had been living in a sea of mud and water. The bureau's field matron, under questioning, admitted that she had not visited the place or sought to help.

The subcommittee points out that it does not favor uncontrolled per capita payments from tribal income, but that the tribe's income should be used for the industrial advancement of the tribe's members instead of being used for the support of the Indian agency in unproductive ways.

The evidence adduced at the hearings at Mescalero through Indian and Indian Bureau testimony alike showed that the Indians are practically denied the use of most of their reservation, and denied the advantages of their reservation's income; are burdened with impossible debts, part of them for improvements needed by the general community of whites; and are forced to carry an immense burden of Indian agency salaried employees. The agency witnesses testified that for the tribal herd of 3,000 head, the agency was employing a supervisor and seven other salaried employees. The evidence further disclosed that for overseeing the timber, although no timber operations were in progress, and specifically for supervising the sale of timber, although the sale of timber had ceased the preceding year, the agency was employing a forest supervisor, a senior ranger, a forest ranger, and two timber scalers on an all-the-year basis. An Indian agency pay roll of $70,280 for salaries as distinct from irregular was being maintained in 1931. The committee believes that the work of this agency as well as every other agency visited could be conducted with fewer employees. This is particularly true of the forestry department of the Indian Bureau where the overhead expense to the Indians is far beyond what it should be. The Indians' timber is being squandered on a lot of high-priced employees while the Indians are going without sufficient food and clothing. Every Indian on a reservation that has a timber reserve should be encouraged to build himself a good home and should be furnished lumber and advice and help in building it.

Generally speaking there are too many subagents and too many farmers, too many foresters, too many scalers, and too many so-called experts, and too little good for the Indian has been accomplished. The Indian Bureau is a good example of bureaucracy gone mad.

The subcommittee has dwelt at some length on the Mescalero Apache tribal fund and agency financial records because in its essentials this record typifies the situation at reservations where the Indian Bureau uses Indian trust moneys.

The use of Indian tribal funds for Indian Bureau maintenance, and without regard to Indian wishes or to the duty of conserving the Indian property and building it up, is causing the rapid impoverishment of the Indian tribes without even, in the typical and more numerous cases, saving money to the United States. This conclusion becomes evident as soon as the Indian Bureau's expenditures at reservations with large tribal funds or tribal incomes are compared with its expenditures at reservations without large tribal funds or tribal incomes, where expendtures must be made from gratuities which are effectually controlled by Congress. From the tabulation of the expenditures of 13 reservations, appended to this report, the following facts are pointed out as examples:

The New Mexico Pueblos are administered through gratuities. They receive, according to the subcommittee's observations, when compared (for example) with the Mescalero Reservation and the Klamath Reservation previously reported on, an intensive and efficient human service, and their properties for several years past have been reasonably safeguarded by the Government. Omitting reimbursables, the Pueblo cost per capita in 1930 was $38.40—$36.70 gratuitous and $0.70 tribal. The Navajo and Hopi Reservations are administered principally through gratuities. The total per capita in 1930 was $47.70—$42.70 gratuitous and $5 tribal. The California Mission Indians receive a comparatively intensive service—educational, medical, and social. Their per capita cost in 1930 was $50.40, of which all except $0.40 was gratuitous. For the whole of California, outside Yuma (18,509 of the 19,197 Indians) the total per capita expenditures in 1930 was $24.55, of which $24 was gratuitous. For the Pimas, numbering 4,449, the total per capita was $42.50, of which $39 was gratuitous.

In striking contrast are the reservations having substantial tribal funds or tribal incomes. At Mescalero, as already pointed out, the gratuitous expenditure per capita was $143 in 1930, and to this gratuitous amount, so large in comparison with the above examples, there was added a tribal fund expenditure of $163 per capita. At Jicarilla, to a gratuitous per capita of $131 there was added a tribal fund per capita of $102. For the Colorado Utes, to a gratuitous per capita of $92 there was added a tribal fund per capita of $94. Exceptions, as noted in the appended tabulation, are the Osages, the Klamaths, and Menominees, where the heavy per capita expenditure is levied chiefly against tribal funds.

The subcommittee has stated above that at the Mescalero Apache reservation it found not a superior, not a more generous service to the Indians, as a result of the very large expenditures, but instead, that it found a meager and deficient service. Previously, the same state of affairs at the Klamath Reservation has been described by the subcommittee. The subcommittee in its many hearings on the reservations has found it to be almost uniformly true that the Indians who are surrendering tens, even hundreds of thousands a year from their tribal funds in payment for agency services and in whose name large gratuities also are being spent, are no more served, and no better served, than those living on reservations dependent on gratuities.

In sum: The subcommittee finds that the past and continuing use of tribal funds by the Indian Bureau is of little benefit to the Indians. It means, if continued as at present, the ultimate dissipation of the Indian estate, with no human gains to the Indians and not even a saving of expense to the United States. That the policy of to-day is not different from that of earlier days is shown by a comparison of the totals of tribal funds from the four Apache Reservations, asked for and secured in the fiscal year 1930 and the fiscal year 1932, for "general support and administration." (As explained above, the actual expenditures from tribal funds have been larger.)

| | 1930 | 1932 |
|---|---|---|
| San Carlos Apache | $89,300 | $107,500 |
| Fort Apache | 135,300 | 143,900 |
| Mescalero Apache | 55,000 | 55,000 |
| Jicarilla Apache | 60,000 | 60,000 |
| Total | 339,600 | 366,400 |

The showing is in fact more serious than the above comparison on its face would indicate. Since 1930 the chief source of replenishment of the funds of three of the four Apache Reservations has diminished or stopped altogether with the decline of the lumber market. At the Jicarilla Reservation the stoppage is permanent, all the timber having been now cut over; there will be no new timber income for 50 years or longer, according to the testimony of the superintendent of this reservation given at the subcommittee's hearings at the Jicarilla Reservation. The present policy, if it continues, means the complete destruction of many of the tribal funds at a very early date. It is a situation which as a whole calls for the immediate attention of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 22, 1931.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the wealth of all Indian tribes has been and now is steadily and rapidly dwindling except in the case of those tribal Indians on reservations in the Southwest, who are (a) unallotted and (b) still permitted to function through their own corporate institutions—I refer particularly to the New Mexico Pueblos—with some help from the Indian Bureau, and, in the case of the Navajos, with important help from the Indian traders. It happens that these intact groups of Indians do not possess natural resources inviting the exploiter; although the record of Navajo oil leasing, which was discussed at considerable length at the last session of Congress, requires correction of this statement, while the record of spoliation of Pueblo Indian lands, and of the present effort by the Indian Bureau to prevent the payment of compensation to the Pueblos for lands lost through Government dereliction, appears likewise to form an exception; even these tribes have seen their capital assets mishandled by the bureau in current years.

Other isolated exceptions are found on reservations containing no covetable natural resources, whose physical structure has made land allotment impossible; for example, the Cherokee Tribe of western North Carolina, now that the effort at forced allotment of this tribe's lands has been blocked, is in a situation comparable to that of some of the Pueblos.

THE DESTRUCTION OF INDIAN LIFE WHICH ACCOMPANIES THE DESTRUCTION OF INDIAN WEALTH

The recital of the destruction of Indian wealth (an unabated destruction) should not omit the consideration, ultimately more important, of that destruction of Indian ambition, industry, hope, self-respect, and generally of Indian human values, which has proceeded incidentally to the spoliation of the Indian property. I repeat my words used on the floor of this body on April 11 last:

* * * There has been a destruction of intangible assets no less striking. Most important among these has been the discouraging, indeed, the systematic repression and destruction, of tribal organization and tribal ambition. Individual initiative has been discouraged if not prohibited. The bureau has proceeded on the principle that the Indian should do nothing for himself which a paid employee of the Government conceivably might do for him. The Indian, though struggling to farm under irrigation projects, has been denied access to credit under conditions which would make success in agriculture impossible to any white man. This fact was recognized and clearly stated by Secretary Work in his annual report for 1927, but to the present date nothing has been done to remedy the situation. Neither the present Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has suggested any plan to meet this situation. The Indian has been trained to expect to fail; a sense of inferiority has been forced on him by the multiform tutelage in which he has been held, by the failures due to artificial restrictions and handicaps to which he has been foredoomed. A sense of hopelessness has been created by the spectacle of the steady melting away of all his material wealth through actions by a guardian from whom he, an Indian ward, could not even take refuge in the courts. * * *

THE BUREAU'S $53,000,000 IRRIGATION SYSTEM

Mr. President, it had been my purpose to deal extensively with the subject of Indian irrigation projects. A total of $53,151,698 belonging to the Government and the tribes has been invested in these projects, and after deducting all repayments by irrigationists to the Government and the tribes, there stands a net investment of $47,013,259. The net cost per irrigated acre, to the Government and the tribes, stands at $109 when the projects as a whole are considered; and to this cost must be added the cost to the irrigationists of preparing the land for the use of water, which exceeds $30 an acre on the average. The average value of this irrigated acreage is less than $60. Only 133,134 acres within all the projects are irrigated by the Indians. Within these projects, 191,423 acres formerly owned by Indians are now owned by whites, and 106,751 Indian-owned acres are leased by whites. White ownership of irrigated lands within the Indian projects has increased 95 per cent since 1924, and the Senate Indian Investigation Committee, reporting on January 10, last, found that substantially the entire Indian ownership of alloted lands within the Indian system will have been extinguished, and all the lands will have passed to white owners, within a brief period, unless reforms shall be instituted in the Indian Bureau's irrigation division and in the allotment system of the bureau.

Owing, however, to the limitations of time, I shall omit a proper discussion of these Indian irrigation projects, but shall endeavor to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate before adjournment. I shall, however, briefly call the attention of the Senate to one important feature in the situation. I do this because it sheds a flood of light on the policies and the results of the Indian Bureau in their entirety and points the way toward new policies, not only in Indian irrigation but in Indian administration as a whole.

INDIAN IRRIGATION AGAINST INDIAN BUREAU IRRIGATION

The Indian investigation committee of the Senate made, on January 11 last, an important report on Indian irrigation and related matters. Among the committee's recommendations is the one which I shall quote, as follows:

That the minor projects of Indian irrigation, summarized in group 2, Table 2, of the present report, shall continue to be administered by the local superintendencies of the Indian Bureau and the Indians themselves, with technical advice and assistance, as required, from the Reclamation Service of the Interior Department.

The table which is referred to by the subcommittee is of peculiar interest. This table sets up a comparison between two groups of the irrigation projects on Indian lands. Group 1 consists of the 29 projects built and administered by the irrigation division of the Indian Bureau, and group 2 consists of the 40 projects built and administered by the Indians themselves or by the local superintendents in cooperation with the Indians.

The group 1 projects, built and maintained by the Indian Bureau, represent a net cost to the Government and the Indian tribes of $39,959,546. The group 2 projects represent a net cost of $1,224,622.

Under the Group 1 projects, a total of 2,865 Indians are farming. Under the Group 2 projects, a total of 2,950 Indians are farming.

Under the Group 1 projects nearly three-fourths of the irrigated acreage is owned or leased by whites; while under the Group 2 projects only 3.9 per cent of the acreage is irrigated by whites.

The net cost, per irrigated acre, under the Group 1 projects, is 55.3 per cent greater than is the net cost per irrigated acre under the Group 2 projects.

The committee's report analyzes and explains these remarkable contracts, and the results are overwhelmingly favorable to the Group 2 projects—projects which the Indians themselves, or the Indians in cooperation with their local superintendents, have built and now continue to maintain.

I call attention, however, to the fact that the overwhelming bulk of the Government's expenditures have been made in the Group 1 projects, built and maintained by the Indian Bureau's irrigation division. These Group 1 projects have devoured a gross investment of $45,924,912. On previous occasions I have stated to the Senate the details of some of the projects falling under Group 1—details of fantastic extravagance, and of infinitesimal results.

I have mentioned this item in the important report of the Senate's Indian Investigation Committee, with the object of bringing into the focus of the Senate's attention that error which, in my judgment, is at the very foundation and heart of the Indian Bureau system.

THE INDIAN BUREAU'S FUNDAMENTAL ERROR

It is the error of taking away from the Indians both the power to act for themselves and the responsibility of acting for themselves. The bureau, increasingly through each year for the past 45 years, has proceeded in building up its centralized, overmanned machinery and personnel, with the effect of sucking out of the Indians their very life energies, and of charging enormous costs against the Government and the tribes, and of achieving a bureau system whose irresponsibility and inefficiency have become more and more extreme until at present the bureau, in most of its operations, appears as a conglomeration of destructive, and very expensive, operations unconnected with the real life and need of the Indians. The bureau, divorced from the purposes which brought about its creation, has reached the point where the Indians are almost forgotten and the bureau is its principal excuse for being.

I have dwelt upon the report of the investigation committee because it shows that even in a technological matter such as irrigation and reclamation is, or should be, the bureau has proved itself to be infinitely inferior in capacity to the Indians themselves. I wish that the Senators would examine this important report by the investigation committee, and I earnestly hope that the report will be given consideration by the new Secretary of the Interior.

INDIAN IRRIGATION SYSTEMS CENTURIES OLD

The history of Indian irrigation provides, as it were, a symbol and an embodiment of the history of the Indian Bureau. The pioneers of irrigation in the United States were the Indians themselves. When the white man came to America he found more than 100 Indian tribes farming under efficient irrigation systems built and maintained by the Indians through cooperative labor. These tribes were not only the Pueblos of New Mexico, whose irrigation systems the Indian Bureau has not yet destroyed, and which are at least a thousand years old.

When the Spanish missionaries entered the region which is now Arizona, they found numerous tribes, not Pueblos, practicing a highly efficient irrigation. Concerning the Pimas, the Jesuit missionary, Father Eusebio Kino, wrote in 1709 to the King of Spain: "They have very rich and fertile lands abounding in wheat, maize, beans, groves, and so forth." But not only were the Pimas at that date farming by irrigation. The valleys of San Pedro and Santa Cruz, in Arizona, were inhabited by a now extinct people, the Sobaipuris. The Sobaipuris numbered 4,500, and as Bolton, the historian, reports: "All of these Indians were then practicing agriculture by irrigation, and raising cotton for clothing, and maize, beans, calabashes, melons, and wheat for food." Likewise, the Papagos, when the Spaniards came, were found to be irrigating. The Indians along the Colorado River were farming in a manner identical with that familiar for thousands of years in the Nile delta of Egypt. Even at the date of the American Civil War, the Pima Tribe, under its ancient irrigation ditches, was producing large surplus crops, which supplied a portion of the food of United States troops in Arizona during the war.

While I have not examined the archæological findings, I am able to report, as a fact of Indian Bureau record, that many other tribes, outside of the Southwest area, were farming under efficient irrigation systems at a date prior to the beginning of irrigation construction by the Government in the areas where these Indians resided. Among the tribes outside Arizona and New Mexico who were thus farming were the Uintah and Ouray Tribes of my own State, and the Flathead Tribe of Montana.

These ancient irrigation enterprises, Indian-built and Indian-operated, cost the Government nothing at all. They were built and maintained through the cooperative labor of the tribes. The lands which they watered were fertile, and the tribes were self-maintaining under their irrigation systems. I may add that, in regions to the south of the Rio Grande, the Indians, before the coming of the white man, had carried their irrigation projects forward to a high degree of technological competition and perfection so that populations, dense even according to modern standards, were subsisting through Indian-built irrigation systems on the Mexican plateau.

THE BUREAU DESTROYED THE INDIAN SYSTEMS

What would have been the practicable, economical, statesmanlike policy of the Indian Bureau in the light of these facts? It would have been that identical policy which is now recommended, as a policy of reconstruction and salvage, by the Senate's Indian investigation committee. The Senate's committee finds that even to-day, the Indian-built and Indian-operated irrigation projects are very much more economical, more fertile, and more beneficial to the Indians than are the projects built and operated by the Indian Bureau.

A wise and humane policy, if it had been instituted 30 years ago, would have predicated itself upon the well-established and far-extended irrigation activities of the Indian tribes as of that date. The tribal operations would have been supplemented by such technological help as the tribes might need, and those tribes not yet farming by irrigation, but living in areas where irrigation was advantageous, would have been led to adopt methods similar to those of their fellow Indians who had so long farmed by irrigation.

The Indian Bureau adopted exactly the opposite policy. There were large tribal funds available for expenditure, and the Indian Bureau plunged into the most reckless spending of these funds; and in so doing it projected and built enormous irrigation systems which enveloped and destroyed the existing Indian irrigation systems. These bureau-built systems in nearly all cases were planned and constructed without reference to economic demand. In many cases, as repeatedly told in the report of the irrigation advisors to the Secretary of the Interior in 1928, the projects were built without due consideration of water supply, so that no water was available for the ditches when built. In still other cases soil conditions were ignored, just as the bureau has continued to ignore them. The San Carlos Apache Reservation presents a contemporary case, where a large investment of Indian tribal funds was sunk by the Indian Bureau in an extensive irrigation project on soil later found to be entirely worthless because of its alkalied condition. I am informed that on the Pima Reservation within the last two years irrigation projects costing hundreds of thousands of dollars have been found largely useless because they were placed in areas where the soil did not justify irrigation. In still other cases the bureau expended millions of dollars for irrigation systems in regions where the precipitation was adequate for dry farming, and, again, in regions where the growing period was too short to permit of farming. Among the last-mentioned cases are the Blackfeet and Klamath projects, which I discussed last year.

In addition to thus ignoring the Indians' own irrigation systems, and in addition to physically destroying these systems, the bureau ignored the tribal organizations which through previous decades and centuries had built and maintained the irrigation systems. In other words, the bureau ignored and in many cases deliberately obliterated the social and economic institutions which, when the bureau started its own enterprise, were taking care of the Indian irrigation needs with no cost to the Government.

And added to these mistakes and follies, if not wrongs, the bureau proceeded to allot Indian lands within the irrigation projects with the result of forcing the rapid alienation of these lands through sales to whites and the leasing to whites of such lands as were not alienated.

THE FUTURE IRRIGATION POLICY

These historical facts, which I merely summarize and which are recited through hundreds of pages of the report of the Committee of Irrigation advisors, are of importance because they have an immediate bearing on future policy. It is of tremendous importance that the Indians themselves are even to-day proving to be more efficient as builders and operators of irrigation systems than is the Indian Bureau. The future policy, equally necessary for governmental economy and for the tribal and individual development of the Indians, must be one of vesting in the Indians themselves the responsibility for their irrigation systems, with help from their local superintendents and with such technological help as may be necessary to be furnished by the General Reclamation Service.

The irrigation division of the Indian Office should be abolished and its functions as an overhead agency should be transferred to the General Reclamation Service, and the detailed administrative functions affecting the more than 100 Indian projects should be shifted back into the reservations themselves and wherever possible placed under control of the tribal councils, the superintendents always being expected to cooperate with the Indians in their agencies.

I have dwelt upon this phase of the irrigation situation because it shows how the Indian Service, in its totality, must be reorganized. I have repeatedly contrasted the Canadian and Mexican Indian policies and results with those of our Indian Bureau. The contrasts are striking at many points, but nowhere so striking as in the emphasis placed by Canada and Mexico on Indian self-help. These countries appear to be straining every nerve and exhausting their technical resources to permit and help and even to compel the Indians to support their own lives, to chart out their own destinies, to bear their own burdens, and to stand on their own feet as groups and as men. The whole effort of our Indian Bureau has been and is exactly the opposite. The bureau seeks to dictate Indian destiny. The bureau seeks to do for the Indians all that in their history they have done for themselves. The bureau methodically tries to multiply the paid jobs held by white men in order to do for the Indians, or to pretend to do for them, everything which normal, self-respecting men and communities do for themselves. Hence the limitless appetite of the Indian Bureau for appropriations to pay its employees. Hence the denial to the Indians of legal status and of legal rights and the facilities for individual and cooperative self-help. There can be nothing but increased wastes to the Government and increased destructions of Indian property and utter final demoralization for the Indians on the lines which our Indian Bureau is still apparently determined to pursue.

There is an economy of many millions a year to the Government, and there is hope and renewed life for the Indians on those lines, which reverse the present policy of the bureau, which are so well exhibited and demonstrated by the facts which I have cited about Indian irrigation.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, there is much more that should be said in connection with this important question and other features of the Indian problem presented for the consideration of the Senate and brought to the attention of the public; but I have already occupied so much of the time of the Senate that I must pretermit any further discussion. My object in presenting these matters is to challenge the attention of the bureau officials and those who are interested in the welfare of the Indians to the importance of the Indian problem, the derelictions of the Indian Bureau, and the imperative necessity of policies being adopted and measures enacted that will save the Indians and protect the remnants of their property from spoliation and destruction. Moreover, it is my desire that the new administration will take cognizance of the matters which I have discussed and will resolutely address itself to remedying an intolerable condition which has been so unfair and unjust to the wards of the Government. Legislation should be enacted that will completely reorganize the bureau and compel the abandonment of policies which have been so injurious and harmful to the Indians, and the adoption of measures that will bring succor and relief and protection and salvation to the Indians under the jurisdiction of the Government. The inefficiency and tyrannous bureaucratic system which now prevails and which controls the Indians must be destroyed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The clerk will report the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, line 10, after the word "Oregon," it is proposed to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$20,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 16, before the word "of," to strike out "$315,000" and insert "$373,000" and in line 20, after the word "Indians," to insert "and not to exceed $2,500 may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for paying in whole or in part expenses of Federal, State, or county extension agents and home-demonstration agents or specialists in extension work detailed for cooperative work in the Indian Service," so as to read:

For the purpose of developing agriculture and stock raising among the Indians, including necessary personnel, traveling and other expenses, and purchase of supplies and equipment $373,000, of which not to exceed $15,000 may be used to conduct agricultural experiments and demonstrations on Indian school or agency farms and to maintain a supply of suitable plants or seed for issue to Indians, and not to exceed $2,500 may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for paying in whole or in part expenses of Federal, State, or county extension agents and home-demonstration agents or specialists in extension work detailed for cooperative work in the Indian Service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I desire to offer an amendment on page 15 by striking out part of line 8 and all of lines 9, 10, and 11. I presume that that may not be done at the present time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment would not be in order at this time under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the agreement which has been entered into, committee amendments are to be considered first; but there are not many amendments, and probably the Senator's amendment may be offered in a short time.

Mr. KING. I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 24, after the figures "$75,000," to insert "Klamath, Oreg., $3,000," and in line 25, after the words "in all," to strike out "$140,000" and insert "$143,000," so as to read:

Industrial assistance (tribal funds): For the construction of homes for individual members of the tribes; the purchase for sale to them of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, building material, and other equipment and supplies; and for advances to old, disabled, or indigent Indians for their support, and Indians having irrigable allotments to assist them in the development and cultivation thereof, the unexpended balances of the appropriations under this head contained in the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933, and the act of June 27, 1932 (47 Stat. 335), are hereby continued available during the fiscal year 1934, together with the following amounts payable from tribal funds on deposit in the Treasury: San Carlos, Arizona, $50,000; Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache, Oklahoma, $75,000; Klamath, Oregon, $3,000; Truxton Canyon, Arizona, $15,000; in all, $143,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Education," on page 33, line 23, after the name "Texas," to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That $6,000 of this appropriation shall be used for aid of the public-school districts of Uintah and Duchesne Counties, Utah," so as to read:

For the support of Indian schools not otherwise provided for, and other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, including tuition for Indian pupils attending public schools, $3,590,800: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of this appropriation may be used for the support and education of deaf and dumb or blind, physically handicapped, or mentally deficient Indian children: Provided further, That $4,500 of this appropriation may be used for the education and civilization of the Alabama and Coushatta Indians in Texas: Provided further, That $6,000 of this appropriation shall be used for aid of the public-school districts of Uintah and Duchesne Counties, Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 2, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$203,000; in all, $475,600" and insert "$192,000, to be immediately available; in all, $464,600," so as to read:

For lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of buildings at Indian schools not otherwise provided for, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $272,600; for construction of physical improvements, $192,000, to be immediately available; in all, $464,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 7, after the name "New Mexico" and the colon, to strike out "Eastern Navajo, repairs to school building, $11,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not more than $7,500 out of this appropriation shall be expended for new construction at any one school or institution except for new construction authorized as follows: New Mexico, Northern Navajo, construction of heating and power systems, $57,000; North Dakota, Turtle Mountain, improvement of water supply and sewer system, $17,000; South Dakota, Pine Ridge, central heating plant, $38,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., on page 37, after line 16, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the Interior Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, for shop building, including equipment, is hereby continued available until June 30, 1934.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask my colleague how much is the unexpended balance, and is it deemed necessary for further expenditure?

Mr. SMOOT. The amount is $3,500. That, I will say to the Senator, is for the shop building, in order to make it of real assistance to them. We might just as well complete it now as to have any further delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 5, after the figures "$128,680," to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1932, for new school building and auditorium, including equipment, is hereby continued available for the same purpose until June 30, 1934," so as to read:

Pipestone, Minn.: For 325 pupils, $97,440; for pay of superintendent, drayage, and general repairs and improvements, $17,740; for septic tank and sewer system, $13,500, to be immediately available; in all, $128,680: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1932, for new school building and auditorium, including equipment, is hereby continued available for the same purpose until June 30, 1934.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 9, after the figures "$116,000," to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the Interior Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, for central heating plant, is hereby continued available for the same purpose until June 30, 1934," so as to read:

Wahpeton, N. Dak.: For 350 pupils, $104,250; for pay of superintendent, drayage, and general repairs and improvements, $11,750; in all, $116,000: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the Interior Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, for central heating plant, is hereby continued available for the same purpose until June 30, 1934.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 15, to increase the appropriation for certain nonreservation boarding schools from $3,745,000 to $3,755,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall have an amendment to offer to this amendment in the event that an amendment which I shall offer to the text earlier is accepted; but if my amendment is rejected, then I shall have no amendment to offer. I suggest to my colleague that this be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not agree to it, and then, if my colleague's amendment is agreed to, we will revert to this?

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Conservation of health," on page 47, line 10, after the word "appropriation," to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the unexpended balances of the appropriations contained in the Interior Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1932, for construction and equipment of the Albuquerque Sanatorium and employees' quarters, New Mexico, and the Sioux Sanatorium and employees' quarters, South Dakota, are hereby continued available for the same purposes until June 30, 1934.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I submit an inquiry.

In one part of the bill there is an amendment which refers to an unexpended balance. I have investigated and find that there was no unexpended balance. I am wondering if the Senator has investigated to determine whether these amendments now being offered, and which assume that there is an unexpended balance, accurately state the facts. In other words, were appropriations made, and out of those appropriations can it be accurately stated that there are some unexpended balances?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to my colleague that the same question arose last year. Therefore I had the Bureau of Indian Affairs send a complete list showing the amounts of the unexpended balances, and I assure the Senator that those balances are there.

Mr. KING. I know there has been criticism of this policy of reappropriating unexpended balances without knowing what they were; and I am advised that in the case of some unexpended balances there have been diversions of the funds from the very purpose for which they were intended. It seems to me we ought to adopt the policy that unexpended amounts should be covered into the Treasury, and when appropriations are needed the Government officials should present facts to committees and to Congress sufficient to justify further appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know of a year when we have ever been so particular about this very subject as this year. There is to-day an unexpended balance of $1,021,989; and I think these two items—this one, and the one we acted upon before—are about the total amount we have asked for.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that these are small buildings that ought to be completed; and, of course, it would be a waste of money unless they were.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General support and administration," on page 51, line 2, after the name "Klamath," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$44,900," and in line 3, after the words "in all," to strike out "$54,570" and insert "$49,470," so as to read:

Oregon: Klamath, $44,900; Umatilla, $4,570; in all, $49,470.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 11, after the name "Colville," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$35,000," and in line 14, after the words "in all," to strike out "$37,740" and insert "$42,740," so as to read:

Washington: Colville, $35,000; Neah Bay, $4,740; Puyallup, $2,000, of which $1,000 shall be available for the upkeep of the Puyallup Indian Cemetery; Taholah (Quinaielt), $1,000; in all, $42,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 16, after the name "Keshena," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$55,000," and in line 21, after the words "in all," to strike out "$52,000" and insert "$57,000," so as to read:

Wisconsin: Lac du Flambeau, $2,000; Keshena, $55,000, including $5,000 for monthly allowances, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to such old and indigent members of the Menominee Tribe as it is impracticable to place in the home for old and indigent Menominee Indians, and who reside with relatives or friends; in all, $57,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, at the end of line 23, to increase the total appropriation for general support of Indians and administration of Indian property under the jurisdiction of certain agencies, to be paid from the funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribes, etc., from $524,950 to $929,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Reclamation," on page 67, after line 9, to insert:

Interchange of appropriations: Ten per cent of the foregoing amounts shall be available interchangeably for expenditures on the reclamation projects named; but not more than 10 per cent shall be added to the amount appropriated for any one of said projects, except that should existing works or the water supply for lands under cultivation be endangered by floods or other unusual conditions, an amount sufficient to make necessary emergency repairs shall become available for expenditure by further transfer of appropriation from any of said projects upon approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like some explanation of that. It seems to me rather an unwise method of legislating to allow a latitude of 20 per cent to change appropriations from one purpose to another.

An appropriation of a million dollars is made for project A, and 10 per cent of it may be diverted and used for project C or D or E, or some other enterprise. Congress might have been unwilling to add 10 per cent to project C, D, or F, and yet this provision gives to the department that has the spending the discretion to take from one project money appropriated for one purpose and use it for an entirely different purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall be very happy to make the explanation which the Senator desires as to how this provision happens to be in the bill.

The Senate will recall that last year all the appropriations in this bill were cut in the aggregate 10 per cent. It will be remembered also that the department and the department heads all said that that would destroy the department; that they could not get along on the amount appropriated, and many such expressions as that.

It was believed by our committee at the time that in order that no injustice should be done in any particular place within the department an interchangeable fund of 10 per cent should be provided, and it was provided in the bill last year. I want to add that I think the department is in just as good condition with the 10 per cent cut, and the 10 per cent interchangeable amount, as it was last year with the larger appropriation.

The Senator will recall that the Senate cut down the appropriations of the Interior Department from some $55,000,000 to $45,000,000, with, however, the permission given to the head of the department to make this interchangeable 10 per cent arrangement. This year our bill is still less than the $45,000,000. It is $43,000,000. We have cut it still further. Although the department last year claimed that they could not get along with the cut that was then made, the Congress has cut the amount this year by a little more than $2,000,000.

It will be remembered that yesterday we agreed to the Bratton amendment requiring all departments to cut down their expenditures 5 per cent. That amendment undoubtedly will become the law, as I believe. With that the law, and with these appropriations reduced as they have been, it seemed to the committee very wise that we should continue for one more year the 10 per cent interchangeable amount; and that is the reason for it, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the situation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask my colleague if this money may be diverted to pay larger salaries or increase the personnel in any branch.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say to the Senator that that is not the object. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has explained the whole object of the amendment, and I could not say anything more than he has said. That was the object that the committee had; and I think, taken as a whole, the result of it will be a saving in the end.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, it certainly worked well last year. The Senator will recall that the heads of the bureaus in that department, and the head of the department, all said that they could not get along on the $45,000,000 appropriation. With this 10 per cent interchangeable fund they did get along well, however, and the department now is in just as good condition as it was last year. They are making no complaint; and even though the total was reduced from $55,000,000 to $45,000,000 last year, we have still further reduced it this year by about $2,000,000, as I remember the sum.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to my colleague that another thing is this: There are some places where it is absolutely impossible to take off the 10 per cent, and there are other places where the department officials feel that they could take off 12 per cent instead of 10 per cent, and allow the 2 per cent to apply upon items that it is impossible to reduce; and we allowed that privilege.

Mr. BRATTON. And this allows them to meet emergent situations which may arise at different places within the service.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, in line 6, after the word "thereto," to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$325,000," and in line 7, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$265,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$280,000," so as to read:

Geologic surveys: For geologic surveys in the various portions of the United States and chemical and physical researches relative thereto, $325,000, of which not to exceed $280,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I note that there is an increase in this appropriation of $25,000, and the bill provides that $280,000 of the appropriation of $325,000 shall be spent for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The appropriation is under the head of "Geologic Surveys." I presume that surveys are to be made throughout the United States to determine the geological formation of the country; and yet, while it is presumed that these investigations are to be made in the field, the greater part of the $280,000 is to be spent by the bureau here in Washington for the salaries of its numerous employees.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to explain to my colleague the reason why that is done this year.

The field work has been away ahead of the work in the District of Columbia. The surveys are no good whatever to the citizens of the United States unless the reports are prepared in the District of Columbia, where everything is put into shape for the public's information. The committee thought it undesirable to spend any more money in the field for surveys when we have two or three years' accumulation here. Therefore we give them the money to get the information out where it was intended in the first place it should go. If it does not reach the hands of the men interested in the development of the resources of the United States, then all of the other work is wasted. It is no good lying here in the departments. Therefore we gave this amount, in order to permit that to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 11, to insert:

For continuation of the investigation of the mineral resources of Alaska, $30,000, to be available immediately, of which amount not to exceed $15,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have had a number of complaints, one from a resident of Alaska, against any further appropriations for the investigation of the mineral resources of Alaska, and also a protest against further appropriations for the so-called Alaska Railroad. I presume the latter item is also carried in this bill. I have repeatedly called attention to the burden this railroad is upon the taxpayers of the United States. My recollection is that assurances have been given that the railroad would soon be self-sustaining, or that some plan would be adopted that would relieve the Government of further costs in its operation. But it seems there is to be no end to the demand for Government gratuities or subsidies.

Mr. SMOOT. It is carried in the bill. The estimate was for $60,000 for Alaska and $30,000 to be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia. We report $30,000 to be available for Alaska, and $15,000, or one-half the amount that was estimated, for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The Delegate from Alaska appeared before the committee. He stressed the fact that gold has been discovered in a new district in Alaska, which is going to be of untold benefit to the people of Alaska. He virtually demanded that we appropriate the $60,000 estimated for, based upon the facts he presented, but the committee thought the best thing to do was to cut it in two and see what happens. If it becomes really necessary, the additional amount can be provided in the extra session of Congress, which no doubt will be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 22, after the word "binding," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$120,000," and in line 24, after the words "in all," to strike out "200,000" and insert "$220,000," so as to read:

Printing and binding, etc.: For printing and binding, $120,000; for preparation of illustrations, $15,000; and for engraving and printing geologic and topographic maps, $85,000; in all, $220,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 11, after the word "thereto," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$225,000," so as to read:

Mineral leasing: For the enforcement of the provisions of the acts of October 20, 1914 (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 435), October 2, 1917 (U. S. C., title 30, sec. 141), February 25, 1920 (U. S. C., title 30, sec. 181), and March 4, 1921 (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 444), and other acts relating to the mining and recovery of minerals on Indian and public lands and naval petroleum reserves; and for every other expense incident thereto, including supplies, equipment, expenses of travel and subsistence, the construction, maintenance, and repair of necessary camp buildings and appurtenances thereto, $225,000, of which amount not to exceed $40,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 24, to change the total appropriation for the United States Geological Survey from $1,927,500 to $2,027,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Park Service," on page 77, line 12, after the figures "$3,000," to strike out "(which rate shall be subject to any compensation reduction or furlough without pay retirement effective during the fiscal year 1934;" in line 22, after the word "work" to strike out "$49,200" and insert "$54,200;" and in line 23, after the words "in all," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$55,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

Acadia National Park, Me.: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including $3,000 for George B. Dorr as superintendent, $3,000 for temporary clerical services for investigation of titles and preparation of abstracts thereof of lands donated to the United States for inclusion in the Acadia National Park, and not exceeding $1,800 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $54,200; for the construction of physical improvements, $800; in all, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 8, after the word "work," to strike out "$18,500" and insert "$25,000," and in line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$26,500," so as to read:

Lassen Volcanic National Park, Calif.: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including not exceeding $1,000 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $25,000; for construction of physical improvements, $1,500; in all, $26,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 20, after the word "work," to strike out "$38,500" and insert "$40,940," and in line 22, after the words "in all," to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$47,440," so as to read:

Zion National Park, Utah: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including not exceeding $1,150 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $40,940; for construction of a checking station, employees' quarters, and water system at the east entrance, $6,500; in all, $47,440.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not offer any amendment to these various appropriations for the national parks, but I want to register my protest against the policy of the Government in creating so many parks and monuments, and appropriating unnecessarily large amounts for the maintenance of no inconsiderable number of the same.

I think that in this period of depression, when the imperative needs of the country are so great and its revenues are so small, drastic reductions should be made whenever possible. I do not underestimate the value and advantages of parks, but there can be extravagance in the creation and maintenance of national parks. Expenditures should bear some relation to revenues. What might be justified in days of prosperity may be condemned in periods of adversity.

There has been a mania to establish national parks. I have had many communications favoring the creation of more national parks—two or three in my own State. It seems to be the understanding that every interesting or beautiful or unique spot of mother earth must be converted into a national park, to be maintained at the expense of the Federal Government.

I hope the new administration will make a comprehensive study of the park question and adopt a sound and sane policy that will meet all legitimate needs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 22, after the word "work," to strike out "$63,000" and insert "$70,000," and on page 87, line 2, after the words "in all," to strike out "$140,000" and insert "$147,000," so as to read:

Forest protection and fire prevention: For the control and the prevention of spread of forest insects and tree diseases, including necessary personnel and equipment for such work, $70,000; for fire-prevention measures, including necessary personnel and fire-prevention equipment, $68,400; and for fire-prevention improvements within national parks and national monuments, $8,600, including not exceeding $3,800 for a storehouse and $1,600 for a lookout station; in all, $147,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Temporary government for the Virgin Islands," on page 94, line 16, after the name "St. John," to strike out "$105,000" and insert "$98,500"; in line 17, after the name "St. Croix," to strike out "$105,000; in all, $210,000" and insert "$98,500; in all, $197,000," so as to read:

For defraying the deficits in the treasuries of the municipal governments because of the excess of current expenses over current revenues for the fiscal year 1934, municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, $98,500, and municipality of St. Croix, $98,500; in all, $197,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 24, after the word "than," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$90,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the amount herein appropriated for each municipal government shall be expended only if an equivalent amount is raised by municipal revenues and applied to the operating costs of the respective government, except that for the fiscal year 1934 the contribution to either municipal government shall not be less than $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 1, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$105,000" and insert "$98,500," and in line 2, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$105,000," and insert "$98,500," so as to make the further proviso read:

Provided further, That should the revenues of the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, during the fiscal year 1934, exceed $98,500, and/or the revenues of the municipality of St. Croix exceed $98,500, such excess revenues may be expended for municipal improvements and operating costs of the municipalities under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, line 4, to increase the total appropriation for the Howard University from $632,500 to $1,092,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, on page 15, line 9, I move to strike out the following language:

And such other purposes, except per capita payments, as may be.

With that language omitted, the provision would read:

Purchase of land and water rights, and so forth, Pueblo Indians, New Mexico (tribal funds): For the purchase of additional land and water rights, development of water for irrigation and domestic use, purchase of equipment for industrial advancement of direct benefit to the several pueblos involved, as follows:

The object of the amendment, Mr. President, is to conform the appropriation to the so-called Pueblo Land Board act approved June 7, 1924.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, according to my recollection, the law would not permit the purchase of equipment for industrial advancement. Of course, the Senator from New Mexico knows better than I, but the statute, according to my recollection, provides that the money shall be used for the purchase of additional lands and water rights, and the development of water for irrigation and domestic uses, but does not authorize the purchase of equipment for industrial advancement, and certainly not for other purposes.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I have asked to have stricken out the words "and such other purposes."

Mr. KING. I note that, but I was wondering whether the Senator's amendment is not a little too broad. Should he not move to strike out the words "purchase of equipment for industrial advancement," in order that there may be no conflict between this provision and the existing law?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I have the act before me. It reads:

That all sums of money which may hereafter be appropriated by the Congress of the United States for the purpose of paying in whole or in part any liability found or decreed under this act from the United States to any pueblo or to any of the Indians of any pueblo, shall be paid over to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall use such moneys at such times and in such amounts as may seem wise and proper for the purpose of the purchase of lands and water rights to replace those which have been lost to said pueblo or to said Indians, or for purchase or construction of reservoirs, irrigation works, or the making of other permanent improvements upon, or for the benefit of, lands held by said pueblo or said Indians.

That is the language of the act.

Mr. KING. I think it would not include the purchase of equipment for industrial advancement. If the Senator desires it, however, I shall not object.

Mr. BRATTON. I am not willing to have just the language "and such other purposes" included. With that stricken out I am content to have the committee text stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will not the Senator from New Mexico state the amendment he desires to offer?

Mr. BRATTON. On page 15, line 9, I move to strike out the language "and such other purposes, except per capita payments, as may be."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have offered and had printed an amendment beginning on line 20, page 13, to strike out beginning with the word "Provided," to the end of the sentence. I find, on further examination, that the proviso covers not only attorneys but other employees. I do not desire to strike out the provision as to other employees. I think they ought to be under the civil service. So I modify my amendment and move to strike out, on line 22, the words "attorneys and other."

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, line 22, the Senator from Oklahoma moves to strike out of the proviso the words "attorneys or other," so that the proviso would read:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the payment of employees unless appointed after a competitive examination by the Civil Service Commission and from an eligible list furnished by such commission.

Mr. SMOOT. If we take the attorneys out, it will mean that they will not come under the civil service.

Mr. GORE. That is the point.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I doubt the wisdom of that. We have never had any trouble in the past with this. I want to say to the Senator frankly that I do not know just what the effect would be, but if he desires to have the amendment agreed to, I will accept it, and let it go to conference, and then I will look into the matter.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I would be glad to have the amendment agreed to and taken to conference. It will lift some six or seven attorneys out of the civil service who never ought to have been placed under the civil service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has been compelled to leave the Chamber on account of illness, and he has left with me three amendments he desires to have proposed to the bill. At his request I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, the Senator from Utah, on behalf of the Senator from Montana, moves to strike out lines 20 to 22, inclusive, as follows:

For pay of judges of Indian courts where tribal relations now exist, at rates to be fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $15,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am sure that the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is chairman, and of which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is a member, unanimously reached the conclusion that this item ought not to be retained. I call upon the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to give his view with respect to the item.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this question has been discussed in years past. The courts referred to ought to exist. I see no reason on earth why this item should be stricken out.

Mr. KING. May I say to my colleague that statements have been made to me by Indians, as well as by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] that these Indian courts, so-called, are mere jokes, if that is not too temperate an expression. The agent in charge names the persons who are to be judges, so-called. They are his creatures, they represent him, their voice is his voice, and their judgment is his judgment. Indians have complained to me that the maintenance of these so-called courts is a disadvantage to the Indians; that they act in an arbitrary manner and exercise authority not judicial, and often most oppressive. Many of the Indians are very much opposed to them, and the Senator from Montana asked me to tender the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator how we are going to have order on the reservation if we do not have courts there? I can not think of anything that would tend to bring about more disorder on a reservation than to eliminate this item from the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on some reservations the Indian courts are doing pretty good work. On other reservations they do not seem to function at all. It is largely a matter dependent upon the superintendent. If they have the right kind of a superintendent the courts, I think, perform a good function for the Indians. Generally some old Indian is the judge and he gets a salary ranging from $30 to $50 a month and sometimes not even that much. It is about the only means they have of punishing for offenses that are committed by the Indians on the reservations. I agree with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that in many cases the courts do not amount to anything at all and are a joke, but on reservations where they have a good live superintendent and he is interested in the Indians, they seem to function very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah on behalf of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] I send to the desk another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10 strike out lines 23 and 24, and on page 11 strike out lines 1 to 3, inclusive, as follows:

For pay of Indian police, including chiefs of police, not to exceed $70 per month each and privates at not to exceed $50 per month each, to be employed in maintaining order, and for purchase of equipment and supplies, $150,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we are going to have the courts we have to have the Indian police. They are all hooked together. Both of the items are placed in the bill in order that there shall be some agency to keep order. If we strike out this item we might as well strike out the previous item.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can only say that those members of the committee who have been making a searching investigation for two or three years of the Indian situation and visiting all the reservations, as I understand it, favor the amendment. At any rate, one of the most active and earnest in making the investigation was the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. He is very much in favor of the amendment. I can not speak with any authority, but in his behalf I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the request of the junior Senator from Montana I send to the desk another amendment and in his behalf ask the adoption of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, strike out lines 4 to 6, as follows:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors and deleterious drugs, including peyote, among Indians, $95,300.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the same principle applies here as to the last two items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment on page 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, strike out lines 1 to 4, as follows:

Expenses of Indian commissioners: For expenditures of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $11,430, of which not to exceed $6,330 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this appropriation has been carried in the Interior Department appropriation bill for years. I do not know exactly how long it has been carried. It is sort of a continuing appropriation for a board of 10 or 12 people appointed from various parts of the country called the Board of Indian Commissioners. They visit Indian reservations, make some investigations, and make recommendations to the department. I think many of the members of the board are very capable people and interested in Indian matters. But they have no particular authority. The appropriation was cut from $12,500 last year to $11,430, the same amount that is proposed this year.

We have a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs operating under a resolution adopted by the Senate to investigate Indian matters throughout the country. We have been continuing those investigations for some five or six years. I think the subcommittee has done a great deal of good. We have recommended certain legislation, and some of it has been enacted into law. We have taken up matters with the department and have gotten the department to change its methods in some respects. We have created some interest in the Indians among the white people living in the districts contiguous to where the Indians live and have brought about in many instances better conditions for the Indians.

I introduced a resolution at the beginning of this session providing for $10,000 for a continuation of this work by the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate. The resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I went before the committee. There seemed to be some objection to continuing the work of our subcommittee. I simply want to make the point that we can save $11,430 here and continue the investigating work by our committee. There are a number of reservations that need to be visited and investigations made and some work done on things recommended to be done by that committee. I am not going to be chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs after this session, and I do not know who will be, but I should like to see that work continued. I can not see any particular value in continuing this expense for the Board of Indian Commissioners. I think it might well be cut out and we might well make a saving of that much to the Indians.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not believe the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota should be agreed to. The Board of Indian Commissioners was created, as I remember, in 1869. It is composed of 10 of the most distinguished philanthropic persons in the country. The members of the commission receive no compensation. They devote their time without mercenary consideration to the services which they perform. Some years ago, when acting as chairman of a joint commission of the two Houses to investigate Indian affairs, it was my conclusion that the Board of Indian Commissioners perform a very helpful and advantageous service.

I am going to place in the RECORD a list of the commissioners who are now serving. The commission now is composed of Samuel A. Eliot, D. D., of Boston, Mass.; Warren K. Moorehead, of Andover, Mass.; Frank Knox, of Chicago, Ill.; Malcolm McDowell, Wilmette, Ill.; Hugh L. Scott, whom every Senator well knows.

Let me digress to say that General Scott is perhaps more familiar than any other living man with the history of the Indians and with their problems. It will be recalled that General Scott went into the West at the time of the Custer raid, and during all the period that has elapsed since then he has been an active student of Indian problems. He is well known to the Indians, and they have great affection for him. He devotes his time and his services and receives no compensation whatsoever. The same is true, as I have already stated, of the other members of the commission.

The remaining members of the commission are Mrs. Flora Warren Seymour, of Chicago; John J. Sullivan, of Philadelphia; Mary Vaux Walcott, of Washington, D. C., who is the widow of the late Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. She is a renowned philanthropist and very much interested in Indian troubles and affairs. G. E. E. Lindquist, of Lawrence, Kans., and Charles H. T. Lowndes, of Easton, Md., are the remaining members.

A brief history of this commission, together with a copy of the Executive order issued by the then President of the United States when the commission was created, will be placed in the RECORD. General Grant's order defines the duties of the commission. Notwithstanding the fact that sometimes the commission does not function as effectively as at other times, it is a body of very renowned citizens who have safeguarded the rights of the Indians in many instances during the last few years. I think it would be unfortunate to deprive the commission of its appropriation, which would be the equivalent of denying it the opportunity to function.

Mr. President, I ask leave to place in the RECORD the data to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The data are as follows:

THE BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS

The Board of Indian Commissioners, which was created in 1869, is a body of 10 unpaid citizens appointed by the President from persons "eminent for intelligence and philanthropy." They visit and inspect Indian agencies and other branches of the Indian Service and confer with the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on questions relating to the administration of Indian affairs.

The appropriation for the expenses of the board is to pay for traveling expenses and for maintaining an office in Washington. The members of the board travel in all parts of the Indian country, visiting reservations, schools, hospitals, and all other activities of the Federal Government which are conducted for the welfare of the Indians. Reports are filed with the Secretary of the Interior following the trips made by the board members, and these in turn are transmitted to the Office of Indian Affairs. From 50 to 70 units of the Indian Service are visited each year. The board holds three or more meetings in Washington each year, and conferences are held with the officials of the Department of the Interior in regard to various questions involved in the management of the affairs of the Indians.

On the membership of the board are lawyers, physicians, military officers, clergymen, and others who have an interest in promoting the progress and welfare of the Indians of the country. The board makes an annual report giving its recommendations and observations on the Federal Government's work for the advancement of the Indians.

Because of its somewhat independent character, the board is in a position to impartially and disinterestedly make surveys of conditions on Indian reservations and in Indian schools. The broad latitude permitted by law and Executive order enables it to secure information and well-founded opinions regarding the difficult problems involved in forwarding the Indian's social and economic progress which are not generally available to salaried employees.

MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS

* * * * * * *

Samuel A. Eliot, D. D., Boston, Mass., was appointed to the Board of Indian Commissioners in 1909, and has served as chairman since 1928. He is the son of the late Charles W. Eliot, former president of Harvard University. He served as secretary and later president of the American Unitarian Association for a period of 30 years. He is now pastor of the Arlington Street Church (Unitarian) in Boston. He has been actively interested in a number of educational institutions and has traveled extensively in the Indian country for the last 20 years.

Warren K. Moorehead, Andover, Mass., has been a member of the board since 1908. He is head curator of the department of archæology of Phillips-Andover Academy. He has conducted many archæological expeditions in various parts of the country and has written numerous books and papers on archæological research. He has been interested in Indian affairs for many years.

Frank Knox, Chicago, Ill., was appointed a member of the board in 1911 when editor of the Sault Ste. Marie (Mich.) News. He later moved to Manchester, N. H., and became editor and proprietor of the Manchester Union and Leader. He served as general manager of the Hearst newspapers from 1928 to 1931, and now is proprietor and editor of the Chicago Daily News. He served in the Spanish War and the World War. He has long been interested in public affairs; he recently served as chairman of the antihoarding committee appointed by President Hoover. He has made investigations of Indians in Utah, Colorado, Arizona, and California.

Malcolm McDowell, Wilmette, Ill., was appointed a board member by President Wilson in 1917. He served as the board's secretary from 1915 to 1931. He is a newspaper man by profession and is now on the staff of the Chicago Daily News. He has traveled in all parts of the Indian country and has written numerous documents upon the Indians and their problems.

Hugh L. Scott, Princeton, N. J., is a major general, United States Army, retired. He was appointed a member of the board in February, 1919. After his graduation from West Point he served in numerous Indian campaigns from 1876 to 1891; served in the Cuban and Philippine campaigns from 1898 to 1906. Had charge of the Fort Sill Apache Indians in Oklahoma, and took an important part in the settlement of Indian troubles in the Southwest. Was Chief of Staff of the Army at the beginning of the World War, was a member of the United States military commission to Russia, and commanded Camp Dix, N. J., until the end of the war. He is recognized as about the best-informed officer in the Army on Indian matters, and has written various reports and monographs on the plains Indians. For several years he has been chairman of the New Jersey State Highway Commission, offices at Trenton, N. J.

Flora Warren Seymour (Mrs. George Steele Seymour), Chicago, Ill., was appointed a member of the board in October, 1921. She was in the Indian Service from 1909 to 1915, is a lawyer, and in recent years has written books on historical subjects and the affairs of the American Indian.

John J. Sullivan, Philadelphia, Pa., was appointed a member of the board in 1924. He is actively engaged in the practice of law and is also interested in the banking business in Philadelphia. He is the author of numerous books on legal subjects and lectures at the University of Pennsylvania. He has made regular trips to the Indian country since his appointment to the board.

Mary Vaux Walcott, Washington, D. C. She was appointed a member of the board in 1927. She is the widow of the late Dr. Charles D. Walcott, former secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. She has traveled extensively in the West, is an artist of note and interested in scientific work, and has traveled widely in the Indian country.

G. E. E. Lindquist, Lawrence, Kans. He was appointed a member of the board in 1930, is missionary at large for the Society for Propagating Gospel Among the Indians, and has been active in missionary work among the Indians for about 20 years. He has written numbers of books on Indian subjects and has an intimate acquaintance with conditions throughout the Indian Service.

Charles H. T. Lowndes, Easton, Md., rear admiral, United States Navy, Medical Corps, retired, appointed to the board in 1930. Entered the Medical Corps of the Navy in 1889, served as a medical officer in Alaska, Nicaragua, the Philippines, and at sea; has been in charge of the naval hospitals at Washington and New York and after retirement for a time was medical director of the Georgetown University Hospital, Washington, D. C. Since becoming a board member has made investigations of the Indian medical service.

EXECUTIVE ORDER AND LAWS RELATING TO THE BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS

* * * * * * *

Executive order

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1869.

A commission of citizens having been appointed, under the authority of law, to cooperate with the administrative departments in the management of Indian affairs, consisting of William Welsh, of Philadelphia; John V. Farwell, Chicago; George H. Stuart, Philadelphia; Robert Campbell, St. Louis; W. E. Dodge, New York; E. S. Tobey, Boston; Felix R. Brunot, Pittsburgh; Nathan Bishop, New York; and Henry S. Lane, Indiana—the following regulations will, till further directions, control the action of said commission and of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in matters coming under their joint supervision:

1. The commission will make its own organization and employ its own clerical assistants, keeping its "necessary expenses of transportation, subsistence, and clerk hire, when actually engaged in said service," within the amount appropriated therefor by Congress.

2. The commission shall be furnished with full opportunity to inspect the records of the Indian Office and to obtain full information as to the conduct of all parts of the affairs thereof.

3. They shall have power to inspect, in person or by subcommittee, the various Indian superintendencies and agencies in the Indian country; to be present at payment of annuities, at consultations or councils with Indians; and when on the ground to advise superintendents and agents in the performance of their duties.

4. They are authorized to be present, in person or by subcommittee, at purchases of goods for Indian purposes and inspect said purchases, advising with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard thereto.

5. Whenever they shall deem it necessary or advisable that instructions of superintendents or agents be changed or modified, they will communicate such advice through the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to the Secretary of the Interior; and in like manner their advices as to changes in modes of purchasing goods or conducting the affairs of the Indian Bureau proper. Complaints against superintendents or agents or other officers will in the same manner be forwarded to the Indian Bureau or Department of the Interior for action.

6. The commission will at their board meetings determine upon the recommendations to be made as to the plans of civilizing or dealing with the Indians, and submit the same for action in the manner above indicated, and all plans involving the expenditure of public money will be acted upon by the Executive or the Secretary of the Interior before expenditure is made under the same.

7. The usual modes of accounting with the Treasury can not be changed, and all the expenditures, therefore, must be subject to the approvals now required by law and by the regulations of the Treasury Department, and all vouchers must conform to the same laws and requirements and pass through the ordinary channels.

8. All the officers of the Government connected with the Indian Service are enjoined to afford every facility and opportunity to said commission and their subcommittees in the performance of their duties and to give the most respectful heed to their advice within the limits of such officers' positive instructions from their superiors; to allow such commissioners full access to their records and accounts; and to cooperate with them in the most earnest manner to the extent of their proper powers in the general work of civilizing the Indians, protecting them in their legal rights, and stimulating them to become industrious citizens in permanent homes instead of following a roving and savage life.

9. The commission will keep such records or minutes of their proceedings as may be necessary to afford evidence of their action, and will provide for the manner in which their communications with and advice to the Government shall be made and authenticated.

LAWS

Appointment of Board of Indian Commissioners to be made by the President

(Sec. 2039, Revised Statutes)

There shall be a Board of Indian Commissioners, composed of not more than 10 persons, appointed by the President, solely, from men eminent for intelligence and philanthropy, and who shall serve without pecuniary compensation.

Agencies, etc., to be inspected by Board of Indian Commissioners

(Act of May 17, 1882 (22 Stat. L. 70))

Section 2040 of Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed. And hereafter the commission shall only have power to visit and inspect agencies and other branches of the Indian Service, and to inspect goods purchased for said service, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall consult with the commission in the purchase of supplies. The commission shall report their doings to the Secretary of the Interior.

Secretary to the Board of Indian Commissioners

(Sec. 2040, Revised Statutes)

The Board of Indian Commissioners mentioned in the preceding section (R. S. 2039) shall have power to appoint one of their own number as secretary, who shall be entitled to such reasonable compensation as the board may designate, payable from any moneys appropriated for the expenses of the board.

(Act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L. 521))

Hereafter the Board of Indian Commissioners are authorized to employ a secretary, not a member of said board, and pay his salary out of the appropriation herein made or which shall hereafter be made for said board.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to plead with the Senate not to accept the amendment. Gen. Hugh L. Scott did a great service in the State of Utah during the last Indian uprising in that State.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say that Hugh L. Scott will be just as much interested in the Indians whether he is a member of this board or not.

Mr. SMOOT. He has to have some help in the way of a clerk and some office expenses involved in collecting the information.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He devotes a large part of his time to the service. He travels all over the Indian country.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no. He is highway commissioner in New Jersey.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I was in the West two summers ago visiting my friend the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and found General Scott there spending a prolonged period visiting the reservations, going among the Indians, doing everything he could to encourage them and to promote their interests. I think a service like that is well worth the clerk hire which is required to perpetuate it. People of this character, who are willing to devote their efforts and time to a task of this nature, ought to receive some encouragement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is one case that I know of where General Scott was enabled to save a great many lives. There was an uprising among the Indians in the southeastern part of the State of Utah. Nobody could have handled the situation as General Scott did. He was on the spot before anyone called him. Not only that but there was not a life lost. There was a complete understanding brought about, and there has been no uprising since he was there years ago.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to say a word further, if I may. I appreciate the work General Scott has done, and the work other members of the board have done, but I still think General Scott would be interested in the Indians and do just as much for them as he is now even if he were not a member of this commission, because he has been interested in Indians for years and years.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this commission has been in existence for something over 60 years. Those who are familiar with Indian conditions at the present time would find it very difficult to explain the good work which it is said this commission has done during the 60 years in improving the condition of the Indians.

If the conditions could be any worse than they are at the present time, God help the Indians. That is the situation. Our committee last fall, out in the great State of California, found Indians who were living in an old hut plastered up with mud, the plaster falling out, and we could see through the roof in places. An old woman, who must have been 90 years of age or more, was sitting in the ashes near the little fireplace at the end of that little hut in order to keep warm. Conditions like that prevail all over that section of the country. Some of the $12,000 that is provided for here would take care of that old woman; and there are literally thousands of similar cases.

In South Dakota last year Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor, who is working out in the Black Hills, became interested in a group of Indians who were living near the Black Hills. He investigated and found that they were going hungry; that they were cold. He took their case up with the department, but could not get anything done. Finally he got in touch with some other officials here and obtained a number of Army blankets and sent them to those Indians. Again this winter he is doing the same kind of work. He donated out of his own herd beef cattle with which to feed the Indians last winter, and he got others to do the same. The Indians are still in desperate circumstances; and it seems to me, Mr. President, that this fund could be well saved and could be put to better use.

I have nothing against the commission nor the work they are doing; but, as I have previously said, they have no authority except to make some investigations. In the past, under former administrations, it was current talk that when complaint was made as to some reservation that conditions were not as they should be, the Indian Bureau would send out some of the members of the commission, and they would go out and apply a coat of whitewash and submit a report favorable to the department.

I do not think that the statement should be made about the present situation, however. Those who are on the commission at this time, especially those whom I know, are very high-grade people. I have known General Scott for years. He used to be in North Dakota and spent a great deal of time in the Army service there. I have nothing against him in the world; in fact I count him as a good friend of mine, but I do feel that this money might well be saved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the proviso commencing on line 25, page 28, as follows:

Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $55,000 contained in the Interior Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1932 (46 Stat. 1127), for purchase of sites for reservoirs, construction headquarters and administrative uses, is hereby made available for the same purpose until June 30, 1934.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this provision of the bill is a good deal of a "joker." In the first place, there is no unappropriated balance; there is no item to which it refers. It is a misrepresentation of the situation wherein it seeks to convey the impression that an unexpended balance is being continued available. There is no unexpended balance in the amount or for the purpose indicated. An item was carried in the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932. The Indian Bureau sought in the deficiency bill for the fiscal year 1933 to have the item of appropriation continued available. It was not expended, I may say, and the effort was made to have it continued available. The language, however, was stricken from the bill at the request of the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who acted, as I am informed, on the request of the Flathead Indian Tribe. The language in the pending bill provides a new appropriation but seeks to disguise it as an authorization for the appropriation of an unexpended balance.

However, the proviso is objectionable for reasons more essential than the improper and misleading character of its language. It is claimed by the Indians that a long course of arbitrary action and of a lack of frankness in dealing with Congress lie back of this proviso. It entails an effort to deprive the Flathead Tribe of Indians of valuable lands.

To make the situation plain, I will state that at different periods, going back 20 years, the Indian Bureau has taken possession of lakes and reservoir sites belonging to the Flathead Indian Tribe. Some of these lakes, Mr. President, because of their beauty, are to-day worth thousands of dollars, indeed, tens of thousands of dollars for summer homes, resorts, and as suitable places for people who are seeking recreation in the summer, but the Indian Bureau has taken possession of 15 lakes without the consent of the Indians, and now, as I shall show in a moment, it seeks to deprive them of their fee-simple title for an inadequate sum.

Fifteen of such sites have been taken, with an acreage of 8,588.76. These areas have been made a part of the Flathead irrigation district; that is, they have been made such by the arbitrary action of the Indian Bureau. The irrigated lands of this district are farmed not by Indians but by whites. To be exact, of 52,649 irrigated acres, the Indians irrigate only 1,249 acres, while the whites own outright 48,348 acres of the irrigated lands.

Through these years the Flathead irrigation district has paid no rent to the tribe for these lands, nor has the Government paid the tribe one dollar.

The land in the areas in question is all land within or right under the reservoir sites of the district and is possessed of a perfect and a wholly prior water right. The value of irrigated land on the Flathead Reservation, as the Indian Bureau contends, is approximately $50 an acre, as shown by the tabulation prepared by the irrigation division of the Indian Office, which appears at page 620 of the House appropriation hearings for the fiscal year 1934.

With this background of facts it will be possible for the Senate to appreciate the significance of the course of action through which the Indian Office has been engaged in connection with these reservoir sites.

During the hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill for 1932 Mr. Clotts, the bureau's irrigation engineer, briefly described the reservoir sites. Keep in mind these are beautiful lakes of great value, covering more than 8,000 acres of land. He did not report that any appraisal had been made to determine the value of these sites, but stated that the bureau requested $55,000 to be used in purchasing the sites from the tribe, and then added:

> The appropriation of $55,000 will dispose of the entire matter at one time.

The Indian Bureau's request for $55,000 at that time was granted by Congress, though, as I contend, the entire situation was not understood by Congress; and thereupon the superintendent of the reservation, Mr. Coe, and an acting assistant to the bureau's irrigation director, Mr. Wathen, without consulting the Flathead Tribe, submitted an appraisal of the sites. They did not ask for a third party to make the appraisal, or seek to exercise the right of eminent domain, but they made the appraisal without consulting the Indians who owned the land.

I have stated that the Indian Bureau finds such acreage when irrigated to be worth $50. But the Indian Bureau fixed, for class 1 agricultural lands, values ranging from $3.50 to $7 per acre, and for class 2 agricultural lands values ranging from $3 to $3.50 per acre.

As I have stated, the tribe was not consulted nor even notified when the effort was made to obtain the appropriation. On learning the facts the Indians assembled and the matter was laid before the Flathead Tribe. Superintendent Coe reported to Commissioner Rhoads, May 30, 1932:

> After considerable discussion the matter was voted upon. The result was practically unanimous against a sale at this time.

The Indians, with entire propriety, insisted that the appraisal was indefensibly low, and likewise that they were entitled to be paid, if the land was to be taken from them, rent for the sites for the many years during which the Government had attempted to occupy and claimed jurisdiction over them.

The title, it should be clearly understood, is in the Flathead Tribe; and the alienation of the land, if it shall be alienated, will take place in the present, but the value of the same will be as of a date 20 years back, under an appraisal made by the Indian Bureau, without the consent of the Indians and without the intervention of a court or of proper experts who have knowledge of the value of the lands.

I am told, Mr. President, that many persons would give thousands of dollars for some of those lakes, using them and the land around them for summer resorts.

On June 15, 1932, the tribal council of the Flathead Tribe sent to Commissioner Rhoads and to various Members of Congress an energetic protest against the entire scheme of the bureau, and as a result of this protest and of the facts which, in my opinion, justified it, the Senate eliminated the item from the deficiency bill for 1933.

But the Indian Bureau, as usual, is not content to abide by the wishes of the tribe or by the actions of Congress.

Assistant Commissioner Scattergood appeared before the Appropriations Committee on November 21 last. His testimony is found at page 701 of the House hearings on the Department of the Interior appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1934. He insisted, of course, that the appropriation should be made and that this land should be acquired or taken from the Indians at the prices indicated.

After taking possession of the lands years ago, never paying them a cent, never having paid rent, what right have we to say now, "We will pay you $55,000 for this land," when, as I am advised by persons who have visited it and by Indians who are familiar with it, the land is worth infinitely more?

If this land is indispensable for the needs of the Government, let the Government bring the necessary action for condemnation, and pay a reasonable price. Mr. President, there is no occasion for haste in this matter. Nothing will be done during the next few months. Further investigation should be made, and the wishes of the Indian owners should be considered and their interests fully protected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is simply a continuation for one year. It is approved by both Senators from Montana. They both desire the continuation for a year.

In the hearings, this question was brought up. In answer to Mr. HASTINGS, I want to read what Mr. Scattergood said:

> Well, I am going to keep an open mind, Mr. HASTINGS, on the question of appraisal. All we were asking at the time was that the amount previously estimated to be sufficient to cover this item be continued available.

That is, for one year; and that is all they are doing.

> I hope when the lands are reappraised they will take into consideration the number of years that each particular reservoir has been out of Indian possession, so that that will be an element in calculating the value, not exactly as if it were interest on the money but use and occupancy of that land would be a proper element to be taken into consideration in fixing that appraisal.

Again, he says in his testimony:

> Now, in the ordinary course of work that was taken up last spring on the reservation, the superintendent and the project engineer submitted a proposed basis of settlement, utilizing the figures per acre from $2.50 to $10, those figures being the basis of compensation paid by the entrymen to the tribe at the time the reservation was opened, and it seemed that that same basis was a fair basis to be used.
> As soon as this estimate came to the office I immediately sent it back and said, "Has this been submitted to the Indians; do they know about it, and do they approve it?" We felt they would be very much pleased, of course, to have this settlement made. Well, the Indians referred it to some others of their friends here, and the question was brought up as to whether or not this was a proper basis of valuation; also whether or not there had been taken into consideration the number of years involved in the use of each one of these reservoir sites; or, to put it the other way, that the Indians had been deprived of their use.

This is the Indian Commissioner. The Indian Commissioner says here that the $2.50 to $10 valuation is to be revalued. Both Senators from Montana asked that this provision be put in, and approved of it, and it was put in for that reason.

I want to assure my colleague that the revaluation is going to take place; and if this project is carried out, the valuation appraised will be entirely different than it was years ago, before the project was even thought of.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think my colleague is in error in stating that the Senators from Montana desire this. My information is just the reverse. If they should approve of this provision I should regard it with less concern, because I have confidence in them. However, they may be in error, as I may be in error in the position I have taken. Conceding that they approve, I still believe that no action should be taken at this time, that further investigation be made, and the Indians be further consulted in the matter.

Mr. President, the Indians protested against this provision of the bill, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, went before the committee and had it stricken from the bill.

I respectfully submit that my colleague is in error when he says that this is a continuing appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not say it was a continuing appropriation. I said the proposition is to extend it for a year—not that it is a continuing appropriation.

Mr. KING. Perhaps it is a difference of interpretation. An appropriation was made in 1932. That expired, and the Indian Bureau attempted in the deficiency bill to have it continued. Under the protest of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], as well as others, including the Indians, it was stricken from the deficiency bill. The appropriation now is dead, and the provision before us is a de novo appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to my colleague that he is mistaken. Somebody is giving him the wrong information.

Mr. KING. I have looked at the record.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not dead, Mr. President. It will be, however, unless we agree to this amendment extending it for another year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us consider that life is not quite extinct, nevertheless, it is conceded that it needs vitalization by this amendment. My colleague admits that it will be dead if we do not vitalize it by this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. KING. If the appropriation in the beginning was wrong, we ought not to vitalize it.

The Indian wards of the United States have been plundered for more than a hundred years, and whenever attempts have been made to defend them and to protect their rights the Indian Bureau has usually been silent and derelict in asserting its authority for their preservation.

The result is, as I stated in the discussion this afternoon, that the inheritance of the Indians has been wasted and their advancement retarded, if not prevented.

Their lands, which were 133,000,000 acres in 1887, have now dwindled to 47,000,000 acres. Little by little they are being shorn of their possessions.

Mr. President, the Government will lose nothing by delaying the time when the title to these lakes may be acquired by it. The Government is using the lakes and reservoirs, the Indians will not take them away from the Government. The Government is using them not for the benefit of the Indians but for the benefit of the whites. The Government went upon the Indian reservation, and, ostensibly for the benefit of the Indians, inaugurated an irrigation project; but out of the lands which are being irrigated but approximately 1,000 acres are being irrigated by the Indians, whereas 50,000 acres are irrigated and owned by the whites.

Having taken so much from the Indians, the proposition now is to take away these beautiful lakes, and to give them $55,000 for them. I say, let us postpone this, and make a proper investigation, and go into the courts, if necessary, and fix the value of the lands, if it becomes necessary that these lands should be taken for the purpose of adding to the irrigation activities of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, again I say my colleague is mistaken. This is what was stated at the House hearings; and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is here now, and he can say whether or not it is so:

> So I took it up with the two Senators of the State, and the arrangement that was made, with their full approval, was that we would ask for a continuation of this item over into 1933, because there was not time to complete the settlement on any new basis before the expiration of the 1932 fiscal year, and then that we would send it all back to the reservation with the suggestion that a proper appraisal committee should be appointed, in which the Indians would have a representative and also the water users would have a representative, because they will be the ones eventually to pay this back to the Government.

I have already read the part as to where the reappraisal was to take place. All that this provision does is to extend this just exactly as was asked and agreed to by the two Senators from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I trust this amendment will not prevail.

I desire to say in this connection that my colleague [Mr. WHEELER] recently, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has gone over the reservation, and is satisfied, as he informed the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], that this item ought to remain in the bill. This is the first intimation I have had that anybody was objecting to it.

Of course, this is quite aside from the general question of whether in the course of a hundred years the Indians have been treated right or have been treated otherwise. This provision has the approval of the department, and I can see no reason why it should be stricken out.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know that the Indians have violently protested against this, have not assented to it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am quite aware that there is a group of Indians on the Flathead Indian Reservation who have been objecting to every appropriation that has been made by the Congress during all these years. That is quite aside from the question. The white settlers, who have paid for their lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation and put the money into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians, paying big prices for their land, are entitled to some consideration from the Congress of the United States, as I have repeatedly asserted upon the floor of this body.

This provision is for the purpose of carrying through the irrigation project on the reservation which gave value to the lands. I repeat what I have so often said, that the project was outlined; the settlers upon the reservation had an opportunity to select their lands under the project and pay the increased price for lands which were subject to irrigation, or they had an opportunity to take their lands above the ditch, where they could not be irrigated. The lands under the ditch brought an increased price, $7 an acre—a very high price for these lands—and that went into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians, and they have the benefit of it. I insist that the project should be carried out in good faith as it was planned by the department.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield. I do not think the Senator from Utah will accuse either my colleague or myself of any lack of interest in or concern for the Indians in our State.

Mr. KING. No. If the acquisition of these lakes is important to the rounding out of the irrigation project, does not the Senator think it would be better and fairer simply to authorize the acquisition, instead of making an appropriation and saying, "We are going to pay you this $55,000"? Why do that? Is not that a sort of threat to them that "That is all you will get"? If we were acquiring the lands of white people by condemnation, we would authorize them to go into court for the purpose of condemning the lands. We might make an upset price, but we would make provision for the owners of the lands to have a forum in which to determine their rights.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no possibility of taking the lands of these Indians without paying for them. This appropriation is made for the purpose of meeting whatever agreement may be made or whatever condemnation proceedings may be instituted to pay the actual value of the property taken.

Mr. SMOOT. May I call the Senator's attention to what the department says?

> Now, if $55,000 proves not to be sufficient, and the appraisal committee brings in a larger amount, we can then come back to this committee for a supplemental appropriation.

They gave notice. They have already told us exactly what they would do, and they anticipate that it is going to be more than $55,000, and so told the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. If these allotted lands belong to the Indians, they must be acquired either by contract with the Indian who owns the land or by condemnation proceedings, and this appropriation, as I understand it, is to be made in anticipation of either agreeing with the individual Indians with respect to the matter or condemning the lands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to my friend from Montana that the Government having taken possession of these lakes a number of years ago, and still holding and using them, is there any necessity for immediately forcing through the purchase?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is a part of the work of completing the project. We simply make this appropriation for the purpose of completing it.

Mr. KING. Would it not be better, if this is necessary, for the Indian Bureau to take the matter up with the Indians and try to agree upon a price, instead of obtaining an appropriation in advance, as if we predetermined the amount which the Government should pay?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all. It is a matter of no consequence at all whether the negotiations are carried on before or after the appropriation is made.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I think the junior Senator from Utah is correct in his stand in this matter. The Indians have protested, and their affairs have been handled in this matter as they have in many others—over the protests of the Indians in the past. But it does seem to me that if the Indians are ever to be listened to they should be listened to now and given opportunity to say something about how their affairs should be conducted. It seems to me the amendment the Senator from Utah has offered should be agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think that is a very unfair statement. Nobody is endeavoring to interfere with the way the Indian affairs shall be conducted. This appropriation has nothing at all to do with the affairs of the Indians. The Indians have selected their allotments under the ditch, and the white people have selected lands under the ditch. This is no effort to control the affairs of the Indians at all. The Senator must bear in mind that the white people under the project have rights in this matter just exactly the same as have the Indians, who have not any lands under the project. This is no attempt to control the affairs of the Indians at all.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana just stated that the Indians of the Flathead Reservation protested all appropriations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana did not say that. The Senator from Montana said that there is a group of Indians from the Flathead Indian Reservation who have protested against a lot of these things.

Mr. FRAZIER. The group happens to be the tribal council, and has been the tribal council since I have had anything to do with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the Senator put into the RECORD the protest the tribal council has made against this item?

Mr. FRAZIER. I have not the protest available right now; no.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I must say that I have not had any protest from the Indians in this matter, and I usually regard myself as their representative. I have certainly taken care of any protests they have offered, and I have never heard any protest against this item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer on page 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, line 1, the Senator proposes to strike out "$114,430" and to insert in lieu thereof "$103,521.67."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this would strike from the bill $10,908.33 that is comprised in salaries of some forestry men on the Klamath Reservation. Representatives of the Klamath Indians who are here in Washington, delegated by their tribe to come here to represent them, appeared before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and asked that these items be stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember what was said in the committee, and I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment the Senator offers and let it go to conference; and in the meantime I will try to become familiar with it, and if the facts are as the Senator states, the amendment will remain in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on page 17 of the bill there is a paragraph beginning with line 9, which provides for an appropriation of $197,000 for salaries of various forestry men, and so on. There is nothing in the bill to indicate what this money is for, and it is impossible to tell from the bill. In the hearings before the House committee, on page 571, Mr. Dodd, of the Indian Bureau, said that 61 employees are paid from this appropriation. The director of the forestry work gets $5,800, the assistant gets $5,000, and the remaining number from $3,500 down to $1,740.

The item includes forestry men, fire-control work, those engaged in looking after grazing on Indian reservations, and a thousand and one other things, including telephone-line building and road building. The appropriation is $197,000.

Of course, this happens to be a gratuity appropriation from the Government, but it seems to me the money might practically all be saved by transferring the forestry work in the Indian department to the division handling forestry work in the Department of Agriculture. I believe that is where it should be. There are two high-salaried men engaged in this work under the Bureau of Indian Affairs, one at $5,800, the other at $5,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator state what his amendment is? Does he desire to eliminate the whole item?

Mr. FRAZIER. I did not offer an amendment, because I do not know how to offer an amendment the way the bill is drawn.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it seems to me there is a great deal in what the Senator has said about the matter, but we have no facts on which we could change the item at this time, and I suggest that the Senator come before the committee when the next bill is brought in, and not wait until we are in a hurry here. We can see then if we can arrange it. If it can be arranged, the money ought to be saved.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to this matter. The junior Senator from Utah called attention to the fact that the method of appropriation should be changed so that in reading the appropriation bill we would know what the items are for. There are four or five items here, one on page 17, of $197,000, which includes the fire-control work, forestry-force salaries; on page 18 there is an appropriation of $40,000; on page 18 again another item of $25,000 for fire-control work; and we can not tell exactly what the appropriations are for. Again, on page 18, line 16, there is an appropriation of $50,000, some of which is to be taken out of the fund for fire-control work. There is absolutely no rhyme or reason in the way the appropriation bill is drawn, and it should be changed, and I hope that before the next appropriation bill is brought before us it will be changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13872) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION BY THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I report favorably, on behalf of the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Senate Resolution 322, which provides for an appropriation of $400 from the contingent fund of the Senate to complete the work of the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, looking toward the investigation of Indian lands which are escaping taxation. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] is chairman of the subcommittee. He has stated that he needs $400 to complete his report and have it printed and make his recommendation.

I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be acted upon at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, has the resolution the approval of the standing committee having jurisdiction of the matter, and also the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. FRAZIER. It has the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and also of the Committee to Audit and Control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, authorized by Senate Resolution 282, agreed to June 25, 1930, to investigate the relationship between the Federal Government and those of the several States wherein are located Indian reservations or unallotted tribal lands, or any other Indian lands not subject to taxation by such States or political subdivisions thereof, with a view of developing a plan by which the Federal Government may contribute fairly and equitably toward the expenses of governmental activities in said States, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $400 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for such purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 6 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 9, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Again, Almighty God, the light of another day has broken on our mortal vision. The angel of Thy face stands by us, bends above us, and Thou wilt be with us when all else fails. Duties await us, responsibilities are upon us. We should despair of the Republic if the high, stern note of Christian individualism were ever weakened. We praise Thee for all the powers with which we are endowed. In the whole range of them none is more sacred than the gift of free choice. We thank Thee that we are Thy rational offspring. May we this day solemnly renew our covenant and our dedication as the responsible servants of the public weal. May this consecration mean renewed, unstinted loyalty to those historic and traditional institutions which are the fruits of free and representative government. Inspire all of us with outstanding courage and conviction, and with a splendid moral sense that will stand up under the vacillations of human nature. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 13520. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 565. Joint resolution to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1933.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to a bill and joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 4165. An act to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and to subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class; and

S. J. Res. 167. Joint resolution to carry out certain obligations to certain enrolled Indians under tribal agreement.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 42. Concurrent resolution to compile, print, and bind the proceedings of Congress in connection with the exercises in memory of the late President Calvin Coolidge.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 88) entitled "An act to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post office in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ODDIE, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. MCKELLAR to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MERCHANTS AND FARMERS BANK, JUNCTION CITY, ARK.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will call bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, beginning with No. 608.

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 9476, for the relief of the Merchants & Farmers Bank, Junction City, Ark.

Mr. PATTERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that banks are usually very careful in paying out funds. It also occurs to me that if a private party were to cash a money order they would proceed to do it at their own risk. I am wondering if we should pay a bank because the bank cashed one of these money orders, when we would not pay it probably to a private party.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman from Alabama objecting to the bill?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think we can not pass this bill just now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, for the present——

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas if he desires to make a statement.

Mr. PARKS. On last Thursday night, Mr. Speaker, a companion bill to this bill was passed. It was unobjected to. There was a full explanation about it. I do not remember whether the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATTERSON] was present at that time or not. I sincerely trust the gentleman will not object to this bill when the other bill was passed, unobjected to. It is not only a meritorious case, but it is a case in which the equities are all on the side of the bank. The postmaster had a bond that was absolutely inadequate——

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKS. Surely.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman analyzed the evidence in connection with the other bill which is on all fours with the present bill.

Mr. PARKS. Absolutely.

Mr. BACHMANN. The only difference is that this is another bank.

Mr. PARKS. That is all.

Mr. BACHMANN. Would we not save time by having the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATTERSON] state what his objection is, because the gentleman from Arkansas fully stated in the RECORD the other night the facts about this matter.

Mr. PATTERSON. Would it not expedite the matter if it could be temporarily laid aside until I can look into the matter?

Mr. PARKS. That can not be done.

Mr. BACHMANN. We went into the proof thoroughly the other night. This is a meritorious bill and ought to be passed.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish the RECORD to show that I am not satisfied with the principle involved in this bill. I withdrew my objection the other evening after considerable consideration, largely upon the statement of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN], in whose judgment I have confidence. If that bill or the present bill should be vetoed by the President, I wish to feel at liberty to oppose this bill if it is ever returned to the House. I make this statement for the RECORD so as to show that this bill did not go through the Congress absolutely by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,044.99 to the Merchants & Farmers Bank, of Junction City, Ark., in full settlement against the Government for money that was paid to Joe F. Tullis, who was postmaster at Upland, Union County, Ark., on post-office money orders deposited in said Merchants & Farmers Bank at different times and for different amounts, aggregating $3,044.99, which money orders were cashed by said bank, and which had been fraudulently issued by the postmaster without the knowledge of said bank that they were fraudulent. All of said money orders were paid by the Government and the money was subsequently refunded by said bank.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of line 6, on page 2, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILMOT CASTLE CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 221, authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Wilmot Castle Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Wilmot Castle Co. for the cost of repairing a sterilizer furnished under contract with the Medical Department of the Army, dated September 3, 1929, for installation in the hospital at Fort Meade, S. Dak., which was damaged on November 29, 1929, while being unloaded from a railroad freight car by a detail of enlisted men of the Quartermaster Corps of the Army stationed at Fort Meade, and for reimbursement of additional freight charges thereon necessitated by the accident, and to allow not to exceed $262.10 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $262.10 or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claim.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KATHERINE R. THEBERGE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 914, for the relief of Katherine R. Theberge.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Katherine R. Theberge, of New Bedford, Mass., the sum of $1,284.14, in full satisfaction of her claim for damages against the United States for injuries suffered by her on December 1, 1928, when the automobile in which she was riding collided, near Beltsville, Md., with a United States Army ambulance.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATTERSON: At the end of line 10, after the word "ambulance," insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES OF THE FOREST SERVICE, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 968, for the relief of certain employees of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following-named employees of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, the sums hereinafter specified, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for property losses sustained by them as a result of a fire which destroyed the Squaw Mountain road camp in Mount Hood National Forest near Estacada, Oreg., on September 15, 1929: Walter L. Shriner, $115, of which $75 represents the value of a 1917 Ford roadster and $40 represents the value of carpenter tools; P. A. Worden, $21, representing the price of a tent; Ben M. Joslin, $45, representing the value of a Winona wagon; Delbert H. Shaffer, $90, representing the difference between the value of a 1925 Ford coupe and the amount of the insurance collected thereon; A. W. Lee, $100, representing the value of a 1917 Ford roadster; Charles Palmer, $100, representing the value of a 1924 Chevrolet roadster; Wilbur Linn, $35, representing the value of a 1916 Ford touring car; George Cook, $150, representing the value of a 1925 Chevrolet roadster; and Jack Marrs, $50, representing the value of a 1919 Harley-Davidson motor cycle.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JERRY O'SHEA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3536, for the relief of Jerry O'Shea.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is any Member of the House interested in this bill? Is the chairman of the Committee on Claims here? If no one is here to answer my inquiry, I shall object.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

HAROLD LUCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 782, for the relief of Harold Luce.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE JOHNSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1229, for the relief of George Johnson.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the report of The Adjutant General making the following statements:

The records further show that this soldier enlisted March 3, 1902, at Seattle, Wash., for three years. He was assigned to the Thirty-fourth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, and served with that organization until May 11, 1903, when he deserted at Fort Stevens, Oreg., a private. He never thereafter returned to his command or reported his whereabouts or the cause of his absence to the military authorities.

There is no authority of law whereby the charge of desertion of May 11, 1903, standing on the records against this soldier may be removed and an honorable discharge issued to him.

C. H. BRIDGES,
Major General, The Adjutant General.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

MARY E. DAWLEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1905, for the relief of Mary E. Dawley.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employee's Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to waive the statute of limitations in the application filed by Mary E. Dawley, a former employee of the State Department of the United States, for compensation under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, in order that she may receive the same consideration as though she had applied within the specified time required by law.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the United States Employees Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Mary E. Dawley, of the Department of State, a former employee, as to whether she suffered an injury while employed in the Foreign Service of the United States compensable under said act after the date of its enactment in the same manner and to the same extent as if the said Mary E. Dawley had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof, provided that no benefit shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

FARMERS & MERCHANTS NATIONAL BANK, GILMER, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2597, for the relief of the Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Gilmer, Tex.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he does not think this bill ought to be amended so that it shows on its face what the bill covers?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that I do not object to an amendment such as he has in mind. These are the facts in the case: The money was unsigned currency and it was lost or destroyed. The bill provides for bond in double the amount.

Any amendment the gentleman wants to offer which will protect the Government is agreeable to me.

Mr. BACHMANN. The question that has been bothering me is whether or not the unsigned currency was delivered to the bank.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. The bank receipted for it. Some time after it came into the possession of the bank it was either burned, destroyed, or thrown into the wastebasket and lost. Now the bank wants the Government to reimburse it for the amount of this unsigned currency and is willing to give bond, but the Treasury Department says a bond would not be proper insurance to the Government.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. What would be proper insurance?

Mr. BACHMANN. I do not know. I would like the gentleman from Texas to suggest what would be proper insurance.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I think the bond is. This is similar to bills that have been passed in other cases. I think it is proper insurance.

Mr. BACHMANN. Has the money ever turned up?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. The money never has turned up. This was unsigned currency. I went into this bank personally and asked them to make a statement. This unsigned currency was put on the edge of the desk where they usually put things to go into the wastebasket. It was thrown into the wastebasket and burned. The Government has not been put to a cent of loss because the currency was unsigned. The bank is offering to give bond in double the amount.

Mr. BACHMANN. Is unsigned currency negotiable in any way?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I do not think so.

Mr. BACHMANN. If somebody should sign it would it not then become negotiable?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. It might; yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. In such an event it would be a charge against the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. The point is the bond is made double the amount. If the gentleman wants to make it three times the amount, that will be all right.

Mr. BACHMANN. It is not a question of the amount, but whether during the course of the years the bond would be sufficient security.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from West Virginia yield?

Mr. BACHMANN. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. When the Government is so well safeguarded, I do not see why the Treasury opposes the scheme. They are opposed to all such schemes.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. The reason is the Treasury is opposed to nearly everything of this kind.

Mr. PATTERSON. Has the Treasury been advised that the bank has given the bond?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Of course, they will not give the bond until this bill passes, but they will make the bond in double the amount to protect the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BACHMANN. This bill does not relieve the bank. The bank is seeking to have the Treasury reimburse it. The bank has already paid the money for this unsigned currency, and it says that if the Treasury will reimburse it it will give bond in double the amount. The question is whether, should this money in some way find its way into circulation 25, 30, 40, or 50 years hence, the bond is sufficient security to protect the Government.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. There is no other way, and I can not understand why the bond standing there would not be sufficient security.

Mr. PATTERSON. The only question is whether the money might turn up in circulation 40 or 50 years in the future.

Mr. BACHMANN. Of course, as long as the bank is in business we have double security, because the bank would still be responsible.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. And could they not ask for a new bond?

Mr. BACHMANN. They might in course of time.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I should think so.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection provided the gentleman will agree to an amendment that is to be offered perfecting the bill.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. That is all right.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,550 to the Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Gilmer, Texas.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 7, page 1, after the word "Texas," insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That said Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Gilmer, Tex., shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said notes in such form and with such corporate surety as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the notes described as follows: Thirty-one sheets of $10, $10, $10 and $20 notes, bearing Nos. 5497 to 5527, which were shipped by the Comptroller of the Currency to the Farmers & Merchants National Bank at Gilmer, Tex., on August 23, 1928."

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment. On page 1, line 7, after the word "Texas," strike out the colon and add a period and insert "Said sum represents the amount of incomplete currency received and receipted for by said bank on or about August 25, 1928, and which was later lost."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACHMANN: On page 1, line 7, after the word "Texas," strike out the colon, insert a period and the following "Said sum represents the amount of incomplete currency received and receipted for on or about August 25, 1928, and which was later lost."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LYMAN D. DRAKE, JR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4973, for the relief of Lyman D. Drake, jr.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I am disposed to object to this bill. If there is some one here who knows the facts, I shall be pleased to discuss it with him.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will tell the gentleman the facts. They are set out in the committee report. The beneficiary of the bill was a switchman employed by the Government in the Panama Canal Zone. By reason of defective equipment in the way of the old link-and-pin coupling he had his foot badly mutilated and partially amputated. The evidence before the committee indicates that the accident resulted through no fault of the employee. The bill carries a very small amount in view of the serious injury which this man suffered.

Mr. BACHMANN. As I understood from the report, the injury was due to the man's own neglect.

Mr. SCHAFER. It was not due to his neglect. If the gentleman knows anything about switching box cars with the old link-and-pin coupling or if he had listened to the testimony, he would readily reach a conclusion that the accident was due to defective equipment.

Mr. BACHMANN. When did this accident happen?

Mr. SCHAFER. In 1908.

Mr. BACHMANN. How many years ago is that?

Mr. SCHAFER. It has been a considerable number of years, but this Congress has been giving relief in meritorious cases, even though they are of long standing. Just because the relief which is indicated in this bill has been denied over a long period of time is no reason for not making a small appropriation to partially compensate this injured employee.

Mr. BACHMANN. What has the gentleman to say about the offer that was extended by the Panama Railroad Co. for this man to reenter the service at 44 cents an hour and waive the physical defect, retaining his position, which he voluntarily refused?

Mr. SCHAFER. A man with one-tenth of the disability that this man received in line of duty could not follow the strenuous occupation of a railroad switchman, particularly in the old days when they did not have the automatic coupling but had the old link-and-pin coupling. I may state that the entire Claims Committee carefully considered this bill and had a hearing on the bill and had the beneficiary before the committee.

Mr. BACHMANN. But this man was offered a position by the Government as a machinist at 44 cents an hour, and he did not want to work and did not take the position. They would have waived any physical defect.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman is an attorney and has practiced in industrial cases and knows how long a man would hold a position when he is offered one after he has been injured. Furthermore, the man was in a critical condition at the time.

Mr. BACHMANN. I am disposed to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I object.

SARD S. REED

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5261, for the relief of Sard S. Reed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, as I recall, this is a case for the relief of a postmaster, and the department reported adversely, because they did not believe the postmaster had taken sufficient care in using the iron safe for the custody of the funds.

Mr. McKEOWN. No; I think the objection was made because he had not invested the semiannual amount in stamps every two weeks.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me read from the report:

The burglary was investigated by an inspector, and it was found that the entrance to the building where the post office was located was gained by prying open one of the rear windows. The combination of the safe was broken off, as above stated, but the bolt to which the dial was attached was not punched out, nor was the interior mechanism of the safe damaged in any way. The money had been left in the inner steel chest, and the door to this chest was found open the next morning and was not mutilated in any way.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman knows that these expert burglars do not depend on breaking open the safe; they can unlock these small safes. I will say to the gentleman that this was a case where they simply opened the safe. They probably knocked off the dial to mislead.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will resolve the doubt in favor of the postmaster.

Mr. PATTERSON. It occurs to me that the postmaster had a right to allow this amount.

Mr. McKEOWN. No; this is a case where the postmaster did not have the right; this claim is too large.

Mr. PATTERSON. They have the authority to allow it up to a certain amount.

Mr. McKEOWN. No; he did not have authority at that time. This is a clear case under the rules of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I call the gentleman's attention to this further statement from the report.

Upon consideration of the evidence the postmaster's claim was disallowed September 29, 1927, because the funds lost in the burglary had not been protected in the manner prescribed by section 110 of the regulations, and that at least $400 in stamp funds were lost through the postmaster's failure to make a requisition for stamp stocks during the second half of the month of April as more fully explained in a letter dated September 29, 1927, reporting the settlement of the claim, a copy of which is also inclosed.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman, I think that was a boom town where that happened. If the gentleman thinks that $800 ought not to be paid to him, I will accept an amendment to reduce it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it should be reduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Sard S. Reed, postmaster at Earlsboro, in the sum of $1,163.70 on account of the loss of postal and fixed credit funds resulting from the burglary of the Earlsboro post office on May 1, 1927.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the sum "$1,163.70" and insert "$1,115.90."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, following the suggestion of the author of the bill, I offer the following amendment in lieu of the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, strike out "$1,163.70" and insert "$715.90."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARY B. HINES

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7757) for the relief of Mary B. Hines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I object.

Mr. GUYER. This is a bill where a woman defending the property of the United States had her arm shot off in 1911. I think it is an outrage that she has waited this long for relief.

Mr. BACHMANN. If the gentleman will read the report, he will find that in 1911 she did not have her arm shot off. She did not have her arm taken off, as a matter of fact, until 1932.

Mr. GUYER. That does not make any difference. The amputation of the arm was because she had had it shot in 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from West Virginia withhold his objection until the author of the bill can make a statement?

Mr. BACHMANN. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the evidence shows that the claimant was a postmistress at the small town of Cedar.

Mr. BACHMANN. I understood that her husband was the postmaster.

Mr. JOHNSON of Missouri. Her husband was postmaster, and she was assistant postmistress. In 1911 a robber attempted to rob the post office. He had a gun pointed at her husband. She grabbed the arm of the bandit, and he then turned the gun upon her and shot her in her arm. She did not make any claim until this bill was presented for the reason that she and her husband got along fairly well in financial matters as long as he lived. Later they moved to Sedalia, Mo. She had a great deal of trouble with her arm, but she made no claim. Her husband died in 1926. About three years ago her arm began to cause her a great deal of trouble, from which she suffered continuously.

The bullet remained in her arm during all this time. This bill was introduced in December, 1931, and since presenting the bill, claimant's arm has been amputated. This was done at Sedalia, in February, 1932. The evidence clearly shows that she took the oath of office as assistant postmistress, and that the delay in presenting her claim was because she was not trying to get her claim allowed unless it was absolutely necessary. To-day she is wholly dependent upon charity, and has not been able to pay her hospital bills. This claimant was seriously injured in the line of duty and in defense of the property of the United States. No claim ever had more merit than this claim. I do hope, in justice to claimant, you will not object.

Mr. BACHMANN. It may be true that she is dependent upon charity, but that does not make the Government responsible. Does not the gentleman think, in order to get this claim in proper shape, so that the committee would have all of the facts, it would have been well to get a letter from the Post Office Department certifying that she was the assistant postmistress there, and giving the committee the benefit of the report of the inspector who investigated the case? All these post-office cases are investigated by an inspector.

There is not a bit of evidence here outside of an old newspaper clipping, which did not even mention her name. As far as the committee is concerned, this may be a proper case for relief, but the committee can act only on what is in the report and the facts that we gather from it. I can not, under the circumstances, with the condition the report is in, let this bill pass; but I think if the gentleman can get a report from the Post Office Department giving the committee the benefit of the report of the inspector, then, if the facts appear there to be as stated by the gentleman, perhaps I would not have any objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Missouri. I wish the gentleman would not object at this time, or at least would let the matter go over temporarily, rather than making objection.

Mr. BACHMANN. I am very glad to have the matter go over, if the gentleman can get additional evidence.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over temporarily.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, if the gentleman does not wish me to point out that there is a supplementary report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

SARD S. REED

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings whereby H. R. 5261, for the relief of Sard S. Reed, was passed be vacated in order that I may offer a minor amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings whereby the bill H. R. 5261 was passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 5, after the word "Earlsboro," insert the word "Oklahoma."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ANGELO J. GILLOTTI

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8597) for the relief of Angelo J. Gillotti.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The War Department reports:

He was absent without leave from August 12 to 26, 1924; was tried by summary court-martial, and was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for 30 days and forfeiture of $14 of his pay. On November 4, 1924, he deserted at the Presidio of Monterey, Calif., and did not return to military control. On October 6, 1931, he was discharged from the Army on account of desertion.

I object.

IRENE BRAND ALPER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9223) for the relief of Irene Brand Alper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding from the gentleman from New York that he will protect the House in a reduction of this amount from $15,000 to $1,250, I shall not object.

Mr. BLACK. The committee recommends that reduction.

Mr. BLANTON. And the House will be protected in preserving that reduction in the closing days of Congress?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does not the gentleman think that this bill ought to be amended so that it will read that this is in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States?

Mr. BLANTON. That will be offered, of course. It should be in full settlement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Irene Brand Alper the sum of $15,000 in full settlement for an injury incurred by her when 19 years old, when she was seriously injured and crippled for life by being struck down and run over on the 14th day of August, 1921, by the United States Navy car No. 2499, in the city of New York, through the careless and negligent operation of said car by an employee of the United States Government employed at the time to operate said car.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$15,000" and insert "$1,250."

Line 8, strike out the figures "14th" and insert in lieu thereof "11th."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, after the word "settlement," insert "of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHMANN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Suppose she has some other claim against the Government?

Mr. BACHMANN. But I am referring to this particular claim.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then the gentleman should make it clear and put that in.

Mr. BACHMANN. That is what I did.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BACHMANN: Page 2, after line 3, strike out the colon and insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. SAGE, JR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 995, authorizing the President to order William H. Sage, jr., before a retiring board for a hearing of his case and upon the findings of such board determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his resignation.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the report from the Secretary of War, which reads as follows:

Captain Sage voluntarily resigned from the service for his own convenience. A few days prior to his resignation he was examined as to his physical condition by a board of medical officers at Walter Reed General Hospital. After a careful consideration of the medical history of the case and as a result of observation, physical examination, and X-ray findings, the board found that Captain Sage was not physically incapacitated in any degree for active service and that no physical defects were found which would interfere with his resignation from the Army or warrant a recommendation for retirement on account of physical disability.

The War Department says that the enactment of the proposed legislation would constitute preferential treatment of an individual of a class to the prejudice of others in the same category who have not been accorded similar treatment, and recommends against the bill, and I object.

If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] desires to make a statement about the matter, I will reserve my objection, but ultimately I shall be forced to object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, this bill was introduced by my colleague, our distinguished deceased friend, Mr. Tucker. On his deathbed he asked me to look after this bill for him and to bring a message to his colleagues of his interest in it. This bill does not retire this officer, and we have passed many such bills. The War Department always objects to them, and they will tell you, if you talk to them privately, that they are forced to object because they do not want to be put into the position of consenting to a man going back before the retiring board after he has resigned.

Mr. BLANTON. Will my friend yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. As to what Mr. Henry St. George Tucker said, the gentleman probably knows that I was as good a friend of our deceased colleague as he had in the House, and I would do anything in the world for him individually, consistent with my duty and under my oath, but because my friend, Henry St. George Tucker, introduced a bill that should not pass, it does not deter me from objecting when I think it ought not pass. I am going to object.

Mr. WOODRUM. I want to explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, before presenting a resolution, which I shall present in a moment, I wish to say that if the resolution is adopted I will ask unanimous consent that the order providing for a call of the Private Calendar on to-morrow night be canceled.

I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 372

Resolved, That on Thursday, February 9, 1933, after the reading of the Journal, it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the call of bills on said calendar to begin where the last call ended.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, this does away with the special session to-morrow evening?

Mr. RAINEY. I intend to ask unanimous consent that the order providing for a call of the Private Calendar on to-morrow night be canceled, if this resolution is adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois stated that if the resolution was adopted he would then ask unanimous consent that the order providing for a night session to-morrow evening be vacated.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I wanted to know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] if he expects to have any definite night each week through the remaining days of Congress for the consideration of the Private Calendar?

Mr. RAINEY. Every week there will be one night devoted to the Private Calendar unless we can do it during the daytime.

Mr. BACHMANN. Can we agree tentatively so that the committees can prepare these bills and be ready for them?

Mr. RAINEY. Thursday night seems to be about the only night we are able to agree upon, so I presume it will always be Thursday night.

Mr. BACHMANN. Can we understand that on next Thursday night and the following Thursday night of each week there will be a call of the Private Calendar?

Mr. RAINEY. Unless it is possible to use some time during the day, that will be the rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order by which the House ordered a night session on the Private Calendar to-morrow night be vacated.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, why can not the House consider the Private Calendar to-morrow night, and at the regular session to-morrow consider bills on the Democratic program about which we hear so much? We hear the Republicans are blocking that program. Why not take to-morrow to consider that program and have the night session on the Private Calendar?

Mr. BLANTON. O Mr. Speaker, that is bunk.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAINEY. Then I move that the order entered for to-morrow night be canceled, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That matter can be arranged, permit the Chair to say, without any trouble. One objection can not prevent it.

Mr. RAINEY. I may say there will be no call of the Private Calendar to-morrow night.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman tell what will be the program on Friday?

Mr. RAINEY. We expect to have the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman expects to consider the District of Columbia appropriation bill on Friday?

Mr. RAINEY. The District of Columbia appropriation bill on Friday; yes, sir.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE

At 1 o'clock p. m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. Joseph J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, headed by the Vice President of the United States and the Secretary of the Senate, the Members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The Vice President took his seat as the presiding officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying the chair on his left.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the Congress, the Senate and House of Representatives, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws of the United States, have met in joint session for the purpose of opening the certificates and ascertaining and counting the votes of the electors of the several States for President and Vice President. Under well-established precedents, unless a motion shall be made in any case, the reading of the formal portions of the certificates will be dispensed with. After ascertainment has been had that the certificates are authentic and correct in form, the tellers will count and make a list of the votes cast by the electors of the several States.

The tellers heretofore appointed will take their places at the desk.

The tellers, Mr. GLENN and Mr. KING on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GIFFORD and Mr. JEFFERS on the part of the House, took their places at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hands to the tellers the certificates of the electors for President and Vice President of the State of Alabama, and they will count and make a list of the votes cast by that State.

Mr. JEFFERS (one of the tellers). Mr. President, the certificate of the electoral vote of the State of Alabama seems to be regular in form and authentic, and it appears therefrom that Franklin Delano Roosevelt, of the State of New York, received 11 votes for President, and John Nance Garner, of the State of Texas, received 11 votes for Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Chair will omit in the further procedure the formal statement just made, and will open in alphabetical order and pass to the tellers the certificates showing the votes of the electors in each State, and the tellers will read, count, and announce the result in each State as was done with respect to the State of Alabama.

There was no objection.

The tellers then proceeded to read, count, and announce, as was done in the case of Alabama, the electoral votes of the several States in an alphabetical order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Congress, the certificates of all the States have now been opened and read, and the tellers will make final ascertainment of the result and deliver the same to the Vice President.

The tellers delivered to the Vice President the following statement of the result:

The undersigned, OTIS F. GLENN and WILLIAM H. KING, tellers on the part of the Senate; LAMAR JEFFERS and CHARLES L. GIFFORD, tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, report the following as the result of the ascertainment and counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1933.

Electoral vote for President and Vice President

OTIS F. GLENN,
WILLIAM H. KING,
Tellers on the part of the Senate.
LAMAR JEFFERS,
CHARLES L. GIFFORD,
Tellers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The state of the vote for President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President of the United States is 531, of which a majority is 266.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, of the State of New York, has received for President of the United States 472 votes.

Herbert Hoover, of the State of California, has received 59 votes.

The state of the vote for Vice President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for Vice President of the United States is 531, of which a majority is 266.

John N. Garner, of the State of Texas, has received for Vice President of the United States 472 votes.

Charles Curtis, of the State of Kansas, has received 59 votes.

This announcement of the state of the vote by the President of the Senate shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States, each for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1933, and shall be entered, together with a list of the votes, on the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the purposes for which the joint convention has been called having been accomplished, the presiding officer dissolves the joint convention, and the Senate will return to its Chamber.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take this opportunity to express publicly my personal congratulations to our able and efficient Speaker, who to-day has been so overwhelmingly elected Vice President of the United States. [Applause, the Members rising.] May I wish him success in his new position, and may it be as pleasant to him as his service of many years in the House has been. I know I express the will of all your colleagues in the House when I extend to you our sincere congratulations and good wishes for the future. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Mr. Minority Leader, may I express my appreciation for your kind words concerning my service as Speaker and accept your congratulations upon my election as Vice President?

I do not think it out of order for me to say publicly what I have said privately—I would rather remain in the House of Representatives. [Applause.] I have enjoyed my service here. My ears and my eyes and whatever intellect I may have may be over there, but my heart will always be in the House of Representatives.

MILITARY STOREKEEPER

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1536, to provide for the appointment of a military storekeeper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, from my acquaintance with the bill I can not see why the Congress should, by congressional enactment, give a preferential status or preferred rank to some preferred person in the War Department, regardless of how meritorious the service of such subordinate or Army official may have been. I realize that on one or two occasions we have recognized such service by special act by conferring military rank upon some department official, but while such cases may have been meritorious, I do not think we should extend this to some noncommissioned officer of the War Department.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Michael Ilitz is an outstanding character. From my experience in the Army and out of the Army, Michael Ilitz, commonly known as Mike, is the most efficient enlisted man I have ever seen. Anyone who has ever traveled on an Army transport knows Michael Ilitz.

Mr. BLANTON. Is he married or single?

Mr. JAMES. He is single; and under this bill will get less money than he is now getting.

Mr. BLANTON. The department reports that he will get $1,789 more under the bill if he is single than he now receives.

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will read the supplemental report he will find that he will get $250 less under this bill than he is now getting.

Mr. BLANTON. The War Department states that if single he will get $1,789 a year more. The supplemental report is signed by an individual and not by the War Department.

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will read the supplemental report, dated April 12, 1932, he will find that he will get $250 less under this bill than he is now getting.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not from the War Department?

Mr. JAMES. Yes; in a supplemental report through a letter dated April 12, 1932, which letter was written at my suggestion.

Mr. BLANTON. The War Department said it would cost $1,789 a year more if he were a single man than he now receives. On account of the friendship we all have for our distinguished colleague from Michigan, it hurts like everything to object to this bill, but ultimately I am going to object to it. If, however, our friend wants to make an explanation, I will withhold my objection.

Mr. JAMES. I want to say a few words about this man.

Mr. BLANTON. If we grant $1,789 a year extra pay to every good fellow named "Mike" in the United States, the Treasury will soon be empty.

Mr. JAMES. As I have stated, this man will get $250 less under this bill than he is now getting.

Michael Ilitz enlisted in 1898 as a private, and after the war was over volunteered as a nurse in yellow-fever cases in Cuba. After this he went to Samoa and served about 13 years in foreign service, when he was retired. When the World War broke out he tried to get back into the Army, but could not get back because the War Department wanted to use him for demonstrating a field kitchen which he had patented and turned over to the Government without cost. After the war was over he went into the Army Transport Service. He is now in the Army Transport Service as quartermaster on the largest transport we have, the Republic.

Mr. BLANTON. The supplemental report which the gentleman refers to here is from some one named George Van Horn Moseley; who is he?

Mr. JAMES. Deputy Chief of Staff of the Army.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did not this come from the War Department?

Mr. JAMES. It did come from the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. He simply signs it as George Van Horn Moseley.

Mr. JAMES. He is Deputy Chief of Staff.

Mr. BLANTON. Everything that comes from the War Department is signed officially by some official authorized to speak for the War Department.

In this supplemental report it is stated that our good friend Mike now draws $4,649.80. How much more does he want to draw?

Mr. JAMES. He will draw less by $250.

Mr. BLANTON. Why do you want to bother him if he is now drawing $4,649.80?

Mr. JAMES. Because he would like to be a major when he retires.

Mr. BLANTON. So that socially he can sit a little higher at the table somewhere?

Mr. JAMES. No; he will not sit at any particular table.

Mr. BLANTON. Right now I think when a man is drawing $4,649.80 he ought to be satisfied.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

UNION SHIPPING & TRADING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2531, for the relief of the Union Shipping & Trading Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, can anyone give an explanatipn why this bill should provide for a special rule of evidence as is set forth?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves $85,000 and is too large to be passed under unanimous consent, and I object.

H. P. MILLIGAN

The Clerk read the next bill, H. R. 928, for the relief of Howard P. Milligan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill if this is the same beneficiary for whom a bill was passed nearly four years ago, and after being passed by the Senate was vetoed by the President?

Mr. SCHAFER. It is the same individual. It was not vetoed by the President. The President failed to sign it. He did not prejudice it by a veto. He failed to sign it because of an objection by the War Department. The War Department indicated that it would establish a precedent, but as a matter of fact it does not establish a precedent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the sometimes careful legislator from Milwaukee to what the War Department says. The Acting Secretary of War says:

> It is my opinion that special legislation of the type carried in this bill could be justified only in exceptional cases where the beneficiaries' attainments and qualifications are of such high standard that their reappointment to the active list would be a distinct benefit to the service. The case of former Major Milligan does not constitute such an exception. He was one of the officers selected for discharge in order to accomplish the reduction in the commissioned personnel required by the acts of Congress approved June 30, 1922, and September 14, 1922.

He says further:

> Further, the War Department is consistently opposed to legislation which would single out an individual of a class for preferential treatment not accorded to others of that class.
> Accordingly I recommend that H. R. 13440 be not favorably considered by your committee and be not enacted into law.

If we are going continually to show preferential treatment of our friends scattered over the country here and there, ultimately we are going to have more men on the pay roll than we have off. There will not be enough people left off the pay roll to pay the taxes or to even raise enough money to pay the annual pensions and emoluments.

There are plenty of men who served the country in France who ought first to be taken care of.

Mr. SCHAFER. I want to say that this man, Mr. Milligan, has had exceptional service. He was the director of infantry training in the Wisconsin University, and he got into a difficulty over some social affair. The department only sends the best men to these universities for training.

Mr. BLANTON. Why is it that the War Department recommends one way and the committee recommends another?

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman knows that the War Department is not always infallible. The proceedings were a star-chamber affair and no record kept.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not for giving special rights to anybody. I am for giving all the American people equal rights.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then the gentleman should object to every bill on the calendar, because every one gives some one a preference that others do not have.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ENROLLMENT OF CERTAIN PERSONS WITH THE OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2319) to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object, and in this connection put into the RECORD a statement of Judge Shiras in the case of Sloan against United States, One hundred and eighteenth Federal Reports, at page 283, in a case decided October 31, 1902, in which he states, regarding the persons whose names are included in this bill:

> In numerous reports of the alloting officers introduced in evidence in these cases it is reported that none of the several claimants was recognized by the tribe as members entitled to allotment, and these findings of fact have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and they will, for the reasons stated, be accepted as final by this court in the further consideration of these suits.

I submit for your further consideration the report of Indian Commissioner C. J. Rhoads on January 20, 1932:

> DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
> OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
> Washington, January 20, 1932.
> Memorandum for the Secretary.
> The accompanying letter of December 23, 1931, from Hon. EDGAR HOWARD, chairman House Committee on Indian Affairs, requests report on H. R. 2319, a bill to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians.
> Briefly, the proposed legislation is to enroll 48 persons, including the various members of the Frost, Barada, and other related families with the Omaha Tribe of Nebraska, and to appropriate funds for them in lieu of lands and payments with the tribe of which they claim to have been deprived.
> The records show that the applications of certain members of the families referred to for enrollment with the Indians mentioned were rejected by the department in 1891, as the applicants were not residing with the Omaha Tribe at the time of the treaty of March 6, 1865 (14 Stat. L. 667), were not included in the certified roll of 1871 submitted by the Omaha council containing the names of all Indians and mixed-blood persons entitled to rights on the Omaha Reservation, and belonged to the mixed-blood families provided with allotments on the Nemaha Reservation, Nebr., by the Omaha Tribe under the tenth article of the treaty of July 15, 1830 (7 Stat. L. 328). Subsequently, some of the applicants entered suit in the United States Circuit Court of Nebraska under the acts of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. L. 305), and February 6, 1901 (31 Stat. L. 760), alleging that they had been unlawfully denied land allotments on the Omaha Reservation.
> The court held in an opinion rendered October 31, 1902 (118 Fed. Rep. 283), that with the exception of two of the plaintiffs, namely, Thomas L. Sloan and Garry P. Myers, none of the plaintiffs was entitled to the rights sought. The court held also that the act of August 7, 1882 (22 Stat. L. 341), relating to the lands of the Omaha Tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and providing that, with the consent of the tribe, allotments in severalty should be made from certain lands within its reservation, superseded all previous legislation on the subject, and dealt with the tribe as it existed on the date of the act; and that the right to allotments thereunder was not confined to such persons as were members of the tribe at the date of the treaty of March 6, 1865, and entitled to allotments under its provisions.
> It was also held by the court that in some exceptional cases persons might be recognized to be members of the tribe, and as such entitled to allotments, although not upon the reservation when the act of 1882 took effect; but such recognition should be limited to such persons, if any, whom the tribe clearly deemed to be members.
>
> In this connection attention is respectfully invited to the case of Sloan v. United States (118 Fed. Rep. 283), which goes fully into the facts and contains a history of the matter. Reference is made also to the hearings before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, on S. 3992, to investigate the claims and to enroll certain persons therein referred to with the Omaha Tribe, which hearings were printed in 1918, and are entitled "Claims of Certain Indian Tribes."
> Similar bills have been introduced from time to time in Congress, but have failed to be enacted, as adverse reports have been made thereon by this department.
> In view of the court decision mentioned, and as the persons named in the bill have not been recognized by the Omaha Tribe as members thereof, it is recommended that the instant bill be not enacted into law.
> C. J. RHOADS, Commissioner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection until the author of the bill may have opportunity to make a statement?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I reserve my objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I am the author of the bill. I call the attention of the gentleman and the attention of the House to the fact that the tribal council of the Omaha Tribe of Indians has unanimously requested the passage of this legislation. It does not seek to immediately enroll anybody. It seeks to give the Secretary of the Interior a chance to investigate and to enroll these certain persons if, in his judgment, he deems it proper. That is all.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. It is 50 years now since this enrollment was completed, and upon the statute of 1901 these identical individuals covered by this bill, who were then at least 31 years younger than they are now, were unable to make their proof. I object.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. That is whether or not the Speaker knows of any action taken by the society of objectors which will lead to the necessary objection to everything in the nature of an Indian bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to state any conclusion on that question, and in addition doubts very much whether that is a parliamentary inquiry.

DONGJI INVESTMENT CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2872) for the relief of the Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd.).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I would like to see whether I can not remove the objection. This is a bill to relieve this eleemosynary corporation of a surcharge that was made against it when it was not able to perform its contract with the Navy Department. In the first place, the Navy Department went into the open market for the purpose of obtaining what is known as ohia keel blocks, which are blocks of a certain kind of wood grown only in the Hawaiian Islands. The Dongji Investment Co. was the only company that submitted a bid, so that the Navy Department was not in a position of having accepted this bid when it might have taken a lower one. Subsequently the company was not able to fulfill its contract, because it had difficulty with the timber that was cut, and it forfeited the contract, and the department then went out in the open market and purchased the ohia keel blocks, and surcharged this institution with the greater amount of money it cost them. It probably would have cost the Navy Department that in the first place if they had gotten it from a recognized dealer in lumber, but they took it from this eleemosynary institution, which had not yet established its saw mills and did not have an established business, under the idea that the Navy would get the thing cheap, but the Navy found out they could not get it. The Navy Department will not have lost any money if this bill is passed. The corporation has assets only of the value of about $15,000, against which there are outstanding some liabilities of $30,000, and the chances are that they will not be able to collect and will merely drive the institution completely out of business.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has stated the facts rather correctly.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. The department approves the bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. I am opposed to relieving bonding companies and insurance companies who require the principal to pay them a premium for the chance that they take, and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. went security for the faithful performance of this contract for the Navy Department to the extent of $2,300.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. That is correct.

Mr. BACHMANN. If the legislation passes, the bonding company will be relieved after they have collected the premium on the bond, for making good in the performance of this contract, and I must object as long as this legislation will have anything to do toward relieving a bonding company that has been paid for the chance that it took. I object.

EXPLOSIONS AT NAVAL AMMUNITION DEPOT, LAKE DENMARK, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5444, to provide an additional appropriation as the result of a reinvestigation, pursuant to the act of February 2, 1929 (45 Stat., p. 2047, pt. 2), for the payment of claims of persons who suffered property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosions at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J., July 10, 1926.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on a former occasion when the Private Calendar was being called a bill of similar import of an omnibus nature providing for reascertainment of the damages by the Comptroller General over those ascertained by the Secretary of the Navy was objected to. I have examined both bills, and I can not see wherein the bills differ, except that the present bill relates to different claimants.

Mr. STEWART. The gentleman will notice that the Comptroller General, Mr. McCarl, has approved each of these items. They are very small. These people have been kept out of their money since 1926. This terrible explosion took place there in my district. A naval arsenal blew up and spread destruction for miles in every direction. Most of those people are poor people and can ill afford to be kept out of this money.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not acquainted with the legislation whereby we delegated to the Comptroller General the reascertainment of the amount of the claims, but I am directing the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey to the fact that a bill of similar import, involving other claimants, was objected to on the prior call of the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will note that by a special bill passed by the Congress, the matter was referred to the Comptroller General of the United States for reinvestigation and reascertainment of the amount. Both the Navy Department and the Comptroller General recommend the payment of this exact amount covering the various claims specified. For that reason I have not objected to the bill, because when the Navy Department and the Comptroller General both pass upon them, I never object to them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I examined the other bill to which objection was made and I can not see any reason why objection should have been entered. I am only calling attention to the fact that objection was made, and I thought there might be some reason why the other bill was objectionable and this was not.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, I objected to the other bill, which my colleague has just called to the attention of the House, and I am going to object to this bill. The Navy Department made an investigation and it considered the amount of damages that was properly payable. Certain of the claimants were not satisfied with the findings as to the amounts determined by the Navy Department. Then there was jammed through the Congress legislation ordering the Navy Department to turn about-face and to increase, in a few cases, the original amounts which they determined. In view of the fact that this bill is to indicate that the Navy Department was incompetent when it made its first findings, which were not accepted by a few of the claimants, I am going to object to it.

Mr. STEWART. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. STEWART. I think the gentleman can understand that in the confusion following such a major catastrophe as occurred there it would be impossible to obtain a full list of claimants and a full statement of the damages. The matters to which the gentleman referred took place when I was not a Member of this Congress, but when my predecessor, Mr. Ackerman, had introduced this bill, but it was not presented in time, and it therefore came to me for consideration. I sincerely hope the gentleman, in view of the fact that the property of these people was destroyed and that they have been kept out of their money for such a long time will reconsider his position.

Mr. SCHAFER. I have no objection to the claims which were not already acted upon by the Navy Department and the amount of damages set by the Navy Department. What I object to is the portion of this bill which includes a certain small percentage of claimants who would not accept the actual findings of the Navy Department as to damages, and then, under an act of Congress, the Navy Department reopened and reviewed those few claims and increased the amount of damages. Certainly they should not have any second review just because they protested the findings of a qualified naval board in the first instance.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. Could the gentleman meet that by allowing this bill to pass the objection stage and then offering an amendment to that effect?

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman is willing to prepare the amendment, that might be possible. I have been working on these private claims in the Claims Committee, and I do not feel like preparing amendments myself. If the gentleman will prepare an amendment and take out of this bill the claims which were increased over the original findings of the Navy board, I shall not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Every one of the claims in this bill provides for an increase over the original adjudication.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] says he has the bill which has been reported and which the gentleman from Wisconsin says he approves of. Would the gentleman agree to allow the gentleman from New Jersey to ask unanimous consent to substitute that bill for the bill now under consideration?

Mr. BACHMANN. Is that the bill which was objected to in the last Congress?

Mr. BLANTON. That was the bill that carried the amounts which the gentleman from Wisconsin said he would not object to.

Mr. BACHMANN. I would oppose that bill if it is the same bill that was objected to before in the last Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Does it not carry a less amount than is carried in the bill under consideration?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the convincing argument of the gentleman from Texas, and in view of the fact that I leave my mind open for consideration of facts on the Private Calendar bills, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. BACHMANN. Well, reserving the right to object, I do not think this bill ought to pass under the circumstances. Only the other night there was a bill of the same kind, providing for other claimants, growing out of the same accident, and that bill was objected to. Now, on the same facts, after that bill has been turned down, here we are taking another part of it and passing it.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is the difference: The gentleman from West Virginia knows that Gen. J. R. McCarl, the Comptroller General, is called by everybody the most cold-blooded official of the United States in passing on claims against this Government. Whenever J. R. McCarl approves a claim we can rest assured that there is merit in it, that it is just, and that it is due by the United States Government.

This claim was submitted to Gen. J. R. McCarl. He is answerable to nobody else on earth except the Congress. He is not responsible to any other power on earth except the Congress. He has approved this claim. He has approved every item in the bill. He recommends that the bill be passed in settlement of the claims—all little claims, some in very small amounts. I hope the gentleman from West Virginia will not stop this bill. I was one of those who objected to the other one.

Mr. BACHMANN. Why does not the gentleman ask unanimous consent that we pass this bill and along with it the one which was objected to previously?

Mr. BLANTON. That one also ought to be submitted to General McCarl to pass on.

Mr. BACHMANN. It was submitted to him; they are all on the same basis.

Mr. STEWART. He has passed on all of them.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not interpose any objection to this bill which General McCarl recommends.

Mr. BACHMANN. Is the gentleman from Texas in a position to give assurance to the House that if this bill passes we will not be relieving some insurance company which has been paid a premium for the protection of the property?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know. I am not going to say that, because I do not know. I do know that the Comptroller General of the United States, in whom I have implicit confidence, says it ought to be paid.

Mr. BACHMANN. I will agree with the gentleman along that line, but I think we should at least have assurance that in passing this bill we are not relieving some insurance company that has been paid a premium for carrying the risk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a detailed examination of the various appendixes covering all these claims will show that they are in very small amounts, and it is to be inferred that they were not covered by any surety company. Most of these are not for damages covered by fire insurance but arise from damage to property which is not generally covered by fire insurance.

Mr. BLACK. Can not the objection of the gentleman from West Virginia be met by an amendment to the effect there shall be no assignment of any of these claims to any insurance company?

Mr. BACHMANN. When our good friend Mr. Ackerman, who preceded the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] was here he introduced a bill which provided for payment of all these numerous claims. Some insurance companies were included. However, they had already been given a premium for accepting the responsibility, and the bill was defeated in the last Congress for that particular reason. The bill comes up again, and indirectly we are going to relieve insurance companies.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I will accept any amendment the gentleman offers to the effect that there shall be no assignment of any award under this bill to any insurance company.

Mr. BACHMANN. If we are going to pass this bill with appropriate amendments and safeguards, we ought to have the understanding that we will pass the other one which was objected to the other night. The two bills are on all fours. If the gentleman will prepare the proper amendment, I shall be pleased to look at the other bill again.

Mr. BLANTON. We can not pass two bills at the same time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed for the time being to permit opportunity to prepare an amendment, to be called up later in the afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

FRANCES SOUTHARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7038, for the relief of Frances Southard.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a case of where a child ran into the truck rather than the truck running into the child.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The facts show just the opposite. Has the gentleman read the affidavits?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the affidavit of Jenny C. Rousseau, and the facts as gleaned from the bill are these: The children were returning from school——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The corner is blocks away from the public school.

Mr. STAFFORD. Returning from school, crossing the regular crosswalk, and one of the children ran across the street not at the regular crosswalk——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There is no such thing as a regular crosswalk in St. Louis. No marks of any kind at the crossing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at the regular crosswalk, but some 10 or 15 feet beyond the regular crosswalk. It is true that the evidence rather supports the contention that the truck driver turned the corner rather sharply. If the truck driver had not turned the corner sharply there would not be any basis for the claim against the Government.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BUCHMANN. I have this in mind; this evidence is conflicting. The two women say that the child was crossing at the regular crosswalk. The boys who testified before the coroner at the inquest testified that the child was not crossing at the regular crosswalk. So in that respect the witnesses differ as to whether the child was crossing at the proper place.

I think there is some merit in this claim. If the gentleman will agree to a limitation of $2,500, I shall not object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am simply making this statement in the absence of the author of the bill, who has been called to the department on important business, and because I know the situation at this corner. The city had just removed a traffic light there and a left-hand turn had never been permitted until a few days before this accident.

Mr. BACHMANN. Quite generally the committee has followed the rule that where the beneficiary is an adult the amount is $5,000, and in the case of a child the amount is less.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In the absence of the author of the bill, I shall take the responsibility of accepting the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I think probably we might as well accept the amendment, but while we are accepting so many of these reductions I do not want this to be established as a general principle.

Mr. BACHMANN. I may say to the chairman of the Committee on Claims that prior to his becoming chairman of the committee there was a rather definite understanding among the different committees handling such matters that where an adult lost his life the amount should be $5,000 and in the case of a child it should be less than that amount. This child was only 9 years old.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It is late in the session and the bill can not be reached again, and I shall take the responsibility of accepting the amendment, in the absence of my colleague.

Mr. BACHMANN. I think the bill should be further amended by putting in the age of the child.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Frances Southard, of St. Louis, Mo., to compensate her in full for all claims she may have against the United States arising out of the death of her son, William Southard, who was struck by an automobile truck belonging to the United States Government in the city of St. Louis on the 10th day of March, 1930.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the figures "1930," insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike out, in line 4, "$5,000" and insert "$2,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACHMANN: On page 1, line 4, strike out "$5,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment, in line 7, page 1, after the word "Southard," insert the words "aged 9."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACHMANN: Page 1, line 7, after the word "Southard," insert "aged 9."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PETER BESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 657, for the relief of Peter Bess.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter Bess, of West Springfield, Mass., the sum of $500, which sum represents the payment by him of a fine originally imposed in violation of the law by the United States District Court of Massachusetts and subsequently revoked by an order of the said court.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "court," insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, there should be a further correction of this bill; and I offer an amendment, after the word "court" and before the committee amendment, add a comma and the following, "on June 18, 1930."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACHMANN: After the word "court," in line 10 on page 1, insert a comma and the words "on June 18, 1930."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. AMES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1842, for the relief of William H. Ames.

Mr. HOPE and Mr. GRISWOLD reserved the right to object.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple case. An automobile in which the claimant was riding was in collision with a vehicle owned and operated by the American Railway Express Co. when that organization was under the control of the United States Government. The claimant was permanently injured. The Government did not contest the liability; in fact, made him an offer of $1,000. While the negotiations were in progress and, apparently, they were in progress for some time, the statute of limitations ran. The statute of limitations having run, Mr. Ames's only relief was through an act of Congress, so this bill was introduced.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. In just a moment.

I want to read one statement which appears on page 2 of the committee report.

It says:

It can not be doubted that Mr. Ames was misled by frequent visits from the claim agent. He was lulled into a sense of security and led to believe that he could effect settlement without bringing suit against the director general.

Mr. PITTENGER. If the gentleman will yield, I wrote that report, and ordinarily I would not write that kind of a report, but in going over the files and the record I used that language because it is correct. I know the methods of some of these claim agents; they deliberately mislead the man, fool along and do not get anywhere, but after the time the statute of limitations has expired——

Mr. BLANTON. There is no question of internationalism in this bill, is there?

Mr. TINKHAM. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. When the gentleman says "he was lulled into," and so forth, there were no Federal agents who thus lulled him? There were no stool pigeons, or wire tapping?

Mr. TINKHAM. No agents and no stool pigeons and no wire tapping involved. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. The bill calls for $2,000, but there is no medical testimony as to what the injuries were. The assistant director general says:

Mr. Ames received a severe injury of the right upper arm, the effects of which were rapidly disappearing, and that in his opinion there would be no permanent disability, and that he would probably be entirely well in two weeks.

That was the statement made by Dr. George W. Moss.

Mr. PITTENGER. If the gentleman will turn over to page 5, he will find a letter from Mr. Ames stating:

On account of wife being an invalid for the past six years and under the constant care of a nurse, and I myself being confined to the house for the past four years, we find ourselves at the age of 80 and 74 years, reduced financially and our life savings practically exhausted.

Mr. GRISWOLD. That is a letter from the claimant himself. All the medical testimony there is in this report is the man would be well in two weeks.

Mr. TINKHAM. He was a man well along in years at the time of the accident. He was offered $1,000.

Mr. HOPE. I object.

BETHEL CEMETERY CO.

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 2217, for the relief of the Bethel Cemetery Co., the Presbyterian Church, Harold S. Stubbs, George Morgan, Edward Stapp, William J. Howard, David J. Seacord, Mary L. McIntire, Emma E. Foard, Herbert C. Hannigan, Sisters of St. Baisl, Edward Bedwell, and Rachel A. Loveless.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, here is a provision for appropriating $964.29 for the repair of a pump or waterworks furnishing water for cemetery purposes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This is the Bethel Association. They use these waterworks for the whole cemetery.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, this claim arises out of the Government's increasing the depth of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, making it a sea-level canal, making it necessary to pump water——

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Not to pump, but for an injury to these wells.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is rather difficult for me to understand how they could suffer a damage of a thousand dollars merely by interfering with existing wells.

I do not understand about these other claimants. Here is a church at $146, and then there is a man named Stubbs for $175.45. All these seem to have arisen since the last session at which we passed a bill recognizing the principle in the case of two claimants. All of a sudden they crop up as weeds after a freshet.

Mr. BACHMANN. Am I right about this? At the last session, when the calendar was called, did we not pass a claim reimbursing a man because his cellar was flooded and he had to cement it and pump the water out of it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; that is all growing out of this.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Oh, no; that is a mistake. They did not all grow out of this.

Mr. STAFFORD. They arose out of the construction work in connection with the Delaware & Chesapeake Canal.

Mr. PITTENGER. That was some other claim.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. It seems the claims are developing fast over on the far shore of Maryland.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The claim mentioned is a claim which passed the Senate that I had no connection with. It was introduced by Senator Bayard; it had to do with something about a cellar up near Wilmington, on this same canal. That is a matter with which I had no connection whatever. I do not believe the bill ever passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. It passed when we last considered the Private Calendar.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. In the Seventy-first Congress the bill passed both the House and the Senate and was signed by the President. It provided for the relief of 25 individuals at Chesapeake City. After the bill had been reported, or about the time it was to be reported by the Committee on Claims, these other individuals, whose names appear in the bill which we are now considering, presented their claims to me, and I thought it would be fair to include it in a separate bill. They are not afterthoughts at all. The War Department sent a man down there to make an investigation.

Mr. STAFFORD. My eye lights immediately, I do not know why, on the name in this private act the gentleman hands me of the Bethel Cemetery Co.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will explain that.

Mr. STAFFORD. One of the claimants in this bill received $166.51. If we had in that act incorporated the perfecting clause that the money should be in full payment of all claims, I do not think this cemetery company would be here now asking for an additional sum of $964.29.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think that was put in the bill, but of course subsequent legislation repeals prior legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; it was put in, in full settlement of all claims against the Government, arising by reason of losses sustained by these various persons, among others the Bethel Cemetery Co. Why is the Bethel Cemetery Co. trying to get an added claim against the Government and nearly $1,000?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They spent the $166, and thought that they were going to get water, but did not get water. It was then necessary for them to dig other wells in order to get water, which is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of that cemetery, which is 2 miles east of Chesapeake City and covers a very large area. They had to do a lot of work up there before they got water, and I will say to the gentleman that the War Department made a very careful examination and say here that the Bethel Cemetery Co. has receipted bills for $1,286.76, so that the $964.29, the amount of the present claim of said company, is additional to the $166.51 in the previous claim. The War Department further says that the claim in equity is just and payable by the Government.

Mr. BACHMANN. Of course, if they had gone on there prospecting more for water they could have added more expense.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. But they got the water, and the claim is over.

Mr. BACHMANN. But the question the gentleman from Wisconsin is interested in, as am I, is whether or not they ought to be paid that much in this particular instance.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have difficulty in bringing myself to the conclusion that this additional expenditure is for replacement and putting them in the same condition as they were before. They have gone to added expense, and seem to have simply said that "Uncle Sam is rich and we have not got adequate water, so we may as well put in a fine water works and get some more."

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Oh, I have personal knowledge of that well, and it is about the same kind of well that they had before.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the assurance of the gentleman that he has personal knowledge is sufficient for me and I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Bethel Cemetery Co. $964.29, the Presbyterian church $141.28, Harold S. Stubbs $175.45, George Morgan $27.72, Edward Stapp $105.89, William J. Howard $40.25, David J. Seacord $47.50, Mary L. McIntire $68.25, Emma E. Foard $125, Herbert C. Hannigan $64.48, Sisters of St. Baisl $687.57, Edward Bedwell $87.58, and Rachel A. Loveless $96.76, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States by reason of the losses and damages caused, respectively, to the said Bethel Cemetery Co., the Presbyterian Church, Harold S. Stubbs, George Morgan, Edward Stapp, William J. Howard, David J. Seacord, Mary L. McIntire, Emma E. Foard, Herbert C. Hannigan, Sisters of St. Baisl, Edward Bedwell, and Rachel A. Loveless by reason of the damages to the wells on the properties of the said claimants caused by the lowering of the water level of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal at the town of Chesapeake City, in Cecil County, in the State of Maryland.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HOWARD M'KEE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6275, for the relief of Howard McKee.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am not the author of this bill, but I am familiar with the claim. It is sponsored by the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

In the year of 1917, when there were many thousands of Government troops at Fort Sill, near the city of Lawton, Okla., a great fire swept the city of Lawton and destroyed property of many citizens there, because of the fact that the Government was using all the water for troops and none could be had to fight the fire. It was clearly a case wherein the Government was at fault; and all of the other parties whose property was destroyed and who submitted their claims have been paid by special bills introduced by me and, as I recall, passed Congress in 1929. This claimant knew nothing about the original bill at the time, and for that reason only was left out in the preparation of my bill. This claimant is not a constituent of mine, but his claim is a just one, and I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Wisconsin will be good enough to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. There is one thing I would like to have cleared up. Does the gentleman know whether or not this property was covered by insurance? If it was covered by insurance, of course, the gentleman understands this will be for the relief of the insurance company.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. I can answer that. It was not covered by insurance. I investigated that for the Member who introduced the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. He had no insurance?

Mr. PITTENGER. No; he had none.

Mr. SCHAFER. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $915 to Howard McKee, of Rifle, Colo., as compensation in full for loss of property destroyed by the fire on September 24, 1917, in the city of Lawton, Okla., such loss having been the result of the inability of the fire department of the city of Lawton to control said fire because of lack of water, all available water for fire-fighting purposes having been appropriated and being used by the War Department in connection with the training of soldiers at Fort Sill and Camp Doniphan: Provided, That before said claim is allowed and paid, the Comptroller General of the United States shall make an investigation of said claim to determine the extent and amount of said loss and damage, and said claim shall be adjusted in amount not in excess of the amount set out herein and upon certificate issued to said claimant by the said Comptroller General of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "States," insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALFRED SOLLUM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10732, to adjudicate the claim of Alfred Sollum, a homestead settler on the drained Mud Lake bottom, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the author of this bill advised me to-day that this claim has been incorporated in permanent legislation, and asked me to move on his behalf that the bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

JOSEPH E. MYERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5704, authorizing the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, to order Joseph E. Myers, major, United States Army, retired, before a retiring board for a rehearing of his case and upon the findings of such board, either confirm his retirement under the provisions of section 24-b, act of Congress of June 4, 1920, or place him on the retired list, as provided by section 1251 of the Revised Statutes, for disability incurred in line of duty.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill seeks to place on the retired list a major who was retired under class B right after the war, and it would place him back and retire him now as a major when his first physical disability, if he had one, occurred when he was a lieutenant.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The bill would not necessarily place him on what we call the regular retired list. All the bill provides is that the Secretary of War shall convene a board, that the board shall investigate the case and say whether or not this man should have been placed on the retired list in the first instance, or whether he should have been retired as class B. If the board should determine that an injustice had been done, and this man had received a wrong, then the Secretary of War would have the power to place him on the regular retired list. The original injury occurred in line of duty when this man was a lieutenant in Cuba, back in 1902. For many years afterwards the man continued in service and his physical condition grew gradually worse, due in no small measure to his service in the Army.

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is my understanding from the report and from the report of the War Department that this man never at any time made application to retire because of physical disability.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. He did not.

Mr. GRISWOLD. He was retired because following the World War and the necessity of getting rid of the less capable officers, he appeared before the retiring board and they classed him as class B, due to that. Now he wants to come in under the physical-disability clause, which will bring him as a retired officer $1,072.50 a year more than he is getting now.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. This is not my bill and I have no personal interest in the matter. I happen to be chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs which held a very thorough and exhaustive hearing on this bill, and after having had all the evidence presented to that subcommittee, we were unanimous in the opinion that this man had been done an injustice, and that he had received a wrong that should be redressed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. As to the matter of injustice, permit me to say the Secretary of War in his report says:

A careful investigation of the record of Major Myers indicates that he was not the victim of either error or injustice, and that his rights, as well as those of the Government, were carefully safeguarded in the course of the proceedings which culminated in his retirement. He is physically and mentally sound and the department is consistently opposed to special legislation of the type carried in this bill, which would discriminate in favor of an individual of a class when others in the same category are not similarly favored.

The War Department recommends that this bill be not favorably considered, and that it be not enacted into law.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. May I say during my 10 years of service on the Committee on Military Affairs I have never known the War Department to favorably recommend any of these bills. The language which the gentleman has read to the House is what we might term the usual form language that the War Department uses with reference to these matters. The gentleman from Texas must remember this fact: That if this man was unjustly retired by being placed in class B, that was an error on the part of the War Department, and the War Department does not come here and confess error in these matters.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, that all of the personnel of the Army, through the War Department, get every single advancement they are entitled to naturally, and under the rules and regulations of the department. Now, for Congress to step in and give some extra advancement, that means thousands of dollars a year to the Treasury and to the taxpayers, in addition to continually going over the head of the War Department and the Navy Department and putting thousands of men on the pension rolls in addition to those who are entitled to pensions, will bankrupt this Government if it is not stopped.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Let me say to the gentleman that I agree with him; but this is an exception because an injustice has been done. Mistakes are made by officers in the Army just as mistakes are made by Members of Congress and everyone else in the world.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN] knows that I am talking good logic when I am backing up the War Department and the Navy Department in these recommendations. The gentleman is with me on it.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I am sure the gentleman from Oregon will state that some errors have been made by these different boards.

Mr. BLANTON. Not many errors have been made.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I will state very frankly that these officers who were class B'd have every chance in the world of beating the board, but had I been running the War Department I would have class B'd a great many of them.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman withhold his demand for the regular order for a moment?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I have a letter from Maj. Gen. G. F. Morrison, who was chairman of the board that class B'd this man. Major General Morrison says this:

> I have carefully read the recent letters from your former commanding officers. As I told you at the time I, as a member of the board, would not have placed you in class B had such evidence been available. With this information before me I can not but believe you entitled to the redress sought.

There is no doubt about the fact that all the evidence was not presented to the board that class B'd this man, and he really did not have his day in court. He has been done a serious injustice. The bill ought to pass. It simply gives him another hearing before a board.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. This man is now getting $150 a month. He seeks to have himself designated in a higher rank so he may get $250 a month.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; he is not seeking to have himself placed in a higher rank.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is what appears in the report from a statement on behalf of the War Department signed by Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. What this man seeks is to remove the stigma from his good name and have an opportunity to present his case again. The Committee on Military Affairs believes he should have this chance. We are not now passing on the justice of this man's case, but are providing that he may have it passed upon. I am sure the gentleman from Colorado would be the last one in this House who would want to have him deprived of his rights.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I hope the gentleman will at least give this man a chance.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The report of the Secretary of War clearly shows this man was not the victim of either error or injustice. This is legislation in favor of a special class; for that reason I object.

GEORGE CALDWELL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3611, a bill for the relief of George Caldwell.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection that I may point out what I believe is an obvious discrimination and injustice warranting favorable consideration of this case?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. SWING. Captain Caldwell entered the Regular Army as a private in 1895 and served more than 20 years. When the World War started he had been six years in the rank and grade of ordnance sergeant. The War Department then took him out of the position of ordnance sergeant and successively promoted him to second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain. Then finally came the general law for reduction of the number of officers, and he was retired with the rank only of warrant officer. If he had been left alone in his position of ordnance sergeant, with the longevity which the general law allows, he would have been at the end of the war much better off. But because of his ability and patriotism, he was promoted successively to the positions where he could and did render the greatest and best service to his country. Now he is penalized because of that same patriotism, ability, and service by being retired at a lower grade paying approximately $85 per month.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. That was done of his own volition. For business reasons, according to the report, he asked to be retired as a captain and accept one year's pay, probably because he could get it in cash, in preference of being retired as a warrant officer and getting $85.10 the rest of his life. He chose the lump sum and retirement as a captain.

Mr. SWING. Then the gentleman must not have read the report.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes; I have read the report.

Mr. SWING. The report says Caldwell has been retired as a warrant officer. Did the gentleman read his record of distinguished service and the decorations for valor beyond the call of duty during the World War, including the French croix de guerre, citations in orders, for conspicuous bravery, by General Pershing and Marshal Petain?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes; and I give him all the credit in the world for those things.

Mr. SWING. He received the decoration for bravery from France and was recommended for the distinguished-service medal of his own country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from California to what Hon. Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, said:

> There appears to be no reason why the beneficiary of this bill who, in accordance with his expressed preference, was retired as a warrant officer, should be reappointed as captain and immediately placed on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of that grade, to the prejudice of others of that class of former officers eliminated under the same conditions.

He says this bill ought not to be passed and recommends against it.

Mr. SWING. It was obviously this man's intention and desire to continue his service to his country in the Army, but he was up against the gun. When a man is shown the door, and he takes his hat and says he will go, can it be said he left of his own volition? This man did not want to retire. He wanted to serve, and his distinguished war record entitled him to continue. But if the interests of the Government were best served by a reduction in the number of Army officers, some notice ought to be taken of the hardship and injustice done this splendid officer by retiring him in a grade that leaves him far worse off than if he never had been promoted above ordnance sergeant, which position he held at the opening of the war. If retired in that grade and rank, with his earned longevity, he would now be drawing $138 per month instead of $85, now allowed him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman was in Congress when the Committee on Appropriations thought it was good policy to save $30,000,000 by reducing the officer personnel. The only way to reduce the officer personnel was to eliminate some of the men, and those eliminated were the least desirable. Those eliminated as the least desirable were given one year's pay. Does the gentleman think it justified that one should be singled out for preferred consideration by being brought back on the pay roll of the Government as a retired officer?

Mr. SWING. Unless there was some outstanding service which would merit this, and in this case a reading of the report discloses such service.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I have in my scrapbook the report of one of my friend's state-wide speeches in California promising the people of that State to reduce the expenses of this Government. His speech appealed to me so much that I am now following it by helping to stop the passage of this bill.

Mr. SWING. I have not seen the speech, but the gentleman makes a very good one. I do not want economy at the expense of an injustice to any man. If this man had been permitted to continue in his then capacity of ordnance sergeant he would be drawing the pay now as a retired ordnance sergeant of $138, whereas he is penalized for his promotions and only draws $85. He would have been better off not to have been a commissioned officer, but he responded to the call of his country and took the commissioned rank, where he could best serve his country.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ESTELLE M. GARDINER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5270, for the relief of Estelle M. Gardiner.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I reserve the objection.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, this was an accident to a constituent of mine, under these circumstances: There is an avenue up our way about as wide as Pennsylvania Avenue. If we take this [indicating] as north and this as south and this as a crossway, a mail truck was going north on this side; Mr. Gardiner stepped off of this corner and went across the street on the cross walk. A car was going south and the mail truck was coming up here [indicating], and as Mr. Gardiner stepped from behind this other car the mail truck hit him and knocked him down, and in a couple of weeks he died.

The department itself says that there was negligence on the part of the driver, and if the gentleman from West Virginia will read that report he will find it so states.

Mr. BACHMANN. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I have read this report very carefully. When I saw that my good friend, the gentleman from New York, had introduced this bill I read it again to be sure, because I know his ability as a lawyer and his fairness, and I wanted to be sure I was right. So I have read that report very carefully.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I can not understand why the gentleman is not convinced after reading the report.

Mr. BACHMANN. I may say to the gentleman there are two reasons. One is that there was a contributing cause for this man's death, and the other is that the claimant here appears to be a sister of the deceased, and there is no showing in the record that she was absolutely dependent or that the deceased was employed and qualified to contribute toward her support. I could eliminate this feature were the dependent the mother or a dependent father or a child, but the gentleman will appreciate that we are going far afield when we include brothers and sisters, unless they establish sole dependency, in trying to compensate them for the death of some member of the family.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. The sister has submitted a letter, which is not in the report, showing that the deceased was her sole support.

Mr. BACHMANN. I do not find that in the report.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. It is not in the report, but the committee has the letter.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman will appreciate that all we have to go on in these cases is the printed report and we must follow the report. If there is anything of that sort in the case I would be pleased for the gentleman to clear it up.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. The letter was filed with the committee a long time ago, stating that the deceased was her sole support. There was no rebuttal from the department and there was no necessity to submit any further proof than her assertion, when her statement was the fact.

Mr. BACHMANN. But I do not find in this statement of the beneficiary that he was her sole support. I understand she paid the funeral bill and he could not have been supporting her to any great extent if she had to pay the funeral bill.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. He had given her money from time to time out of which she paid the funeral bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does the gentleman know whether the deceased was employed or not?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. The deceased was employed. I understand he was an architect. She says in this letter, "Consequently, my brother being my sole support, I am left practically with no income."

This is her statement and the department would have rebutted this statement if it were not true. The committee may have left this out of the report, and I am sorry it left it out.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does the gentleman know the amount he contributed to the support of this sister?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. My best information is $150 a month and all that the committee recommends is $5,000.

Mr. BACHMANN. I am willing to accept the gentleman's statement when he assures the House with respect to this particular item that the deceased was gainfully employed and was supporting his sister to the extent of $150 a month. What does the gentleman from New York say about the contributing cause of this man's death, a chronic cardiorenal disease, which is a heart and kidney condition?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. As the gentleman well knows, when a man is injured in an automobile accident and dies directly as a result of such injury two weeks later on, you do not go back to see whether he has some kidney complaint or headache, or something of that sort. This man was 63 years old when several bones were broken and he was bruised and thrown down on the street and it could not be said that he died of some kidney complaint.

Mr. BACHMANN. Would this man have died if it had not been for this chronic disease?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Of course he would have died in the years to come, because he was 63 years old and did not have such a long life expectancy.

Mr. BACHMANN. In view of what the gentleman has said relative to these two inquiries, if the gentleman will accept an amendment striking out $5,000 and inserting $2,500, I shall not object.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. The amendment is forced upon me and I am glad to accept it.

Mr. BACHMANN. I do not want the gentleman to accept it in that way.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I am saying that somewhat facetiously. If the gentleman, who has the power to destroy my bill thinks that is the right amount, I am not going to argue with the gentleman. I have too high a regard for the gentleman's sense of justice to do that. The gentleman has a duty here and I accept the amendment with grateful thanks to the gentleman for his attitude.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Estelle M. Gardiner the sum of $10,000 damages suffered by reason of her brother, John Henry Gardiner, being struck and fatally injured by a Government automobile which was driven by an employee of the Post Office Department.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the figures "$2,500," insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "in the city of New York on August 4, 1930."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DELLA O'BRIEN

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 7128, for the relief of Della O'Brien.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I will reserve an objection.

Mr. BOLTON. What is the gentleman's objection based on? This is a very meritorious case. The girl was killed through no fault of her own but by the negligence of the driver of a post-office truck. She was the sole support of her mother and sister.

Mr. BACHMANN. How old was she?

Mr. BOLTON. Twenty-seven years of age.

Mr. BACHMANN. I will not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Della O'Brien, of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $10,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States on account of the death of Nora O'Brien, daughter of the said Della O'Brien, resulting from injuries received February 9, 1931, when a United States mail truck struck her: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I do so at this time for the reason that in going over the Private Calendar I have noticed that one gentleman in the House, a Member of the Committee on Claims, has taken a lot of his own time in preparing reports upon these bills on the Private Calendar.

I can not let this opportunity pass without paying the gentleman a little compliment for the time he has taken in order to perfect some of these measures in order to assist Members in getting their bills considered on the Private Calendar. I think it is very appropriate at this time to tell the House of the very fine work in this connection which has been done by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER]. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion but not to the sentiment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN]. I want to join in the tribute the gentleman from West Virginia paid the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER]. I have not seen in my time in the House any harder-working member of any committee on which I have served than the gentleman from Minnesota. It is all right to say a few kind words for him. He is leaving us at the end of this session. He has a very important bill before the Committee on Claims which the Committee on Claims has studied very carefully. It is at some place on the calendar and relates to the Minnesota fire claims. I hope the House will recognize his great service to the Committee on Claims in respect to the Private Calendar by at least giving proper consideration to his own bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the office of our friend from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] is close to mine, and I have observed many times how he works at night as well as in the daytime. I would go a long way to do a kindness to our friend from Minnesota, and when his bill comes up I may or may not object to it. The chances are that I shall, but I say this while we are passing, that all good things might likewise be said about our friend from New York [Mr. BLACK]. Our friend from Minnesota works because he likes to work, while our friend from New York does not do any more work than he has to, but he is busy all the time. [Laughter.] A man who is chairman of the Committee on Claims has to work. He can not get out of it. But I want to compliment him for the genial way in which he goes along with us fellows here, who do the hard work on these bills on the floor of the House. Whenever he makes an agreement with us, you can bet your head on it that he is going to stand by it and see to it that the House is protected in any agreement that is made about a bill. He is always ready to listen to suggestions, and he always has a smile to go along with us. I take my hat off to him. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ANNIE M. EOPOLUCCI

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5150) for the relief of Annie M. Eopolucci.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I reserve my objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin what his objection is?

Mr. SCHAFER. It is self-evident, the reason why I object. This is a bill to grant insurance benefits to the relative of some one who was killed before we entered the World War. It is a bill to take money out of the insurance fund of the Veterans' Bureau, which the veterans who have paid insurance premiums have an interest in, and pay an insurance claim on a policy which did not exist for a death which occurred prior to our entrance into the World War.

Mr. BACHMANN. When did we enter the World War?

Mr. BLANTON. In 1917, on April 6.

Mr. BACHMANN. That is when the war risk insurance act was passed and this occurred on April 1. The war risk insurance act went into effect on April 6.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman permit me to explain this case?

Mr. BACHMANN. Let me clear this one point. Referring to page 2 of the report, I find a statement that the war risk insurance act went into effect on April 6, 1917.

Mr. BLANTON, The gentleman will remember that the war resolution was voted after midnight of April 6, 1917, along about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. BACHMANN. I call attention to what the report says.

Mr. BLOOM. Please let me explain. On April 1, 1917, the ship on which this young man was serving was torpedoed. He had been in the service for 10 years prior to this time. When this young sailor boy went into the lifeboat, the lifeboat contained food and water and that was the last time that anyone saw the boy or the sailors that were in the lifeboat. It was adrift in the open sea. The Navy Department to-day claims that the young man officially died on the 1st of April, according to their records. There is no telling whether this young man was alive on April 6. He may have been alive on April 6, and this widowed mother is claiming for the death of her son only the same as all widowed mothers have received in war insurance for the death of their sons. It is not taking anything out of the Treasury that she is not entitled to. She gave her all for our country, and under the circumstances I do not think that the Navy Department or the War Department has a right to claim that the boy was dead on April 1. Suppose he was adrift on the high seas on April 6 or 7. The report shows that he had enough food and water in this boat to last him for 10 days.

So therefore this widowed mother is entitled to the same consideration as all other mothers. Let me say this also to the gentleman, that this lady is not a constituent of mine. This lady lives in the District of Columbia. She is a widowed mother, and at least she is entitled to some consideration.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Certainly.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman has made a very impressive argument, and I will say to the gentleman that I will not object to the consideration of the bill if the gentleman will offer an amendment that the payment of the money will come out of the Treasury of the United States, so that it is not taken out of the war-risk insurance fund under the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. BLOOM. Well, we have voted $2,500 and $5,000 to people who were killed by accidents on the streets, and here is a widowed mother asking for no more than everyone else has received.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I realize that, but the gentleman realizes that the veterans who have paid insurance premiums have an interest in this insurance fund. Certainly the gentleman should not object to having this come out of the Treasury of the United States instead of out of the insurance fund of the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Last week when we were considering the independent office establishment appropriation bill, the gentleman having charge of the bill [Mr. WOODRUM] acquainted the House with the fact that the Government is paying millions and millions of dollars out of the Treasury on insurance claims. Further, we can not, in the administration of this bill, if it is put into effect, provide for piecemeal, monthly payments, through the Treasury Department as is the case in the administration of the war insurance act. This bill seeks to grant to this widowed mother the payment of all accumulated monthly installments to which she would be entitled up to date, and then to continue the plan up to the extent of $5,000. The administration necessarily, if it is going to carry out the purpose of the bill, must be by the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] makes the point that there were no premiums paid on this insurance and it is taken out of the war-risk insurance fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. But in the administration of that fund the Government is contributing millions and millions of dollars because the premiums are not adequate to meet the requirements of the law. The United States Treasury is paying millions of dollars to this fund.

Mr. BACHMANN. In other words, as I understand the point made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], she is getting a preference that no others are getting.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; suppose this person had died on April 7. He would not have contributed a single premium. All those who died between April 6 and the time when we passed the law, on October 6, 1917, did not pay any premiums, but we paid the beneficiaries as if they had paid premiums.

Mr. BACHMANN. I agree with the gentleman absolutely, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] was directing his attention to that particular thing. I think this was the first boy killed in the World War. It is an outstanding, meritorious case, and I think it ought to be paid, but the question is whether it ought to be paid out of this fund or out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Certainly.

Mr. SCHAFER. Because my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has muddied the waters and, by indirection, tried to indicate that I did not know what I was talking about, I call attention to the fact that this bill does set out a special class, because it provides for the payment under the same conditions as if he had lived and had made a bona fide application for war-risk insurance. If he had lived and made a bona fide application for war-risk insurance, the money would have come out of the insurance fund in which all veterans have an interest.

Mr. BACHMANN. But this man could have been alive at the time the war risk insurance law was passed.

Mr. SCHAFER. Oh, yes. Two months ago we thought we might have beer before Christmas, too. I object, Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman will offer an amendment to pay it out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman reserve his objection, please?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman must remember that this boy had no opportunity to pay anything into the war-risk insurance. The boy was out on the open sea, and there is no telling if this boy was alive on the 7th or the 8th. He still would not have paid one cent to the war-risk insurance if he had been alive on the 7th or 8th, and if he had died then the mother would be entitled to this money. I am sorry the gentleman takes exception to the remarks made by some other gentleman, but if the gentleman knew this case——

Mr. STAFFORD. I owe an apology to the House for intruding myself into the discussion of this bill and muddying the waters.

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman knew this case as well as I do he would not object, because this widowed mother lost two sons in the war and she is entitled to some consideration.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SCHAFER. There is a great difference in the case of this automatic payment of insurance where death occurred prior to the enactment of the act, but by passing this bill as it is reported, you are giving the same benefits in the case of a death which occurred prior to the World War that you would have given if the soldier had lived and had made an application for insurance.

Mr. BACHMANN. How does the gentleman know he died before we were in the World War?

Mr. SCHAFER. Then I will ask the gentleman how he knows he would have made an application for insurance? I know many who did not make applications for war-risk insurance.

Mr. BLOOM. May I say this? He does not have to make application. It automatically comes to him. He does not have to make application, because he was on the high seas. This young man should receive the benefit of the doubt. This widowed mother lost two sons in the World War and is now going around trying to get a job.

Mr. SCHAFER. Maybe we can settle this is a minute. Under the language now carried in the bill the beneficiary will receive $5,000 because the boy died before the insurance law was enacted. Therefore the expenditure will come out of the Treasury of the United States directly through the Veterans' Administration and not out of the insurance fund of the veterans.

Mr. BACHMANN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOOM. In a way; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman look into the matter and take it up with the Veterans' Bureau to make sure this money will not be taken out of the insurance fund?

Mr. BLOOM. I shall be very pleased to do that.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, with that understanding, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will consent to this amendment: "But without any allowance for interest on such principal amount or deferred installments."

Mr. BLOOM. I will accept the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized and directed to pay to Annie M. Eopolucci, mother of John E. Eopolucci, all such installments of money which she would be entitled to receive if the said John E. Eopolucci who, while serving as a member of the armed guard of the United States Navy on the steamship Aztec, lost his life when said steamship was torpedoed and sunk on April 1, 1917, this while in the active naval service of the United States, had made a valid application for war-risk insurance in the sum of $5,000 under the war risk insurance act, as amended, had named the said Annie M. Eopolucci as his beneficiary and had died while such insurance was in effect, and, further, that it shall be held that such insurance shall be held to have matured as of the date of death and shall be paid retroactively such installments as may be due on the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 5, after the word "act," insert the following: "but without any allowance for interest on such principal amount or deferred installment."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: At the end of the bill add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

M'NEILL-ALLMAN CONSTRUCTION CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6435, authorizing the relief of the McNeill-Allman Construction Co. (Inc.); of W. E. McNeill, Lee Allman, and John Allman, stockholders of the McNeill-Allman Construction Co. (Inc.); and W. E. McNeill, dissolution agent of McNeill-Allman Construction Co., to sue in the United States Court of Claims.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve it to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. DOUGHTON. This, in my opinion, is a very meritorious claim. It has been considered twice by the Committee on the Judiciary. On one occasion elaborate hearings were held and every phase of the matter was gone into.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. How did the Committee on the Judiciary acquire jurisdiction?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am not a lawyer. I could not tell the gentleman. It was referred there in two Congresses, by the Parliamentarian, I presume. I did not have it referred there.

This is a claim, if the gentleman will indulge me, of a corporation formed in 1921 for the purpose of road construction. In 1922 they made their income-tax return and soon afterwards discovered they had reported a profit of $11,000, whereas they had sustained a loss of $3,474. They took the matter up with the collector of internal revenue and asked for a refund. They received notice from the income-tax division of the collector's office that they would probably receive a notice of overassessment within three or four years, and consequently were misled or lulled to sleep, and the time elapsed within which they could bring suit according to law.

This bill asks only that they be permitted to go to the Court of Claims and that the matter may be adjudicated on its merits.

This is certainly a very meritorious claim.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. My objection is based upon several grounds. First, this case has never been considered by the Committee on Claims of the House.

Second. There is no report from anybody, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or anyone else, as to the justice of this claim, or that there is anything due or coming to these people.

Third. On page 3460 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the first session of the Seventy-second Congress, the policy of the House in connection with claims for refund of taxes upon which the statute of limitations had run was set forth by the Speaker, and I ask unanimous consent to incorporate that statement at this place. In short, it is that these claims on which the statute of limitations has run shall not be subject to favorable consideration by unanimous consent. The statement of the Speaker is as follows:

The SPEAKER. Permit the Chair to make a statement with regard to this bill.

The Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, of which the Chair had the honor to be a member, thoroughly considered the question of waiving the statute of limitations with reference to taxes that were paid to the United States Treasury. In a survey the committee found that there were something over $4,000,000,000 against which the statute of limitations had been invoked. The Chair notices in the report on this bill that the Treasury Department calls attention to that fact.

The Chair makes this statement with a view to calling it to the attention of the gentleman from Idaho. If the precedent of waiving the statute of limitations on taxes paid to the United States Treasury is established, the Chair wonders where the limitation will stop, especially in view of the fact that there are now more than $4,000,000,000 in the Treasury in claims against which the statute of limitations has run.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does not the gentleman think we should give consideration to the claim of people who have been misled by officials of the Government?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. There are millions of dollars and probably billions of dollars represented by claims based upon so-called misstatements or misrepresentations of officials of the Government; but in this case, no matter what the gentleman's statement is, the Committee on Claims, which handles hundreds of these claims in every Congress, has had no opportunity to pass upon the claim.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The bill carries no money provision; it simply carries the right to sue; it simply provides that the statute may be waived and that the case may be adjudicated on its merits. It does not carry any appropriation whatever. It just gives them the right to have the claim heard and settled on its merits.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is why the gentleman is here.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I imagine it is.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes; and many similar bills have been rejected in this Congress representing millions of dollars.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not similar claims to this in which the people were misled or lulled to sleep by statements of an official of the Government. In this case I have a letter signed by the chief of the Income Tax Bureau, which caused the taxpayer to believe he would receive notice of overassessment.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NAVAL AMMUNITION DEPOT, LAKE DENMARK, N. J.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the bill H. R. 5444, Private Calendar No. 629, under the previous order of the House.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5444) to provide an additional appropriation as the result of a reinvestigation, pursuant to the act of February 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 2047, pt. 2), for the payment of claims of persons who suffered property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosions at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J., July 10, 1926.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $14,090.55 be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States, to make payment of claims for property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosions at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J., July 10, 1926, to the respective persons and in the respective amounts as recommended by the Comptroller General of the United States and as fully set forth in House Document No. 716, Seventy-first Congress, third session, pursuant to the act of March 2, 1927 (44 Stat., pt. 3, p. 1800), and the act of February 2, 1929 (45 Stat., pt. 2, p. 2047).

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEWART: Page 2, after line 6, insert "No part of the sums herein appropriated shall be paid to any insurance company or other indemnifier, nor shall any claimant be paid for the whole or that part of any claim for damages which has been paid to such claimant by an insurance company or other indemnifier."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DONGJI INVESTMENT CO. (LTD.)

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 628, a bill for the relief of Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd.), to which I objected because it sought to relieve a bonding company. An amendment like the one just adopted will be offered to this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we do not want to establish the precedent now of going back to bills that have been objected to. We had an understanding with the gentleman from New Jersey about this particular bill, but there will be other requests coming in here and we ought to go through with the calendar.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a kind of church organization over there, composed of a number of poor people who are involved in this case.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object to going back to this bill, but I shall object to any similar requests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 628. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2872) for the relief of the Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd.).

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we went back to this bill after the gentleman made the statement that it was for the relief of a church. We find the title of the bill is for the relief of the Dongji Investment Co. Do investment companies run churches over there?

Mr. BACHMANN. Yes; this organization was incorporated under this name. It is composed of a number of poor people at this place who were protected under this organization, and the only thing I am trying to do is to say that the bonding company is not to be reimbursed. The rest of the claim is very meritorious.

Mr. CULKIN. Perhaps the investment is in the next world.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd), an Hawaiian corporation, organized under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii, be, and it is hereby, released from any and all claims for damages which the United States of America may have against it arising out of its breach of contract No. N311S-2830, dated March 18, 1929, by and between the Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd.) and the United States of America.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACHMANN: On page 1, line 6, after the word "damages," insert a comma and the following: "in excess of the amount of the performance bond given by such company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WILLIAM J. COCKE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6283, for the relief of William J. Cocke.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the report on this bill. The Secretary of War states as follows:

The claim from Mr. Cocke was first submitted to the War Department in 1919, but after an adverse ruling had been made thereon by the Judge Advocate General on August 28, 1919, claimant presented his case to the War Department Claims Board, which, on November 5, 1920, denied the claim on merits and because of lack of jurisdiction. It was thereupon filed as case No. C-355, with the Court of Claims. By reference to volume 59, page 969, Court of Claims Reports for 1923-24, it will be seen that the suit was dismissed without formal opinion on January 28, 1924. Later the claim was reopened in said court but the case was again dismissed by that tribunal on two grounds, namely, because the plaintiff had no legal right to recovery, and because the amount of loss was not ascertainable.

The department reports against this bill. If passed, it would take $9,116.88 out of the Treasury, and I object.

Mr. BACHMANN. Reserving the right to object, in addition to that, there was a provision in the contract relieving the Government of responsibility.

Mr. BLANTON. There was such a provision in the contract.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I withhold it.

Mr. WEAVER. This is a good illustration of how gentlemen do not digest the reports.

Mr. BLANTON. We have digested that part of it.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman read it correctly. I will say to you that this man entered into a contract with the War Department.

Mr. BACHMANN. If the gentleman can show that this man has a meritorious claim, I will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me say to the gentleman that Patrick Hurley, Secretary of War, says:

The Government's obligation thereunder has been discharged. It is the view of this department that William J. Cocke is not entitled to any compensation other than what he has already received in connection with transactions pertaining to these agreements, and favorable consideration of this bill is not recommended.

Mr. WEAVER. In answer to the gentleman I will have to explain the contract and bids. During the war the War Department advertised for bidders to take away the garbage from the various war camps established in the South. One was at Greenville, S. C. William J. Cocke entered into a contract with the Government, my Government and your Government, that they would deliver to him the garbage of that camp.

In order to carry out his part of the contract he was compelled to purchase a large number of hogs—and this is the way adopted by the War Department for the disposition of the garbage—and in addition to buying the hogs he had to build pigsties, purchase trucks, to help get rid of the garbage, and they did not deliver to him a single pound. If you say that is fair treatment, then I have nothing more to say.

Mr. BLANTON. I am only giving the gentleman what the Secretary of War says. He says there was this provision in the contract:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to impose any obligation on the part of the United States to guarantee the delivery of any specific quantity of garbage.

Mr. STAFFORD. The opinion of the Court of Claims is just the opposite to the gentleman's bald statement that they did not deliver any garbage to him.

Mr. WEAVER. Let me read what the Court of Claims says about it:

The complaint of the plaintiff centers exclusively around the fact that under the contract he was to receive all of the garbage of the specified classification to be delivered to him by the Government at certain transfer points fixed by the commanding officer of the camp, and this is precisely what the contract provided. In so far as the nonobservance of this covenant is involved, the case is free from difficulty. It was not carried out. Large quantities of garbage which the plaintiff should have had were diverted, some of it stolen, and much of it sold to other parties. The plaintiff had established at approved points outside the camp extensive pigsties, purchased a number of hogs, and was fully equipped to fatten the same upon the garbage he expected to receive.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman made a prefatory statement that none of the garbage was delivered to this man.

Mr. BACHMANN. That does not mean that none of the garbage was delivered.

Mr. WEAVER. There may have been a small quantity delivered. It said it was not carried out, and large quantities which it had were sold to other parties. The court stated in its opinion that this resulted in absolute financial disaster to this claimant.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TWENTIETH AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication which was read:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 8, 1933.

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I inclose for your records a photostat copy duly certified of the certificate dated February 6, 1933, which I have issued pursuant to section 160, title 5, of the United States Code, certifying that the twentieth amendment has become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution of the United States.

Very truly yours,

H. L. STIMSON.

(Inclosure: Certified photostat copy of certificate dated February 6, 1933.)

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1933; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 5357. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 9, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

916. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting for the consideration of Congress draft of a proposed bill to authorize credit in the accounts of Capt. L. P. Worrall, Finance Department; to the Committee on Claims.

917. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter pursuant to the rivers and harbors act of July 3, 1930, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 26, 1933, submitting data for the revised edition of Preliminary Examinations, Surveys, Projects, and Appropriations; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

918. ## THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1933

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, who stilleth the roaring of the seas and the tumult of the people, who maketh the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice; hearken unto our prayer, for unto Thee shall all flesh come. Be merciful unto us, O God, be merciful unto us, for our soul trusteth in Thee, and under the shadow of Thy wings shall be our refuge until these calamities be overpast. Remove from us all doubt and fear and fill us with the spirit of true godliness. Dedicate us day by day to the joyful service of Thy will in this our generation, and own us as Thy children in time and in eternity. Through Jesus Christ our Lord.

TWENTIETH AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION—CHANGE IN DATE OF INAUGURATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, for the records of the Senate, a photostat copy, duly certified, of the certificate dated February 6, 1933, issued by him pursuant to section 160, title 5, of the United States Code, certifying that the twentieth amendment has become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution of the United States, which, with the accompanying certificate and proclamation by the Secretary of State, dated February 6, 1933, regarding the amendment to the Constitution fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress, was ordered to lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of Connecticut, transmitting certified copy of a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Connecticut ratifying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of the President and Vice President and Members of the Congress and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBERS,
Hartford, February 3, 1933.

The Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith to you a certified copy of the resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, fixing the commencement of the terms of the President and the Vice President and the Members of the Congress and fixing the time of the assembly of the Congress, which proposed amendment was ratified by the Connecticut House of Representatives on January 26, 1933, and by the Senate of the State of Connecticut on January 27, 1933.

I have the honor, sir, to be, your obedient servant,
WILBUR L. CROSS.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January session, A. D. 1933.

Resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembly of Congress

Whereas the Seventy-second Congress of the United States of America, in both Houses by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, has made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress

"Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of said Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided in the Constitution:

"'ARTICLE —

"'SECTION 1. The terms of the President and the Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

"'SEC. 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

"'SEC. 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

"'SEC. 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

"'SEC. 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

"'SEC. 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission'":

Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing preamble and resolution be forwarded by the Governor of the State of Connecticut to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Passed January 26, 1933.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
SENATE.

Passed January 27, 1933.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
Office of the Secretary, ss:

I, John A. Danaher, secretary of the State of Connecticut, and keeper of the seal thereof, and of the original record of the acts and resolutions of the general assembly of said State, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembly of Congress with the original record of the same now remaining in this office, and have found the said copy to be a correct and complete transcript thereof.

And I further certify that the said original record is a public record of the said State of Connecticut now remaining in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Hartford, this 2d day of February, 1933.

[SEAL.] JOHN A. DANAHER, Secretary.

MEDICAL SERVICES IN PRISONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the furnishing of medical services in Federal prisons, and transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the Public Health Service to provide medical services in Federal prisons," which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Frank C. Jordan, secretary of state of the State of California, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the transcript, to which this certificate is attached, with the record on file in my office of which it purports to be a copy, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy thereof. I further certify that this authentication is in due form and by the proper officer.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the great seal of the State of California to be affixed hereto this 31st day of January, 1933.

This resolution was received by the governor this 28th day of January A. D. 1933, at 2.55 o'clock p. m.

WM. A. SMITH,
Private Secretary of the Governor.

Senate Joint Resolution 9, relative to memorializing Congress to pass S. 1197, known as the farmers' farm relief act

Whereas a crisis exists and hundreds of thousands of once prosperous farmers of this Nation have already lost their homes and their all by mortgage foreclosures because of the fact that the price of agricultural products has for years been below the cost of production, a condition that affects all of the people of this Nation and is largely responsible for the continuance of the depression; and

Whereas there is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness and the farmers are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors; and

Whereas unless immediate relief is given thousands and hundreds of thousands of additional farmers will lose their farms and their homes and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions, precipitating a condition that threatens the very life of this Nation; and

Whereas the State Legislatures of Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nevada, and Illinois have each and all memorialized Congress to pass Senate bill No. 1197, known as the Frazier bill, without delay, which bill provides that existing farm indebtedness shall be refinanced by the Government of the United States at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ per cent principal on the amortization plan, not by issuing bonds and plunging the Nation further into debt but by issuing Federal reserve notes the same as the Government now does for the banks through the Federal reserve bank: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That they respectfully request and petition the Congress of the United States to pass Senate bill 1197 in order that the agricultural indebtedness of this Nation may be speedily liquidated and refinanced and agriculture saved from utter ruin and destruction and this depression brought to an intelligent and speedy end; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House, and to the Representatives of this State in Congress.

FRANK F. MERRIAM,
WALTER J. LITTLE,
Speaker of the Assembly.

Attest:
[SEAL.] FRANK C. JORDAN,
Secretary of State.

(Indorsed: Filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of California, January 28, 1933.)

[SEAL.] FRANK C. JORDAN,
Secretary of State.
By CHAS. J. HAGERTY,
Deputy.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to pass Senate bill No. 1197, known as the Frazier bill

Whereas a crisis exists and hundreds of thousands of once prosperous farmers in this Nation have already lost their homes and all of their possessions by mortgage foreclosures because of the fact that the price of agricultural products has for years been below the cost of production, a condition that affects all of the people of this Nation, and is largely responsible for the continuance of the depression; and

Whereas there is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness and the farmers are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors; and

Whereas unless immediate relief is given thousands and hundreds of thousands of additional farmers will lose their farms and their homes and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions, precipitating a condition that threatens the very life of this Nation; and

Whereas there is pending in Congress a measure known as Senate bill No. 1197, known as the Frazier bill, which provides that existing farm indebtedness shall be refinanced by the Government of the United States at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ per cent principal on the amortization plan, not by issuing bonds and plunging the Nation further into debt but by issuing Federal reserve notes, the same as the Government now does for the banks through the Federal reserve bank: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana (the House of Representatives concurring), That the General Assembly of the State of Indiana hereby memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass Senate bill No. 1197 without delay in order that the agricultural indebtedness of this Nation may be speedily liquidated and refinanced and agriculture saved from utter ruin and destruction and this depression brought to an intelligent and speedy end.

SEC. 2. The secretary of the senate is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to each United States Senator and Member of the Congress from Indiana.

I hereby certify that this is a true and correct copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 3, which passed the Indiana General Assembly January 23, 1933.

DICK HELLER,
Secretary of Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

RESOLUTION

Memorial to the Seventy-second Congress of the United States (introduced by Senators Andersen, Pedersen, and Neubauer) to further pending legislation now before that honorable body with respect to Senate File No. 1197, now under consideration by the honorable Senate of the United States of America

Whereas there has been introduced by the Hon. LYNN FRAZIER, United States Senator from North Dakota, a bill identified and referred to as S. F. 1197 in the Senate of the United States, which said bill has for its aim and purpose the liquidation and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness, and to encourage and promote agricultural commerce and industry by establishing an efficient credit system through which the unjust and unequal burdens placed upon agriculture during the period of price fixing and inflation may be lightened by providing for the liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness for a reduced rate of interest through the Federal farm loan system, the Federal reserve bank system, and the postal savings depository system, and creating a board of agriculture to supervise the same; and

Whereas such proposed legislation appears to be a benefit and service to agriculture generally, and Nebraska being an agricultural State, such legislation should and would be of great benefit to the farmers of Nebraska: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Nebraska, That Congress be, and hereby is, memorialized to act favorably on Senate File 1197 of the Senate of the United States at any early date.

Adopted February 2, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Memorial 2

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Thirty-seventh Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas since the World War farm products have been gradually decreasing in price; and

Whereas a crisis exists and hundreds of thousands of once prosperous farmers in this Nation have already lost their homes and their all by mortgage foreclosures because of the fact that the price of agricultural products has for years been below the cost of production, a condition that affects all of the people of this Nation and is largely responsible for the continuance of the depression; and

Whereas unless immediate relief is given thousands and hundreds of thousands of additional farmers will lose their farms and their homes, and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions, precipitating a condition that threatens the very life of this Nation; and

Whereas the State Legislatures of Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Illinois have each and all memorialized Congress to pass Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier bill, without delay, which bill provides that existing farm indebtedness shall be refinanced by the Government of the United States at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ per cent principal on the amortization plan, not by issuing bonds and plunging the Nation further into debt, but by issuing Federal reserve notes the same as the Government now does for the banks through the Federal reserve bank: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives jointly concurring therein), That we, your memorialists, the Thirty-seventh Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully petition the Congress of the United States of America to pass Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier bill, in order that the agricultural indebtedness of this State and Nation may speedily be liquidated and refinanced and agriculture saved from utter ruin and destruction. The farmers ask for no charity, they simply ask that American agriculture be placed on a basis of equality with other industries. They ask that the Federal reserve system be made to function for them as it is functioning for other industries. Since the Federal reserve bank is now loaning Federal reserve notes to New York banks at 1½ per cent interest—and since our Government refinanced the foreign nations to the extent of $15,000,000,000 at less than 1½ per cent interest—we feel that this bill asks nothing but simple justice and a square deal for agriculture. As a Nation we have protected industries by tariff laws for generations, and we feel that the farmer is now entitled to first consideration at the hands of Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed forthwith to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House, and to the Oregon delegation in Congress, with the request that they promote the passage of Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the Oregon delegation in Congress be requested to promote the passage of such a bill in a most energetic manner in order that the people of Oregon and the Pacific Northwest may receive the benefits to be derived therefrom.

Adopted by the senate January 20, 1933.

STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial 2 with the original thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state February 2, 1933, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATEHOUSE,

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit Senate Joint Memorial No. 1, in which the eleventh legislature, now in session, respectfully prays that Congress enact a measure which will afford the needed relief, providing, if necessary, for the refinancing by the Federal Government of all legitimate farm loans on a long-term basis.

Very truly yours,

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 1 of the regular session of the Eleventh Legislature, State of Arizona, all of which is shown by the original engrossed copy on file in this department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Arizona. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 30th day of January, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.]

JAMES H. KERBY,
Secretary of State.

Senate Joint Memorial 1

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents:

Practically all Arizona farms are encumbered by some form of mortgage, and during the past two years or more owners have been faced with the necessity of meeting their principal payments and interest, plus taxes, water charges, and other operating costs, on a 100 per cent basis, with products representing approximately 35 per cent of their former sale value.

In spite of this apparently impossible situation farmers have with courage and determination continued their activities, kept production at a normal point, and, by great sacrifices, succeeded in meeting imperative obligations.

Liquid assets have necessarily been expended and, in most cases, totally exhausted in this effort. There is a large surplus of hay, alfalfa seed, and other farm products now on the farms and in storage for which there is no market. Such products as can be sold at all are being disposed of at prices which provide only the barest sort of a living for farm families and the payment of water charges—the irreductible minimum of expenditures necessary for the continuation of farming operations.

Farm owners can not pay interest on their indebtedness and can no longer meet principal installments until better prices are to be secured for farm products. They have no assurance that leniency will be granted by their creditors for any specified time. This uncertainty threatens the morale of those engaged in the agricultural industry and the uncertainty of the future promises to bring about a wholesale abandonment of farm property in this State.

Those who find it impossible to meet their obligations are, in most cases, farmers who are willing to continue their efforts in an attempt to protect their creditors' security and to salvage at least a portion of their life savings. Because of their experience, training, and personal interest, the farmers are in a far better position to protect creditors' interests than are the creditors themselves, and will, with reasonable cooperation on the part of the creditors, willingly make further sacrifices to conserve the value of the security for which they are individually responsible.

Short-time credits, contemplating the resumption at an early date of principal payments, the additional payment of delinquent and maturing interest and other payments, offers no relief. The uncertainty of future markets precludes any constructive farm program except it be based on present conditions, and such conditions require leniency on the part of creditors if operations are to be continued.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully prays that Congress enact a measure which will afford the needed relief, providing, if necessary, for the refinancing by the Federal Government of all legitimate farm loans on a long-term basis, with an interest rate based upon the cost to the Government of carrying out the program.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
President of the United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with instructions from the legislature, we are herewith inclosing a copy of Senate Joint Resolution No. 8, introduced by Senator Branson on January 31, 1933.

Yours very truly,

W. G. GREATHOUSE,
Secretary of State.

Senate Joint Resolution 8, memorial to Congress

The Legislature of the State of Nevada hereby respectfully represents that—

Whereas owing to the suspension of 15 banks in the State of Nevada, of a total of 26 doing business in this State, such closed banks holding as deposits the school money of the State and 12 out of 17 counties, approximately 700 teachers in Nevada are not being paid their salaries, and within the next few weeks or days several of our high schools and various other schools will have to close for want of funds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of Nevada, That we earnestly beseech Congress to adopt the Oddie amendment to the reconstruction finance act whereby money can be loaned to schools.

Resolved, That the preceding paragraphs of this memorial be transmitted by air mail to the members of the Nevada delegation at Washington, the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Concurrent resolution (by Mr. Thurmond) to memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act so as to permit the States and political subdivisions thereof to borrow money for the purpose of refunding loans to be retired by taxation

IN THE SENATE.

Introduced January 26, 1933 (obj.).

Sent to house, by order of the senate.

JAS. H. FOWLER, Clerk.

IN THE HOUSE.

Introduced January 27, 1933.
Concurred in, as amended, and returned to senate, by order of the house.

J. WILSON GIBBS, Clerk.

A concurrent resolution to memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act so as to permit the States and political subdivisions thereof to borrow money for the purpose of refunding loans to be retired by taxation

Whereas under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act the use of Federal credit is not extended to the State and its political subdivisions except on self-liquidating projects; and

Whereas it would be of great benefit to the State and its political subdivisions if loans could be made to the State and its political subdivisions to retire existing obligations in an orderly manner over a period of years with the advantage of a lower rate of interest than otherwise obtainable: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act by eliminating the prohibition in the act against loans to States and political subdivisions thereof to be retired by taxation and then to extend the powers of the corporation to enable it to lend to the States and political subdivisions for the purpose of retiring existing obligations heretofore made by them, and which are to be retired by taxation.

A true copy.

JAS. H. FOWLER, Clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

A concurrent resolution urging the United States Senate to expedite a vote upon ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway treaty

Whereas the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway treaty is now in the hands of the Foreign Relations Committee, having passed through the hands of a subcommittee, where full and comprehensive hearings were granted to all interested parties; and

Whereas sufficient publicity has been given to this project so as to enlighten the whole of our people; and

Whereas it now appears that there exists a real and imperative need for a waterway outlet for the products of the great Middle West; and

Whereas it appears that the immediate effect of ratification would result in the expenditure of large sums of money for labor and materials; and

Whereas such outlay by the Government would permit of great increase in employment, thereby lessening the burden of the present depression, for which there seems to be no immediate remedy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Fifty-seventh Legislature of the State of Michigan requests the Senate of the United States to delay no longer in bringing the matter of ratification before that body for final consideration.

Boise, February 4, 1933.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am submitting certified copy of House Joint Memorial No. 7, as directed by resolution contained in the memorial.

Very truly yours,

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Franklin Girard, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, and legal custodian of the original enrolled copies of all acts passed at the various sessions of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed constitute a full, true, and complete transcript of the original enrolled copy of House Joint Memorial No. 7, enacted by the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, and filed in this office the 4th day of February, 1933.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise, the capital of Idaho, this 4th day of February, A. D. 1933.

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House Joint Memorial No. 7, by judiciary committee, a joint memorial to the honorable the Senators of the United States of America.

Received and filed February 4, 1933.

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House Joint Memorial 7 (by judiciary committee)

To the honorable the SENATORS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent—

That relief through appropriate legislation must immediately be extended to those engaged in agriculture, to home owners, and to others who now find themselves in a condition because of a depression which is not of their making that they can not meet obligations that have been justly incurred and through no fault of theirs are about to lose the savings and accumulations of a lifetime.

That the relief that can be had under the proposed amendment to the national bankruptcy act recently passed by the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States (H. R. 14359) will be more effective, more far-reaching, and more uniform in its operations than any relief that can be had through State legislation.

We would, therefore, most respectfully but earnestly urge your honorable body to promptly pass the proposed amendments to the national bankruptcy act, and we would urge that such action be taken at the earliest possible date, to the end that if relief in this national crisis can not be had through Federal legislation that we may have time before the adjournment of our regular session to enact such State legislation, inadequate as it may be, to remedy a situation that seems to imperil our social and economic systems: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (the Senate concurring), That the secretary of state be instructed to send immediately by air mail copies of the foregoing memorial to the Vice President of the United States and to Senators WILLIAM E. BORAH and JOHN THOMAS.

This house joint memorial passed the house on the 3d day of February, 1933.

ROBERT COULTER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This house joint memorial passed the senate on the 3d day of February, 1933.

GEO. E. HILL,

I hereby certify that the within House Joint Memorial No. 7 originated in the house of representatives during the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

DONALD D. STEWART,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana, which was ordered to lie on the table:

A concurrent resolution concerning the Volstead Act

Whereas there is an unmistakable manifestation of public sentiment throughout the country for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and pending the repeal of such eighteenth amendment, for the drastic modification of the Volstead Act, purporting to regulate and prohibit the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating liquor; and

Whereas this sentiment has been given emphatic expression in the State and national platforms of both of the major political parties; and

Whereas the return of a well-regulated liquor traffic will impart the much-needed impetus to the paralyzed industrial life of the Nation, afford employment for hundreds of deserving workmen, supply the impulse which is essential to terminate the intolerable industrial depression under the baneful influence of which the country is now suffering, and supply the Government with badly needed revenue: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana (the House of Representatives concurring), That the General Assembly of the State of Indiana respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States, at its present session, to make such changes in and amendments to the national prohibition act as are constitutionally possible, and of such nature as to concretely reflect the liberal tendencies of the country, to suppress the intolerable and gigantic systems of bootlegging and organized crime which have terrorized the country and rendered life and property equally insecure, to impart the needed stimulus to the sluggish industry of the country, and to recruit the depleted coffers of the Treasury from sources which have heretofore constituted the ill-gotten gains of gangsters and the lawless elements of the underworld.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be sent by the secretary of the senate to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives and the Presiding Officer of the Senate of the United States and to each Member of Congress from the State of Indiana. The respective Houses of the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully requested to spread this resolution upon the records of the two Houses of Congress, respectively.

I hereby certify that this is a true and correct copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 1, which passed the Indiana General Assembly January 23, 1933.

DICK HELLER, Secretary of Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the board of aldermen of the city of St. Louis, Mo., favoring the passage of legislation authorizing the issuance of a special series of postage stamps to commemorate an anniversary of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Mohliver Branch, No. 275, Workmen's Circle of the Bronx, New York City, N. Y., favoring the passage of the so-called La Follette-Costigan bill, being the bill (S. 5125) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a memorial numerously signed of sundry citizens of Endicott and vicinity, in the State of New York, remonstrating against the passage of legislation to legalize the manufacture and sale of liquors with an alcoholic content stronger than one-half of 1 per cent, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McGILL presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 8 and memorial petitioning the Congress of the United States to enact laws and to take such other steps as may be necessary to rehabilitate agriculture to the end that business activity may be revived in the Nation

Whereas the deflation of agriculture, which has been going on for the past 12 years, has resulted in the breakdown of all other industries and commerce to the point where our social fabric is being disintegrated and the Government itself is in serious danger; and

Whereas it is now quite generally conceded by all thinking people that only by rehabilitating agriculture and restoring the purchasing power of agricultural products can business generally be restored: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas (the Senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be urged to enact into law as speedily as possible the national emergency act and/or similar legislation that will restore to the basic agricultural commodities a purchasing power comparable to that enjoyed during the pre-war period of 1909 to 1914, which will in turn start all other business and industry on the upgrade; be it further

Resolved, That the Congress be urged to create a Federal agency to refinance our farm-mortgage indebtedness at not to exceed 3 per cent interest on a long-term amortization plan, with a deferment of all payments on the principal for a period of two years or until such time when the price of farm commodities reach a price level comparable to the pre-war period of 1909 to 1914; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the several Members of the said bodies representing this State therein, and to the President of the United States, and to the various State legislatures now in session.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house and passed that body January 18, 1933.

J. W. BLOOD,
Speaker pro tempore of the House.
W. T. BISHOP,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed the senate February 2, 1933.

DALLAS W. KUART,
President pro tempore of the Senate.
RAY H. WELDEN,
Assistant Secretary of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is absent on official business of the Senate.

Mr. FESS. The junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] is also absent on official business of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to send to the desk and have read a very brief letter from Mr. D. D. Myers, of Birmingham, Ala., concerning air mail contracts. I ask then that the letter be referred to the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which has under consideration the resolution for a general investigation of the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., February 6, 1933.

Hon. HUGO L. BLACK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: As general traffic manager I operated the Cromwell Air Lines (Inc.) from Big Spring, Tex., to San Antonio, Tex., and from San Angelo, Tex., to Dallas, Tex., for about one year prior to the letting of the mail contract between Big Spring and San Antonio.

We operated 8-place Stinson planes for more than a half million miles on a daily schedule, carrying passengers and express, without a single accident.

We had fully complied with all requirements of the Post Office Department and the Watres Act, authorizing the southern transcontinental mail route.

If you will read the specifications to airline operators that had qualified to bid on the new mail contract, you can readily see why the American Airways (Inc.) were the only bidders.

* * * * * * *

The requirement of the Post Office Department, namely, 10-place, trimotored, radio-equipped planes, with sufficient space for mail, of which a very limited number had been built, were all owned by the successful bidders of the new contract, and the half-million dollar bond we would have to make to guarantee the establishment of the service within 30 days made it impossible for us or any other operator, except the American Airways (Inc.), to submit a bid.

Our contemplated bid would have been 65 cents against $1.09 that was accepted by the Post Office Department.

* * * * * * *

Until some competitive bidding is permitted on air mail contracts, the air mail deficit will continue to grow.

Sincerely yours,

D. D. MYERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

FARM MORTGAGES AND FARM RELIEF

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I present for insertion in the RECORD and appropriate reference, a resolution, received from the Plateau Valley National Farm Loan Association of Colorado, urging a decrease in the interest rate on farm mortgages, a temporary deferment of amortization payments on farm mortgages with a reduction of interest rates to the capacity to pay, the refinancing of amortization payments where the borrower has made a considerable reduction of principal, and the immediate passage of bills before Congress for the relief of agriculture.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions presented and adopted by the Plateau Valley National Farm Loan Association of Colorado in annual meeting assembled

Whereas the price of all farm products is now so low that obligations contracted under other conditions can not now be met; and

Whereas a wholesale foreclosure of farm mortgages would be an economic disaster unparalleled in history to creditors and debtors alike; and

Whereas relief measures now pending before Congress promise, at least, partial relief: Therefore be it

Resolved—

(1) That a lower rate of interest on farm mortgages is desirable and necessary;

(2) That the amortization payments on farm mortgages should be deferred temporarily and that the interest rate should be lowered to capacity to pay;

(3) That in case where a considerable portion of the principal has been paid by the amortization payments the borrower should be refinanced at the amount still owing; and

(4) That the immediate passage of the bills before Congress for the relief of agriculture is urged as necessary to prevent the collapse of the country's basic industry.

ISSUANCE OF NATIONAL CURRENCY TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I also ask to have placed in the RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions advocating the issuance of national currency to municipalities on the pledge of their bonds. These resolutions were received from the City Council of Canon City, Colo., and were transmitted by Robert S. Duncan, city clerk.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CANON CITY, COLO., November 7, 1932.

Resolution advocating the issue of national currency to municipalities on the pledge of their bonds

Whereas national currency is issued to banks because of their special privilege on the pledge largely of municipal interest-bearing bonds purchased by such banks; and

Whereas the overwhelming interest burden of American municipalities is thus suffered for the benefit of specially privileged banking interests; and

Whereas the same security would exist for such currency if municipalities were themselves to deposit their bonds and receive the money loaned thereon for their public improvements directly from the Government of the United States of America; and

Whereas the interest on the municipally owned bonds so pledged would revert to the borrowing municipality: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is a folly and a waste to burden the public works of the people with the unnecessary debt of interest for the benefit of the privileged manipulators of the people's currency; and be it further

Resolved, That the constitutional power of Congress to coin money should be exercised directly for the benefit of the people in their public works; that suitable legislation should be enacted establishing a standard of integrity and sound economy of municipal bond issues and giving to municipalities which meet such standard the same rights enjoyed by national banks to receive national currency on the pledge of their bonds; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America as a memorial to Congress from our city; and be it further

Resolved, That other American municipalities be, and they hereby are, invited to join in this appeal to Congress.

ROBERT S. DUNCAN, City Clerk.

AMENDMENT OF THE BANKRUPTCY LAW—CORPORATE REORGANIZATION

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have a letter from professors of corporation law of Harvard University, together with a memorandum, setting forth their opinions as to certain defects in the bankruptcy bill recently passed by the House of Representatives and now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that the letter and the accompanying memorandum may be treated in the nature of a petition and be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the letter and memorandum were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., February 7, 1933.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WALSH: Prof. Ralph J. Baker and myself, teachers of corporation law at Harvard Law School, have been very much interested in the reorganization bill which has recently passed the House and is now pending before the Senate. We are heartily in accord with the purpose which the bill designs to accomplish, but on going over the bill carefully we believe that we have found certain defects and ambiguities in it. We have prepared the inclosed memorandum on the subject which we thought might interest you.

While some of the matters referred to in the memorandum are doubtless of minor importance, the points which we have raised with regard to the application of the act to public utilities, its possible effect in furnishing an unduly easy method of preventing the avoidance of preferences, the doubt which it seems to raise as to the possibility of providing priority for new money in a reorganization plan, the difficulties which may arise with respect to the provisions for secured creditors, and the absence of any provision for the local trial of certain claims, such as those for personal injuries, seemed to us to be matters of major importance.

Very truly yours,

E. MERRICK DODD, Jr.

MEMORANDUM ON PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPTCY ACT RELATING TO CORPORATE REORGANIZATION

As we are not conversant with the form of the corporate reorganization bill now pending in the Senate, this memorandum is directed to the Sumners bill, which recently passed the House of Representatives. It is confined to section 75 of that bill, the section dealing with reorganization of corporations other than railroads.

The writers of this memorandum are in sympathy with the general objects sought to be attained by the reorganization bill, and this memorandum is in no sense one in opposition to that bill, but seeks to point out ways in which we believe that the bill might be clarified and improved.

1. Application of section 75 to public utilities: Section 75 in its present form appears to be applicable not only to industrial and commercial corporations but to all public utilities other than railroads. Subsection (a) authorizes "any corporation which could become a bankrupt under section 4 of this act" to file a petition stating that the corporation is insolvent or unable to meet its debts and that it desires to effect a plan of reorganization, or in an involuntary bankruptcy proceeding to file an answer to the same effect. Under section 4 of the bankruptcy act the corporations which could become bankrupt are defined in two different ways. Subsection (a) of section 4 provides: "Any person except a municipal, railroad, insurance, or banking corporation shall be entitled to the benefits of this act as a voluntary bankrupt." Subsection (b) provides: "Any monied business or commercial corporation except a municipal, railroad, insurance, or banking corporation owing debts to the amount of $1,000 or over may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt." In Holland v. Gas Co. (257 Fed. 679) it was held by the circuit court of appeals that a public utility may be a voluntary bankrupt.

Apparently, therefore, section 75 applies to public utilities such as gas and electric companies, telephone companies, motor-bus companies, and the like. The application of the section to such utilities raises a number of questions of very serious import.

In the first place the laws of many States give the State public service commission power over all security issues of utilities, including securities issued by reorganized corporations, and the laws of some States—New York, for example—give the commission somewhat broader powers over reorganizations. Under the present practice of reorganizing utilities through equity receiverships, the reorganization plan, after approval by the court, must, with respect to the new securities issued thereunder, be approved in many States by the State commission just as a railroad reorganization must in that respect be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is nothing in the language of section 75 which specifically alters this situation, but inasmuch as section 75 purports to be an exercise of the Federal bankruptcy power and as a Federal bankruptcy statute supersedes all inconsistent State laws, we believe that there is a real danger that section 75 would be construed as intended to cover the whole field and to make the confirmation of the reorganization plan by the court a final adjudication of the validity of the securities to be issued thereunder which would oust the State commission of all jurisdiction. This view is somewhat strengthened by the provision in subsection (a) that the Federal court "shall during the pendency of the proceedings under this section have exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor and its property wherever located for the purposes of this section," and also by the fact that in section 76 dealing with railroads the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to pass upon security issues and certain other matters are specifically set forth while no similar mention of State utility commissions is made in section 75.
